STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff brought this action against the defendant to compel it to convey to plaintiff its properties on which it had given the defendant an option. The lower court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's amended complaint, the plaintiff elected not to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff has appealed on the judgment roll. The plaintiff is a public service corporation serving electric energy to the inhabitants of St. Helena, and the defendant is the same kind of a corporation serving the inhabitants of Calistoga. December 31, 1914, each corporation executed to the other an option to sell to the other. The plaintiff first sought to exercise its option, and, as the defendant failed to comply, this action in specific performance was commenced. In its amended complaint the plaintiff does not allege that either the plaintiff or the defendant has "secured from the Railroad Commission of the state of California an order authorizing the defendant to sell to the plaintiff." The defendant claims such an allegation is a prerequisite to a cause of action in such a case. The plaintiff urges: (1) That if such is the law, then no contract to sell a public utility plant can be enforced; and (2) that the objection is premature. We shall consider these contentions together. Subdivision "a" of section 51 of the Public Utilities Act (St. 1911 [Ex. Sess.] p. 44) provides:

"No * * * electrical corporation * * * shall henceforth sell, lease, assign, mortgage or otherwise dispose of or incumber the whole or any part of its * * * line, plant or system, necessary or useful in the performance of its duties to the public, or any franchise or permit or any right thereunder, nor by any means whatsoever, direct or indirect, merge or consolidate its * * * line, plant or system, or franchises or permits or any part thereof, with any other public utility, without having first secured from the commission an order authorizing it so to do. Every such sale * * * made other than in accordance with the order [and approval] of the commission authorizing the same shall be void. * * *"

Section 76 of the same statute (page 61) provides:

"Any public utility which violates or fails to comply with any provisions * * * of this act, * * * is subject to a penalty of not less than five hundred dollars nor more than two thousand dollars for each and every offense."

[1-4] It needs no citation of authority to the effect that said statute was enacted primarily in behalf of the public rather than the owners of public utilities. It is a settled rule that a contract will not be enforced if the contract is in violation of the provisions of a statute enacted for the protection of the public. Levinson v. Boas, 150 Cal. 185, 193, 88 Pac. 825, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575, 11 Ann. Cas. 661. It will be noted that the language of the Public Utilities Act is not only prohibitory, but a penalty is provided for violations thereof. Such a statute must be construed as being prohibitory, and a contract made in contravention of the terms thereof is void and is unenforceable. Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 127, 57 Pac. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 343, 84 Pac. 737, 80 Pac. 639, 117 Am. St. Rep. 479, and extended notes. A court of equity will never assume jurisdiction to prepare a decree dependent for its efficacy on the approval or rejection of some other co-ordinate or inferior board or tribunal, but only when the court can enforce its decree. 3 Pom. Eq. Juris. § 1405; Senter v. Davis, 38 Cal. 450, 455. Furthermore, when, acting within the scope of its constitutional powers, the Legislature has sought by statute to provide that certain contracts may be made only after obtaining certain permits so to do, such permits become conditions precedent to the making of enforceable contracts. Gardner v. Tatum, 81 Cal. 370, 22 Pac. 880; Jacks v. Taylor, 24 Cal. App. 667, 674-675, 142 Pac. 121; State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 343, 84 Pac. 737, 80 Pac. 639, 117 Am. St. Rep. 506, 507. In the instances mentioned above the purported contract is illegal. When that fact is called to the attention of the court, the court will refuse the plaintiff any relief, and will leave the parties where it finds them. Such action is taken not to help the defendant, but not to help the plaintiff, not for the sake of either party, but for the sake of the law itself. Union v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 164, 165, 88 Pac. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609; O'Brien v. Shea, 208 Mass. 528, 95 N. E. 99, 22 Ann. Cas. 1030, 1033.

The judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision in the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District is denied.

[5] In denying the application we deem it proper to say that we do so upon the theory that in view of the matters stated in the opinion the equitable remedy of specific performance is not available to the plaintiff. In view of such a conclusion it is unnecessary to decide whether the attempted agreement was absolutely void, and we are not to be understood as expressing any opinion thereon.

CRIMINAL LAW ⊜977(3), 993—RESENTENCE—TIME.

Although the provisions of Pen. Code, § 1191, fixing the time for the passing of sentence after verdict of guilty in a criminal case, are mandatory, they do not apply to a judgment merely irregular in form, and, where a prisoner has been erroneously sentenced under the Indeterminate Sentence Law, for a crime committed prior to its passage, he may be resentenced under the previous law, although the time limited by the statute has elapsed.

Application by Louis Germino for a writ of habeas corpus. Denied.

Louis Germino, in pro. per.

HART, J. Petitioner was convicted of the crime of rape in the superior court of Fresno county, alleged to have been committed in said county on the 9th day of April, 1917, upon a certain female of the age of 12½ years. On the 15th day of February, 1918, he was sentenced by said court to a term of not less than five years. Thereupon, and in due time after the pronouncement of said sentence, the petitioner was delivered into the custody of the warden of the state prison at San Quentin, upon a commitment duly issued upon said judgment of sentence. On the 19th day of April, 1918, the superior court of said county, after declaring that the sentence so pronounced, being under the Indeterminate Sentence Law (Pen. Code, § 1168, as added by St. 1917, p. 665), was invalid, by reason of the fact that the crime for which the petitioner was so sentenced was committed prior to the time at which the law authorizing and requiring judgments of sentence in criminal cases to be indeterminate as to the term of sentence, went into effect, made an order in legal form for the return of the prisoner before said court, then and there to receive a sentence upon said conviction, "according to the law of the state existing at the time of the commission of said offense," etc. In pursuance of said order, the prisoner was brought before said court on the 1st day of May, 1918, and, after due legal formalities, was sentenced by the court to a term of five years in the Folsom state prison.

The petitioner, who is not represented by an attorney, but appears in his own behalf (for which reason we depart from our usual practice of filing no opinion giving our reasons for denying an application for an alternative writ or an order to show cause), contends that the court below lost jurisdiction to impose the second sentence, and that therefore said judgment of sentence is void. No argument or points and authorities accompanied the application for the writ, but we conjecture that the specific ground upon which the petitioner maintains that the court was without jurisdiction to resentence him is that the time within which, under section 1191 of the Penal Code, sentence is required to be pronounced after a plea or a verdict of guilty in a criminal case, had passed when said sentence was imposed. There is, in our judgment, no merit in the contention.

In People v. Booth, 174 Pac. 685, a situation similar to the one here arose, and therein we held that the court did not lose jurisdiction to pronounce a proper or valid judgment.

In the case of People v. Gonzales, 173 Pac. 407, the judgment of sentence fixed the maximum penalty for robbery, of which the defendant was convicted, at 15 years; the crime having been committed after the Indeterminate Sentence Law went into effect.

This court properly held that the judgment of sentence should have been in accord with the provisions of the Indeterminate Sentence Law, and that, not being so, it was informal, and for that reason the judgment was reversed and the cause remanded, with a direction to the trial court to pronounce a proper and valid judgment.

In People v. Mendosa (Sup.) 173 Pac. 998, the trial court, in sentencing the defendant, who was convicted of a crime committed after the Indeterminate Sentence Law went into effect, sentenced the accused to imprisonment "for a period of not less than one nor more than five years." The sentence so pronounced was obviously contrary to the provisions of section 1168 of the Penal Code, requiring indeterminate sentences to be pronounced in criminal cases, and the judgment was reversed for that reason only, the court holding:

"Where an erroneous judgment is pronounced for failure to comply with the provisions of the Indeterminate Sentence Law, it is not necessary to have a new trial, but the superior court directed to pronounce a proper judgment."

The significance of the above-mentioned cases in their application to the case before us is that, in each of them, the time fixed by section 1191 of the Penal Code for the passing of judgment of sentence after a plea or verdict of guilty had gone by when the defendants were resentenced. Of course, it cannot logically be contended that there is in principle any difference between the fact that an appellate court may order the trial court to resentence the defendant and the fact that the trial court, having discovered that it had pronounced an erroneous or informal judgment, upon its own motion again arraigns the defendant upon the verdict of conviction and thereupon sentences him in accordance with the law. In other words, the jurisdiction of the superior court again to pronounce judgment of sentence according to the requirements of the law can no more be lost by lapse of time in the one case than in the other.

It is true that the provisions of section 1191 of the Penal Code are mandatory; but we do not conceive that they were intended to be applied to a case where, as in the present case, a judgment of sentence is merely irregular in form. The sentence of imprisonment in the case above referred to and in this case is the real gist or substance of the judgment of sentence, and the error in fixing or attempting to fix therein a definite term of imprisonment, where the Indeterminate Sentence Law applies, is a mere irregularity. Indeed, that part of the judgment fixing a specific term of years of imprisonment in such a case is surplusage, and, in our opinion, ought to be disregarded as of no consequence in its effect upon the judgment. And where the Indeterminate Sentence Law does not apply, the omission to fix the term of imprisonment in the judgment of sentence is likewise a mere irregularity. In either case, there can be no just reason for holding that the irregularity is not subject to correction without offending section 1191, either in its letter or spirit. This really would not, in legal effect, result in the rendition of a new judgment, but only the amendment of a judgment already rendered.

The petition for the writ will have to be denied, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. EPPERSON. (Cr. 449.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 23, 1918.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION ⟸125(20) —SEPARATE OFFENSES—"FURNISH"—"SELL" —"GIVE."

Information based on Wyllie Local Option Law, § 13, and charging that defendant did "sell" and "furnish" alcoholic beverages, does not necessarily state two separate and distinct offenses, since, whether a person sells or gives to another intoxicants, he necessarily furnishes liquor, "furnish" being broader than the words "sell" and "give" as used in such statute.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Furnish; Give; Sell.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1186(4) — ERRONEOUS OVERRULE — HARMLESS ERROR — "MISCARRIAGE OF JUSTICE."

Overruling demurrer to information charging that defendant did "sell" and "furnish" alcoholic beverages, and not requiring district attorney to elect, held, in view of convincing proof of defendant's guilt, not a "miscarriage of justice" within Const. art. 6, § 4½, as to reversal for such errors only.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸772(2)—SEPARATE OFFENSES—INSTRUCTION.

Instruction that Wyllie Local Option Law makes it a crime to sell, give away, or furnish to another any alcoholic liquors in no-license territory, was not subject to objection that it stated that defendant was being tried on both charges in the information, since charge in information that defendant "did sell and furnish" involved but the statement of a single offense.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸798(½) — DUTY OF JURY—INSTRUCTIONS.

That part of defendant's requested instruction to effect that jury should consult with one another about the case, the evidence, etc., and in case of difference of opinion talk over the case carefully, etc., involved a mere commonplace, and its refusal was not error, especially where court charged to that effect.

5. Criminal Law ⊜829(19)—Instruction Already Given—Reasonable Doubt.

That part of defendant's requested instruction to effect that each juror should adhere to their own opinion until convinced beyond reasonable doubt was covered by instruction that jury would not be justified in finding verdict of guilty, unless they were convinced by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt.

6. Criminal Law ⊜829(18)—Refusl of Instruction—Reasonable Doubt.

Refusal of instruction that, if two conclusions can be drawn from testimony, one favoring defendant's innocence, and the other tending to establish his guilt, it is the duty of the jury to adopt the former, was not prejudicial, since it merely involved an amplification of the rule of reasonable doubt, sufficiently covered by given instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

N. E. Epperson was convicted of selling whisky in no-license territory, and he appeals. Affirmed.

James M. Lee, of Red Bluff, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. Defendant was convicted, in the superior court of Tehama county, upon an information which charged that he "did willfully and unlawfully sell and furnish to one C. H. Tolley, whisky, an alcoholic beverage containing one per cent. or more by volume of alcohol," in the city of Red Bluff, which was then and there "no-license territory." From a judgment imposed upon him of imprisonment in the county jail, defendant appeals.

The first point made by appellant is that the information charges two separate and distinct offenses, to wit, "selling whisky" and "furnishing whisky," which should have been separately stated. This point was raised upon demurrer to the information, by a motion that the district attorney should "set out his separate counts," by a motion that the district attorney should elect which of the two charges defendant would be tried upon, upon a motion for a new trial, and by a motion in arrest of judgment.

It is further claimed that the court erred to the serious detriment to the substantial rights of the accused in its action in giving and refusing to give certain instructions.

The facts need not be stated in detail, it being sufficient to say that the defendant was seen and caught by the officers in the act of selling or furnishing one Tolley with a bottle of whisky, in the city of Red Bluff, which, as the information states, is situated in "no-license" territory, on the 8th day of December, 1917. The evidence against the defendant was apparently so convincingly indicative of his guilt that the verdict, so far as the evidence is concerned, appears to be the only one that could justly have been returned.

In support of the point that the information charges two separate and distinct offenses, without separately stating them, and that the order overruling the demurrer on that ground and the denial of his motion for an order requiring the district attorney to make an election of the particular offense of the two charged upon which he intended to rely for a conviction were erroneous and prejudicial, the defendant cites the case of the People v. Plath, 166 Cal. 227, 135 Pac. 954. In that case, the defendant was charged by an indictment with violating all the provisions contained in six different subdivisions of section 337a of the Penal Code. The ultimate design of said section was to penalize and thus put a stop to pool selling on horse races and other sports usually played for money or on wagers; but each of the subdivisions thereof, which are connected by the disjunctive "or," describes an act or acts different from that or those described in the others as constituting a crime, although all have ultimate relation to pool selling. In other words, as was held in Ex parte Roberts, 157 Cal. 472, 108 Pac. 315, said section contains a description of as many different offenses as there are subdivisions thereof, and the several offenses so described "are apparently as distinct and independent of each other as if they had been enacted in separate sections." Hence, it was held in the Plath Case that the order of the trial court sustaining the demurrer to the indictment upon the ground that more than one offense was improperly charged therein was sound, and could therefore not be disturbed.

[1] The information in this case is based on section 13 of the statute of 1911, commonly known as the "Wyllie Local Option Law" (Stats. 1911, p. 602). The language of said section, so far as it is pertinent to the present inquiry, is:

"It shall be unlawful for any person * * * to sell, furnish, distribute or give away any alcoholic liquors except as provided in section 16 hereof."

The foregoing section of the Local Option Law is, it will be observed, wholly dissimilar to section 337a of the Penal Code. It does not, like the Code section, contain an enumeration, in different subdivisions, of a number of entirely different and dissimilar acts, each of which of itself constitutes an offense lacking the essential elements of any one of the other acts enumerated and penalized as public offenses. The charge in the information under review that the defendant did sell and furnish alcoholic liquor to said Tolley does not necessarily involve the statement of two separate and distinct offenses.

To furnish a person with any article is to supply or provide him with such article (Webster's Dictionary), and, therefore, whether a person sells or gives to another alcoholic liquor, he at the same time necessarily furnishes such person with such liquor. The object of the so-called Wyllie law is to put a stop to the trafficking in alcoholic liquors in any manner or form or degree in those subdivisions of the state that have regularly adopted its provisions, and to that end section 13 of said act specifically enumerates the various ways in which a transfer of such liquors may not be made by one to another. The word "furnish" is broader than the words "sell" and "give," as they are used in the statute, and if said word has been the only one used in the statute as it now otherwise reads—that is, if the words "sell" and "give" were not therein used and in their place the word "furnish" was alone employed—it would not for a moment be doubted that a person who had sold or given any alcoholic liquor to another could be convicted of a violation of the statute by thus furnishing to the other person such liquor, if he were charged in the indictment or information with furnishing such liquor to another.

The above construction of the information here harmonizes with that given the accusatory pleading in People v. Harrold, 84 Cal. 567, 24 Pac. 106, where an indictment for forgery charged that the defendant did "make, alter, forge and counterfeit a certain bill of sale," etc.; in People v. Gosset, 93 Cal. 642, 29 Pac. 246, where it was charged that the defendant "did deal, play, carry on and conduct" a certain prohibited game; and in People v. Faust, 113 Cal. 172, 45 Pac. 261, where the charge was that the defendant "did willfully and unlawfully sell and furnish intoxicating liquor, to wit, whisky, to two Indians."

[2] But assuming, merely for the sake of argument, that in a legal sense it was wrong to charge that the accused sold and furnished the alcoholic liquor to Tolley, still it cannot be held that the defendant was prejudiced thereby. The primary and important rule in criminal pleading is to charge a public offense in such clear language as to enable the accused readily to understand and know, upon his arraignment thereunder, the charge to which he must answer and against which he must prepare to defend. In this case, the defendant could not have experienced the slightest difficulty in understanding, upon reading the information, or having it read to him, that thereby he was charged with furnishing in some manner or under certain circumstances alcoholic liquor to another in no-license territory, and, whether he sold or otherwise furnished it to the other party, he could just as readily prepare to defend against the charge in the one case as in the other. We therefore think that, even if justly it may be held that it was error not to sustain the demurrer to the information on the ground that it is obnoxious to the objection that it charges two distinct offenses without separately stating them, and that the court further erred in not requiring the district attorney to elect and declare upon which of the two offenses he intended to rely for a conviction, it cannot be said, in view of the convincing proof of the defendant's guilt, that a miscarriage of justice resulted from said errors. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

[3] In instructing the jury, the court declared that the "Wyllie Local Option Law" makes it a crime for any one to sell, give away, or furnish to another, any alcoholic liquors in what is termed no-license territory. It is here argued that said instruction is erroneous and was prejudicial to the accused inasmuch, so it is declared, as the court thus told the jury that "the defendant was being tried on both charges in the information." There was no error in giving the instruction. The instruction merely repeats the language of the law declaring it to be unlawful for any one to dispense in the manner described therein alcoholic liquors in no-license territory. The statute as read was the basis of the charge upon which the defendant was being tried, and it was obviously the duty of the court to enlighten the jury upon the question. As to the effect of the instruction with respect to the specific averments of the information—that is, whether from it the jury could have concluded, and perhaps did conclude, that the defendant could properly be convicted if he was shown to have furnished Tolley with intoxicating liquor either by selling or giving it to him—the reply is that, as above declared, the charge that he "did sell and furnish," etc., involved the statement of but a single offense under the statute.

[4, 5] It is next contended that the disallowance of defendant's requested instruction No. 34 involved error and was prejudicial, since, so it is said, the propositions therein stated were correct and pertinent and were not covered by the court's charge. The instruction, if given, would have told the jury that, upon retiring, after the submission of the case to them, it would be their duty to consult with one another about the case, the evidence, etc., and that, if there arose any difference of opinion between them as to what the verdict should be, it would "be their duty to talk over the case carefully," etc.; that "if, after such consultation and discussion, * * * any one or a number of the jurors should be of the opinion that the defendant has not been proved guilty by the evidence in the case to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt, those sustaining that opinion should vote in favor of a verdict of not guilty, and should adhere to their own opinion until convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that they are wrong."

The first part of said instruction involved a mere commonplace, in that it would have told the jury to do that which they should know without being told, viz. to consider the evidence carefully and consult with each other if a difference of opinion arose between them as to the effect or probative value of the evidence. Moreover, the court in its charge (instruction No. 16) instructed the jury that it was their duty to consider the evidence with care and consult with each other upon all questions thereupon arising. As to the second part of the instruction, the proposition therein stated was covered by the instruction that the jury would not be legally justified in finding a verdict of guilty unless they were convinced by the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty. This instruction was sufficient to inform any person of sufficient intelligence to serve as a trial juror that it was his duty to adhere to his conviction if he had a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, notwithstanding that the other jurors might be of the opinion that the defendant's guilt had been established by the requisite degree of proof.

Instruction No. 33, requested by defendant, stated the rule as declared in section 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to wit:

"A witness may * * * be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony," etc.

The court refused said instruction on the ground that the proposition announced thereby was "substantially given elsewhere." The court read to the jury an instruction based on section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and we think that that instruction sufficiently covered the principle declared in the rejected instruction, although we are of the opinion that the latter instruction ought to have been allowed.

[6] The court refused the following instruction, proposed by the defendant:

"You are instructed that, if the testimony in this case in its weight and effect be such as that two conclusions can equally be drawn from it, the one favoring the defendant's innocence, and the other tending to establish his guilt, it is the duty of the jury to adopt the former and find the defendant not guilty."

The refusal to allow said instruction was not prejudicial. It merely involves an amplification of the rule of reasonable doubt, which the court in its charge declared and explained to the jury in language which could not be misunderstood.

No other questions are presented here for consideration.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

CITY OF ALBANY v. UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO.

(Civ. 2436.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Oct. 17, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 16, 1918.)

1. BONDS ⟸61—TERMINATION OF LIABILITY—DEATH OF PRINCIPAL.

Where the grantee of a franchise for a street railroad began work within the time fixed, so that he became absolutely entitled to the franchise, and it could not be divested by the municipality save for failure to complete the railroad within three years, held that, though the grantee died before the expiration of the three-year period, without building the railroad, the municipality had a right of action on the bond given by the grantee to secure completion.

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⟸91—DEATH OF PRINCIPAL.

Where a franchise for a street railroad was granted to one, his heirs, successors, and assigns, the franchise cannot be deemed personal to the grantee and to have expired on his death so as to free from liability the surety on the bond given by the grantee to secure completion of the road.

3. STREET RAILROADS ⟸24(2)—FRANCHISE—RAILROAD CARRYING FREIGHT.

A municipal corporation, unless forbidden by the state statutes, may grant a franchise for a street railroad intended to carry freight as well as passengers.

4. STREET RAILROADS ⟸24(2)—FRANCHISE—CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

As Civil Code, pt. 4, tit. 3, pp. 454–494, relating to railroads, in section 465 thereof, which enumerate the powers of a railroad corporation, specifies the power to carry persons and property and receive tolls, and Title 4, relating to street railroads, provides in section 497 that municipalities shall have power to grant franchises therefor, while section 510 declares that they shall be governed by the provisions of Title 3, held, that a municipality might grant a franchise to a street railroad to carry property as well as persons.

5. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸119(2)—STREETS—ADDITIONAL SERVITUDES.

A railroad in a street which carries freight as well as passengers imposes no additional servitude.

6. STREET RAILROADS ⟸22(3)—FRANCHISES—RIGHT TO QUESTION.

Whether a railway might under a franchise to use city streets carry freight, express, and mail in connection with passenger service can only be raised by a resident or property owner of the city.

A provision in a franchise for a street railroad that the poles and wires should be placed at a height so that they would not obstruct the ordinary use of the streets held not to render the franchise invalid, on the theory that it would create a condition where one class of bidder would be favored over another.

8. Street Railroads ⊂=24(3)—Franchise—Validity of Condition.

A provision in a franchise for street railroad requiring the grantee to maintain lights of a certain candle power, etc., held not to render the franchise invalid.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Trabucco, Judge.

Action by the City of Albany against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. From a judgment for defendant, after an order denying new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Ostrander, Clark & Carey, of Oakland (W. H. Morrissey, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. In this case judgment was rendered for the defendant; plaintiff moved for a new trial; the motion was denied; and plaintiff appeals from the judgment. The facts of the case, in brief, are as follows:

The city of Albany, proceeding under the provisions of the Broughton Act (Stats. of 1905, p. 777), duly granted to E. A. Gowe, his heirs, successors, and assigns, a franchise for the construction and maintenance of a street railway over a right of way approximately one-half mile in length, all within the boundaries of that city. Gowe, as required, thereafter furnished a bond in the sum of $5,000, executed by the respondent herein, a corporation for such purposes and receiving premiums therefor. This bond recited the grant of said franchise to the parties aforesaid, its terms and conditions, and guaranteed the faithful performance of each and every condition upon the part of said Gowe.

Gowe commenced work within the time limited, and actually completed about 100 feet. He died. Thereafter no further work was performed, and the railway was never completed. At the expiration of the three-year period within which the work was to have been accomplished—no further time having been granted therefor—the city of Albany, appellant herein, brought this action against respondent to recover upon its bond.

Respondent contends that the giving of the bond was without consideration, not that it did not receive its premium therefor, but that the franchise itself was void for want of capacity in the city to grant a franchise which provided:

(1) That the railway might carry freight, mail, and express as well as passengers.

(2) What the fare should be from the city limits of Richmond to the city of Albany if the owner of the franchise granted should ever operate a road to the former place as a connection or extension of the Albany road.

(3) For the furnishing of electric lights of 2,000 candle power for each block of the streets covered by the franchise whenever required by the board of trustees of the city of Albany.

(4) For the placing of poles used in connection with the railway inside of curb lines and of wires at sufficient heights to avoid obstruction of ordinary use of such streets.

(5) For restricting competition and favoring one bidder over another.

Respondent also contends that the condition of the bond was not broken because Gowe died before he was required to begin work under the terms of the franchise.

The latter contention may be discussed and disposed of first. Gowe evidently took the franchise in good faith, went to work expeditiously, accomplished the laying of about 100 feet of the road, and died well within the period of time when, by the terms of the franchise, work upon the road was to have been commenced.

[1] At the instant of the grant of the franchise the franchise became an irrevocable contract and the property of E. A. Gowe, of which he could not be divested by the city of Albany for a period of four months, during which time he was to commence work. By his own activity in commencing operations he made a forfeiture at the expiration of four months an impossibility and secured to himself, his heirs, successors, and assigns, the absolute right to a time limit of three years from the date of the grant to complete the work—a right which the city of Albany could not gainsay, and which effectually prevented any action on its part toward obtaining railroad accommodations for its citizens along these thoroughfares.

At Gowe's death, his rights vested in his heirs and his estate. The work could have been completed by them, or by his legal representatives, or by his bondsmen. They elected not to do so. They are bound by that election. The franchise is lost to them, but the liability on the bond remains for the benefit of the city of Albany as a compensation for the damage it has suffered.

[2] It cannot be considered that this contract was one personal to Gowe, or that it required his personal skill, and none other to complete it. It was made expressly running to himself, his heirs, successors, and assigns. At the time of the trial respondent could not have seriously considered that the intention was to secure the individual services and particular skill of Gowe; otherwise it is to be presumed that evidence would have been introduced to show the need of a particular skill for that piece of work over, above, and beyond that required in the very ordinary construction of railways. No such showing having been made, we cannot conceive that the court should take it upon itself to supply that deficiency.

[3] Considerable space has been devoted by counsel for both appellant and respondent in an attempt to make an exact and uncompromising definition of a street railway or street railroad and a railroad, and to draw a dividing line so sharply that further construction of the term will never again be necessary. Counsel have cited cases—each to sustain his own view. The courts have not been able to adopt a fixed rule of construction, and each case has therefore been decided upon its own particular set of facts and circumstances. We must do so in this case.

Counsel have cited the case of Railroad Commissioners v. Market St. Railway Co., 132 Cal. 677, 64 Pac. 1065, wherein the carrier was determined to be a street railway and outside the province of the Railroad Commissioners, and, as a matter of fact, under its charter carrying only passengers. Who will have the temerity to say that, when it carried the United States mail, it ceased to be a street railway and became a railroad? Assuredly not this court.

In that case the question as to whether or not it could have been licensed to carry freight was not in issue. The fact was stated that it carried passengers only, and we may presume it was limited by the terms of its franchise to that alone. But in no sense can it be deemed to be a case in point except that one part of its reasoning is significant, "that the entire people of the state were interested in the great corporations engaged in the carrying of freight and passengers from one portion of the state to another, or from sister states into or through the state," but that the entire people of the state were not "interested in the rates for carrying passengers within the corporate limits of a town or municipality." And the court said: "It was the policy of the Constitution that such matters as concerned the inhabitants of a particular subdivision of the state or county should be governed, as far as practicable, by local laws"—not inconsistent with the state laws, of course. This same reasoning would lead us to the conclusion that, if the city of Albany wished to have a railway within its confines which should carry passengers, freight, express, and mail, so long as it did not contravene any statute of the state, it might with propriety do so.

[4, 5] It remains, therefore, only to be seen whether there is anything in our statutes which expressly prohibits such a railway service.

We find that title 3, pt. 4, div. 1, of the Civil Code, is directed to the subject of railroads, and that section 465 thereof, in enumerating the powers of a railroad corporation, says:

"8. To carry persons and property on their railroad, and to receive tolls or compensation therefor."

Title 4, Id., is devoted to street railroad corporations, and recognizes the rights of municipalities in which they are located to special recognition when their streets and highways are to be used, and provides that they must grant the franchise therefor, and, in section 497, says that they "shall have power to impose such terms, restrictions and limitations as to the use of streets and the construction and mode of operating such electric and other roads as may, by such board or body, be deemed for the public safety or welfare," and provides further, in section 510, that "street railroads are governed by the provisions of title 3 of this part, so far as they are applicable, unless such railroads are therein specially excepted."

There is nowhere to be found in said title 3 any exception of street railroads in the matter of carrying freight in the general power given in subdivision 8 of section 465, Civil Code. And that the provisions for the carrying of freight by railroads in general are easily applicable to the conditions of street railways is seen very clearly to-day in the numerous instances where such freight is actually being carried in conjunction with passengers on such street railways.

The Legislature which enacted the Broughton Act is presumed to have had in mind the trend of the decisions of the courts as to the scope of the service to be rendered by street railways to municipalities and to have contemplated their continuance and extension.

As early as 1894 the Supreme Court of this state, in refusing to grant damages to an abutting owner on the theory of additional servitude being placed upon the street by the operation of a railroad under a grant by the council, quoted with approval the following language:

"It has the power to authorize their appropriation to all such uses as are conducive to the public good, and do not interfere with their complete and unrestricted use as highways."

The court further said:

"We are at a loss * * * to see why the transportation of freight by modern and improved methods is not equally entitled to encouragement with the transportation of passengers. The essential wants of the citizen demand the former equally with the latter. * * * Yet we are told in effect that, so far as modern methods are concerned, so far as ease, speed, and economy are involved, improvements are to be limited to the transportation of passengers; that cars with wheels adjusted to move upon fixed tracks, when applied to the transportation of passengers, are within the contemplated objects in view in opening the road or street, and therefore add nothing material to the burden of the servitude of the abutting landowner, while a precisely similar structure adapted to the transportation of freight adds an additional burden of a different character to the servitude, and cannot be tolerated without compensation to the abutting owner. * * * We fail to appreciate the philosophy of the distinction. On the contrary, we affirm that when a public street in a city is dedicated to the general use of the public, it involves its use subject to municipal control and limitations for all the uses and purposes of the public as a street, including such methods for the transportation of passengers and freight as modern science and improvements may have rendered necessary, and that the application of these methods, and indeed of those yet to be discovered, must have been contemplated when the street was opened and the right of way obtained. * * * The thirteenth subdivision of section 862 of the municipal government act of this state authorizes the boards of trustees of municipalities of the sixth class [of which the City of Albany is one] 'to permit, under such restrictions as they may deem proper, the laying of railroad tracks and the running of cars drawn by horses, steam, or other power thereon * * * in the public streets.' The world moves. Legislation in recent times has kept pace with the progress of the age."

And this case further declared that the trend of judicial opinion is that the streets should be subject to all the varied wants of the public. Montgomery v. Santa Ana & Westminster Railway Co., 104 Cal. 186, 37 Pac. 786, 25 L. R. A. 654, 43 Am. St. Rep. 89.

Lewis on Eminent Domain (3d Ed.) p. 286, cites with approval the text of the opinion in Kinsey v. Union Traction Co., 169 Ind. 563, 81 N. E. 922, and refers to the Montgomery Case, above quoted.

In the Indiana case the court said (169 Ind. at page 612, 81 N. E. at page 940):

"Undoubtedly the chief business of a street car is the carrying of passengers, but there appears in the law of the highway no objection to its carrying light and package freight. It has, perhaps, always been the custom in Indianapolis to carry, for its passengers, hand baggage, filled and unfilled market baskets, tool boxes, baby carriages, clothes baskets, and all manner of small articles and packages that may be conveniently handled from the platform; also to carry, without an accompanying passenger, the United States mail from the central office to the various substations of the city; likewise a large number of packages of newspapers from downtown offices, and depots receiving consignments from St. Louis, Cincinnati, and Chicago, to the hundreds of distributing points throughout the city. Repair and construction materials, and perhaps some private freight, are hauled through the city in the local company's cars, and no complaint is heard, nor inconvenience manifested. Besides, what general principle can be advanced in condemnation of the inclosed, reasonably sized, neatly constructed freight or express car? Was not the transportation of property over the roads and streets as deeply seated in the dedicatory purpose as the passage of persons? Plainly the reasons that justify the one support the other. The heavy drays and wagons employed in handling the commerce of the city are a greater obstruction to the street, and menace to the safety of those using it, than the number of pedestrians. Therefore a suitable car, comparatively noiseless, confined to a fixed track four or five feet wide, in the center of the street, to which track vehicles may be safely adjusted by keeping to the right, and which car will carry twentyfold more freight or express than a wagon occupying the same amount of space in the street, and meandering in an irregular track, cannot, for any sufficient reason, be declared a nuisance, or an improper use of the street. No use should be held improper that produces no extra hazard, and makes the way easier, safer, and more convenient as a passageway for the public in common."

If the reasoning in these cases be correct, and there is no servitude on the street superimposed because of such use of the street, the only possible objection to such use could be overcome by the police regulations which remained unalienated by the franchise.

[6] As we view the case, the question whether the railway might or might not carry freight, express, and mail, in conjunction with its passenger service, could only be raised by a citizen or resident or property owner of the city of Albany; and as to whether or not, after this lapse of time, lack of objection, and opposition to the grant of the franchise, such an objector could have been heard, is not pertinent for us to decide at this time, as no such objector is before this court.

If it were possible for the state to maintain an action through the Attorney General, would it not be limited to an action to subjugate the road to the jurisdiction of the state and its Railroad Commissioners? It surely could not be for the abrogation of the franchise granted by the city of Albany, from which city, even in the event of an adverse decision by the court in such a supposititious case, Gowe or his successors would have to obtain the franchise for the use of its streets. For, the grant having already been made, it could not be repudiated by the city, and Gowe's property confiscated. In what other material way than the fixing of rates for the service, other than the passenger service, would a railway wholly within the confines of a city be affected if it were under the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission?

The contract for the service to be rendered by the road is a severable one, because it is certainly possible to operate for passenger service alone. Inasmuch as we are of the opinion that the grant of the franchise for the carrying of passengers, as well as commodities, was within the power of the city, it is not necessary to consider the questions of the severability of the contract, except to remark that the franchise by its wording has made clear that parts of it are to be considered separately and as a condition subsequent, to wit, the rate of fare in the event of a remote contingency of the same ownership of an extended line; the furnishing of certain electric light whenever, if ever, required by the city; the height of poles and the stringing of wires, if wires and poles are used in connection with the service.

[7, 8] We do not follow counsel's reasoning that the regulation of the height and the placing of poles and wires, or the fixing of fares, if attempted to be enforced, would create a condition where one class of bidder would be favored over another. The requirement of a certain candle power to be furnished is a proper and usual requirement, and is intended to be and is only a fixing of the maximum amount of light which a contractor will be required to furnish. That candle power and that lighting could be furnished by any person whether he intended to run a horse car or one propelled by liquified air, or by any motive power hereafter to be invented. It is immaterial to the city as to how it is produced, but it does not leave the city in a position to arbitrarily demand either an amount of light or a kind of current which would place an untoward burden upon the bidder.

Those minor provisions were evidently deemed to be for the safety and welfare of the public, and, as such, were within the power of the city to exact.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

ELLS v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (Civ. 2762.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 21, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸278(2)—DUE PROCESS—IRRIGATION DISTRICT—NOTICE.

Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, Act 1726, § 2, providing for organization of irrigation districts, through its requirement of publication of petition, provides sufficient legal notice to persons legally interested to comply with Const. art. 1, § 13, and Const. U. S. Amend. 14, relating to due process.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸318 — DUE PROCESS—NOTICE—FINDING OF ADMINISTRATIVE BODY.

The Legislature cannot destroy the effect of the essential due process requirements of notice to persons legally interested in the formation of an irrigation district, as provided by Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, Act 1726, § 2, by the provision of section 4 that the finding of a subordinate legislative body, the board of supervisors, that due process has been given, shall be final and conclusive.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸318 — DUE PROCESS—ADMINISTRATIVE ACTS.

A legislative provision that defects in minute details prescribed for notice in formation of irrigation districts, which are not essential to due process of law, shall not be fatal to proceedings for organizing such districts, is valid.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸216—ORGANIZATION OF IRRIGATION DISTRICTS — NOTICE—STATUTE—VALIDITY.

The Legislature was not bound to require that the names of all persons who signed a petition proposing the organization of an irrigation district should appear in the published notice stating the time of meeting of board for presentation of the petition, and could provide that omission of names therein should not vitiate the proceedings.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸225—IRRIGATION DISTRICTS — PROCEEDINGS — CONSTRUCTION.

Proceedings for the organization of an irrigation district, which do not involve any assessment against property, are not subject to the rule of strict construction.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸225 — IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—ESTABLISHMENT—NOTICE—PUBLICATION OF PETITION.

Where a petition to establish an irrigation district, together with signatures, was published in full, except that it omitted the text of additional sheets attached thereto, which was the same, except for omission of land description, the publication was sufficient, under Deering's Gen. Laws 1915, Act 1726, § 2.

Petition for writ of certiorari by Agnes G. Ells against the Board of Supervisors of San Diego County. To review proceedings and orders establishing the Cardiff Irrigation District. Orders affirmed.

O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller and Roy V. Reppy, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

W. F. Schuermeyer, Dist. Atty., and C. G. Selleck, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondents.

Crouch & Chambers and Lane D. Webber, all of San Diego, amici curiæ.

CONREY, P. J. On the 15th day of November, 1915, there was presented to the board of supervisors of San Diego county a petition for the formation of an irrigation district under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts," etc., approved March 31, 1897, and the amendments thereto (Act No. 1726 of the 1915 Edition of Deering's General Laws of California), such district to be known as and called "Cardiff Irrigation District." Thereafter, in attempted compliance with the statute, such proceedings were had that on the 20th day of March, 1916, the board of supervisors, by order entered upon its minutes, declared that the territory described therein was thereby duly organized as an irrigation district under the name above stated. In this proceeding, wherein a writ of review has been issued and upon which return has been duly made, the petitioner seeks to have judgment that said order of March 20, 1916, and the orders made in said matter by said board of supervisors prior thereto, be annulled.

The statute provides that a petition proposing the organization of an irrigation district must be signed by a majority in number of the holders of title or evidence of title to lands susceptible of irrigation from a common source and by the same system of works and representing a majority in assessed value of said lands. Section 2 of the act contains the following provisions:

"The petition may consist of any number of separate instruments. * * * Said petition shall be presented at a regular meeting of said board and shall be published for at least two weeks before the time at which the same is to be presented in some newspaper of general circulation printed and published in the county where said petition is presented, together with a notice stating the time of the meeting at which the same will be presented. * * * When contained upon more than one instrument, one copy only of such petition need be published, but the names attached to all of said instruments must appear in such publication. * * * When said petition is presented, said board of supervisors shall hear the same and shall proceed to determine whether or not said petition complies with the requirements hereinbefore set forth and whether or not the notice required herein has been published as required. * * * No defect in the contents of the petition or in the title to or form of the notice or signatures, or lack of signatures thereto, shall vitiate any proceedings thereon; provided, such petition or petitions have a sufficient number of qualified signatures attached thereto. The determination of the board shall be expressed by resolution."

Section 3 provides that:

"Upon the final hearing of said petition or said matter, the board of supervisors shall make an order re-affirming its conclusions as to the genuineness and sufficiency of the petition and notice hereinbefore provided for. * * * Said order shall be entered in full upon the minutes of said board."

Section 4 reads as follows:

"A finding of the board of supervisors in favor of the genuineness and sufficiency of the petition and notice shall be final and conclusive against all persons except the state of California upon suit commenced by the Attorney General. * * *"

The first nine pages of the petition as presented to the board of supervisors contain the full text of the petition, followed by 228 names. Following these nine pages are 86 separate sheets of paper, on which are signed the aggregate number of 94 names. On each of said 86 sheets there is typewritten a duplicate of the first nine pages (which we will call section 1), excepting the said 228 signatures thereto, and with one other difference next hereinafter noted. Section 6 of the petition in section 1 states that:

"The lands intended to be included within the boundaries of the said proposed irrigation district are situated in the county of San Diego, state of California, and described as follows, to wit."

The description is then given. Section 6 of the petition, as printed on all of the other sheets, reads as follows:

"The lands intended to be included within the boundaries of the said proposed irrigation district are situated in the county of San Diego, state of California."

Section 1 and all of the other sheets, as presented to the board, were attached together as one document.

Petitioner claims that the board of supervisors was without jurisdiction to make the orders attacked in this proceeding, by reason of two alleged irregularities in the publication of the notice required to be given before the presentation of the petition to the board of supervisors. These irregularities are said to consist, first, in failure to set out in the publication the text of the form of petition as shown on the 86 sheets with individual signatures; and, second, the omission from the publication of the names of 7 signers of the petition. The notice as published contained a complete copy of the petition as shown in section 1, without showing that the petition had been signed in separate sections, or that any of them were in any respect different from the text of the petition as contained in section 1. The notice of the petition as published contained all of the 228 names signed to section 1, together with 87 of the 94 names signed to the other sections. The petition was presented to the board of supervisors on the 15th day of November, 1915, and the hearing thereon was continued to November 19, 1915. On that day the board of supervisors in due form adopted the resolution, which, among other things, declared that the petition contained a majority in number of the names of holders of title in the proposed district, as shown by the equalized assessment rolls, and a majority in value of lands assessed against the signers of the petition, and that the petition and notice of hearing had been published for two weeks prior to the date of hearing thereon, in a newspaper of general circulation published in the city of San Diego, as required by said act. In due time, an election having been held and the result thereof having been ascertained in the form required by law, the board made its order of March 20, 1916, purporting to declare the described territory duly organized as an irrigation district. In its order made at the final hearing on the petition, when the election was called, the board of supervisors reaffirmed its conclusions as to the genuineness and sufficiency of the petition and notice.

[1] In order to satisfy the requirement that jurisdiction, over a proceeding leading to the organization of a public corporation such as an irrigation district, must be obtained by due process of law, it is necessary that the statute provide for some kind of reasonable notice to persons legally interested in the subject-matter of the proceeding. In providing for such notice, the Legislature must require all that is essential to constitute "due process of law" as that phrase is used in the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and in section 13 of article 1 of the Constitution of this state.

[2, 3] It is not within the power of the Legislature to destroy the effect of such essential requirements by providing that a finding by a subordinate legislative body that due notice has been given shall be final and conclusive. But in providing for notice of proceedings like those here under consideration, the Legislature may go beyond those things which are absolutely necessary and may prescribe in detail, according to its will, the form and manner in which the notice shall be given. As to such minutiæ, as the Legislature might omit them altogether without affecting the validity of the proceeding, so also it may provide that defects or failures to comply shall not be fatal, and may give finality to findings which determine that those conditions of the statute have been fulfilled. The principle on which we here rely was fully stated and discussed in Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 Pac. 81, wherein the court said that:

"A curative statute or clause may preclude all investigation except the single inquiry whether, in the case presented, the effect of applying the statute is to deprive the party of his property without due process of law."

[4] Applying to the present case the rule thus ascertained, there is no difficulty in finding that the Legislature was not bound to require that the names of all persons who sign a petition for the purpose of proposing the organization of an irrigation district shall appear in the published notice stating the time of the meeting at which the petition will be presented to the board of supervisors, and that if the Legislature did make such requirement, it might also provide that errors in names, or omissions of names, in the notice, shall not vitiate the proceedings. Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Board of Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 22, 120 Pac. 780.

[5, 6] It may also be noted that the proceedings challenged here have relation only to the organization of the district, and do not involve any assessment against property, and that such proceedings are not subject to the rule of strict construction. Central Irr. Dist. v. De Lappe, 79 Cal. 351, 21 Pac. 825. Under a reasonably liberal construction of the terms of the statute, which provide that the petition shall be published with the notice, we consider that the petition presented in the proceeding now under review was published as completely as the law requires. Everything contained in the petition as set forth in the sheets additional to section 1 was contained in section 1, which was published. There was, therefore, no failure to give public notice of every statement contained in the text of the petition.

Counsel for plaintiff suggests, finally, that the publication did not disclose the fact that 94 persons signed papers which gave no description of the district. This is really a claim that those persons did not sign a valid petition. There is, however, no evidence that the 86 sheets, or any of them, were circulated and signed separately from the first pages (section 1), to which they were found attached, all forming apparently one document, in the petition as filed. At all events, a valid petition was presented, of which we hold that due notice was given.

The said order of March 20, 1916, and the orders prior thereto, made by the board of supervisors of San Diego county, are affirmed.

We concur: JAMES, J.; SHAW, J.

McCLURE et al. v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY OF VISALIA.

(Civ. 1882.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 24, 1918.)

1. Schools and School Districts ⟸72—Use of School House—Statutes—Dancing — "Recreation"—"Activity"—"Recreational Activities."

"Recreational activities," within the meaning of Civic Center Act, establishing a civic center in every public school house, includes dancing; "recreation" meaning refreshment of strength or spirits after toil, and "activity" meaning a physical or gymnastic exercise, an agile performance.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Recreation.]

2. Schools and School Districts ⟸72 — Use of School House—Dancing.

Civic Center Act, establishing a civic center in every public school house, and vesting the management of such center in a board of trustees or board of education, authorizes a board of education in its discretion to permit under proper supervision dancing in the schoolhouse as a form of recreational activity.

3. Schools and School Districts ⟸72 — Use of Schools—Power of Board of Education.

Pol. Code, § 1617, subd. 18, providing that, in case grant of use of school building will necessitate removal of furniture, board of trustees may be instructed by qualified electors, has reference only to county schools, and board of education in city is not bound by the limitation.

4. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⟸72 — POWERS OF BOARDS OF EDUCATION—CONTROL BY ELECTORS.

St. 1899, p. 99, § 798, investing boards of education with the management of school buildings, in case of a city of the fifth class, is not limited by Pol. Code, § 1617, subd. 18, authorizing school meetings to instruct school trustees.

5. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS ⟸72 — USE OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS — PRIVATE USES.

A board of education has no authority to grant the use of a school building to any citizen as an exclusive privilege.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Suit by B. F. McClure and others against the Board of Education of the City of Visalia for an injunction. Judgment for defendant on demurrer and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

E. I. Feemster, of Visalia, for appellants.

Power & McFadzean, Frank Lamberson, and P. D. Nowell, all of Visalia, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The vital point in the case is whether the board of education of the city of Visalia is authorized to permit a social dance in the high school building. The question here is, manifestly, one of power and not of policy. If we find that under any reasonable interpretation of the law such right exists, then we cannot interfere with the contemplated action of the board. It is the claim of respondent that the authority to permit such use has been conferred under proper restriction by the provisions of what is known as the Civic Center Act (Stats. 1913, p. 853) and division 4 of section 1617 of the Political Code.

[1] Said Civic Center Act provides:

"There is hereby established a civic center at each and every public school house within the state of California, where the citizens of the respective public school districts * * * may engage in supervised recreational activities."

Dancing would seem to be a form of "recreational activity" within the recognized meaning of that phrase. This court would hesitate to proclaim itself an authority on the subject, but it is bound to accord due weight to the opinions of those who have given careful consideration to such diversion. Our attention is called to the fact that "recreational" means, "of, pertaining to or conducive to recreation." Century Dictionary. "Recreation" means:

"Refreshment of strength and spirits, after toil; relief from toil or pain, diversion, amusement in sorrow or distress." 34 Cyc. 764, note 14; Corey v. Bath, 35 N. H. 530.

Upon the word "activity" the dictionary sheds the following light:

"The state of action, doing; an exercise of energy or force; an active movement or operation; a physical or gymnastic exercise, an agile performance."

We are inclined to believe with respondent that dancing is an "amusement." If it were not, we very much doubt that it would be so popular. That it requires an "active movement" or "operation" and involves "physical" or "gymnastic" exercise, and that it frequently amounts to an "agile" performance, we think no one will dispute, who has witnessed a modern terpsichorean festival. Planting itself, therefore, on the definition of the terms used, respondent is not without warrant in asserting that this very diversion is one of the things contemplated by the Legislature in its formulated and expressed vision of the public school house as a "civic center" for the social and educational activities of the community. We consider the foregoing a distinct provision of said act, and we do not regard it as limited or confined by the following clause:

"And where they may meet and discuss from time to time, as they may desire, any and all subjects and questions which in their judgment, may appertain to the educational, political, economic, artistic and moral interests of the citizens of the respective communities in which they may reside."

It is not unreasonable to hold that by the use of these co-ordinate clauses the Legislature had in view two distinct phases of human activity, one pertaining primarily to physical recreation and development in which children might participate, and the other, to the mental and moral aspect of human life, which would particularly appeal to the more mature mind.

As to the exercise of the power, it is well to observe that the Legislature has provided in the act:

"That such use of said public school house and grounds for said meetings shall in no wise interfere with such use and occupancy of said public school house and grounds as is now, or hereafter may be required for the purposes of said public schools of the state of California."

We may add that there is no contention that there has been or will be any interference herein with the ordinary purposes of the school. It is to be observed further that said act commits the management, control, and supervision of these special activities to the board of education in the following language of section 3:

"The management, direction and control of said civic center shall be vested in the board of trustees or board of education of the school district. Said board of trustees or board of education shall make all needful rules and regulations for conducting said civic center meetings and for such recreational activities as are provided in section one of this act."

[2] This act constitutes the last expression of the legislative will on the subject, and it is not a strained construction to hold that thereby respondent was clothed with discretion to permit, under proper supervision, the form of "recreational activity" that is involved herein.

[3] Looking further for legislative authority for the action of the board, we find it in an earlier statute constituting section 1617 of the Political Code, which, as far as material, is as follows:

"The powers and duties of trustees of common school districts, and of boards of education in city school districts, are as follows: * * * Fourth. To rent, etc., school property. * * * To grant the use of school building or grounds for public, literary, scientific recreational or educational meetings, or for the discussion of matters of general or public interest, upon such terms and conditions as said trustees or boards of education may deem proper: Provided, however, that said use shall not be inconsistent with the use of said buildings or grounds for school purposes nor interfere with the regular conduct of school work; and provided, further, that no privilege of using said buildings or grounds shall be granted for a period exceeding one year, such privilege being renewable and revocable in the discretion of said trustees or boards of education."

It is the claim, though, of appellants that this grant of power is circumscribed and limited by subdivision 18 of said section, providing that—

"Boards of trustees may, and upon a petition signed by a majority of the heads of families resident in the district, must call meetings of the qualified electors of the district," etc. "A meeting so called, shall be competent to instruct the board of trustees: (1) In regard to the location or change of location of the school house, or the use of the same for other than school purposes; provided, that in no case shall the school house be used for purposes which necessitate the removal of any school desks or other school furniture."

The complaint alleges that such removal of the furniture was necessary in the present instance in order to facilitate and promote the dance. Thus, it is claimed, has the board clearly transgressed and will continue to transgress this statutory limitation upon its authority. But it seems that the Legislature has made a distinction in this respect between the city and country schools. The general authority extends to the "trustees of common school districts" and "boards of education in city school districts." Subdivision 18, however, is confined to "boards of trustees." It is the "board of trustees" that such meetings shall be competent to restrict. Respondent suggests this reason for the distinction:

"Common schools are most frequently located in the smaller rural communities, and are often only one or two room buildings without auditorium or assembly place, the seats are often screwed to the floor and any removal of the desks or furniture would be apt to be done by inexperienced hands and result in damage to the floor; the desks might be piled up or taken out of doors, or hauled to the outbuildings or to the house of some person in the district, thus suffering damage. On the other hand, city schools are more often housed in larger buildings of many rooms with a central place of assembly. Janitors are employed who devote all of their time to their occupation, and furniture is often arranged for ready removal without damage or inconvenience. The rule of subdivision 18 would be unnecessary in such instances."

[4] Neither do we find such limitation of the power of the board of education in the municipal act providing for cities of the fifth class, to which Visalia belongs. Section 798 (Stats. of 1899, p. 99) of said act provides:

"The board of education shall have power: * * * Sixth. To purchase, receive, lease and hold in fee, in trust for such city, any and all real estate and personal property that may have been acquired, or may hereafter be acquired, for the use and benefit of the schools of such city; provided, that no real estate shall be bought, sold, or exchanged, nor any expenditure incurred for the construction of new school houses, without the approval of the board of trustees; and provided further, that the proceeds of any such sale or exchange of real estate shall be exclusively applied to the purchase of other lots for the erection of school houses."

This constitutes, manifestly, a larger grant of power to the city board as to the management and control of the school property than is conferred upon the trustees of common school districts. The particular limitation as to the use of the building, to which we have referred, applies to the latter but not to the former.

However, the school house, whether in the urban or rural district, must, of course, be used for a public purpose and that purpose must have some relation to the educational or recreational needs of the community. It is manifest though, that within the limits of said statutory provisions there is room for the exercise of a wise discretion on the part of the board of education.

[5] It is equally plain that the board would have no authority to grant an exclusive privilege to any of the citizens to use said building. Plaintiffs probably had this principle in mind when they alleged that "a private" dance was contemplated by the board. They concede, however, that this is rather a conclusion, and is open to the objection raised by the special demurrer. Hence we treat the case upon the broad ground of the power of the board to permit this particular form of diversion.

As to the cases cited, they must, naturally, be regarded in the light of the provisions of the statute in the various states wherein said opinions were rendered. It was pointed out in the opinion of the trial judge Hon. W.

B. Wallace, that, in the states having no laws permitting the school houses to be used for other than school purposes, the courts have held such other uses to be illegal:

"Thus the following uses have been enjoined: In Connecticut, Sunday schools and religious meetings; in Kansas, various society meetings whereby the rooms were overcrowded and the furniture injured; in Pennsylvania, religious meetings, lyceums and private schools. In Louisiana, a theater conducted as a business; in Ohio, private schools; in Wisconsin, regular meetings of the Sons of Temperance.

"Other states have laws permitting the electors to vote on the question of using a public school house for other than school purposes and courts in these states have sustained the following uses after elections favorable therefor: In Iowa, Indiana and Illinois, meetings for religious purposes; in Missouri, for a literary society; in Arkansas and Illinois, as a lodge room for a secret society; in Vermont, for a private school; in Maryland, at a nominal rent as headquarters for a regiment of the national guard."

In Appeal of John W. Barnes, 6 R. I. 591, it was held that the trustees of a school district may, subject to the control of the district meeting, lawfully permit the district school house to be used, out of school hours, for the purpose of private instruction in vocal music of the district scholars and others residing in the district. The decision was grounded upon the principle that such use tended to promote public education and that the trustees were acting within the spirit of their trust.

In Townsend v. Hagan, 35 Iowa, 194, it was held that—

"The electors of a school district may legally permit the school houses in the district to be used for the purposes of religious worship and Sunday schools."

The court was called upon to construe the provision of the statute permitting the electors when legally assembled "to make such disposition of the school houses as they may deem right and proper." The court concluded that such use was within the spirit and intent of said provisions.

The decision in Lagow v. Hill, 238 Ill. 428, 87 N. E. 369, upholding the action of the board of school directors in permitting certain fraternal organizations to hold meetings in one room of the school building, was based upon the following provision of the school law of that state:

"They [the board of directors] shall have the control and supervision of all school houses in their district, and may grant the temporary use of school houses when not occupied by schools, for religious meetings and Sunday schools, for evening schools and literary societies, and for such other meetings as the directors may deem proper."

In Spencer v. Joint School District, 15 Kan. 259, 22 Am. Rep. 268, the action was to restrain the use of the school buildings for other than school purposes. The decision was by Justice Brewer, afterward justice of the United States Supreme Court, and he treated the subject with his characteristic force and persuasive reasoning. He declared:

"We are fully aware of the fact that all over the state the school house is, by general consent, or at least without active opposition, used for a variety of purposes other than the holding of public schools. Sabbath schools of separate religious denominations, church assemblies, sometimes political meetings, social gatherings, etc., are held there. Now, none of these can be strictly considered among the purposes for which a public building can be erected, or taxation employed. * * * The public school house cannot be used for any private purposes. The argument is a short one. Taxation is invoked to raise funds to erect the building; but taxation is illegitimate to provide for any private purpose. Taxation will not lie to raise funds to build a place for a religious society, a political society, or a social club. What cannot be done directly, cannot be done indirectly."

The conclusion was undoubtedly sound. But, as before suggested, we are dealing with a public use and with a statute somewhat enlarging the public educational purposes for which a school house may be used.

We may leave the citations with the case of Lewis v. Bateman, 26 Utah, 434, 73 Pac. 509. Therein the court stated:

"The only question involved in this case is: Have the trustees of a school district the legal right and power to permit a public school house, which is the property of such district, and which is used for school purposes, to be used for holding public and private dances—a use which is in no way connected with the school, and which would not promote or advance its interests, but on the contrary, the effect, if any, would necessarily be inimical and detrimental to schools?"

It was rightfully held that the private use, which it was thus proposed to make of the public school building, was unauthorized and contrary to public policy, and the use for either public or private dances would be in violation of a plain provision of the statute of Utah prohibiting the removal of the furniture from the school room. It is thus apparent that in its facts the Utah case differs from this.

There is some intimation that a moral question is involved herein. Of course, the board of education should not tolerate an indecent or immoral use of the school house, but it cannot be said that they contemplate anything of the kind. It is clear that there is a difference of opinion among well-informed people as to the moral effect of dancing. As said by the trial judge:

"There are many excellent, intelligent, and pious people who are opposed to modern social dancing as being fraught with harm to the participants and to the community. To the contrary, there appears to be a much larger number, equally excellent and intelligent, including many pious people, who dance and teach their children to dance. * * * Some people abuse the privilege of dancing by their manner of dancing and sometimes by their mode of dress. Those who are coarse and immodest often express those qualities in the ballroom when dancing, and all public dances should be supervised. On the other hand, people of fine instincts and feelings, and proud of their willingness and ability to do right at all times, will reflect their modesty and fine character on the dancing floor."

Even the most fastidious would certainly distinguish between the joyful and reverential dance of Miriam and the voluptuous and wanton dance of the daughter of Herodias, which led to the beheading of John the Baptist.

We must indulge the presumption herein that respondent contemplates a "recreational" activity free from any immodesty and which may be conducive to the social and educational advancement of the community. We must, also, assume that it is not an exclusive function, but open to all on equal terms. Indeed, the probabilities are that it is designed to afford the various classes of the high school an opportunity to meet for social intercourse, and to promote the grace of movement and charm of physical development that are supposed to result from a wholesome and properly supervised dance.

At any rate we think the question was for the school authorities to determine, and such an abuse of discretion has not been shown as to warrant the extraordinary writ of injunction.

In our opinion, the demurrer to the complaint was properly sustained, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

HOWARD v. D. W. HOBSON CO.

(Civ. 1870; Sac. 2639.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 17, 1918. On Rehearing in Supreme Court, in Bank, Dec. 16, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT ⊜251(1) — FINDINGS TO SUPPORT—FINDINGS OUTSIDE ISSUES.

Rule that, where findings are not waived, no judgment can stand on findings wholly outside issues made by pleadings, is subject to qualification that where case has been tried on theory of both parties that some vital question, not pleaded, has been made an issue by proof addressed thereto, judgment on findings as to such issue may stand.

2. PLEADING ⊜34(1)—CONSTRUCTION—STATUTE.

By Code Civ. Proc. § 452, in construing a pleading to determine its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties, a rule that should be invoked if averments may be held clearly to imply or state an essential fact.

3. JOINT ADVENTURES ⊜5(2) — ACTION FOR DIVISION OF PROFITS—"RECEIVED."

In action by realty broker for half of the profits realized by other broker from sale of land under option procured by first broker, complaint alleging second broker agreed to divide amount received held not to seek one-half gross profits and therefore not to support judgment for half net profits; "received" meaning the amount in excess of purchase price which parties were entitled to retain.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Received.]

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1170(5)—HARMLESS ERROR—VARIANCE—STATUTE.

Where variance between contract declared on and that shown and found could not have misled defendant to its prejudice in maintaining its defense on merits, such variance is immaterial, by Code Civ. Proc. § 469, and cannot overthrow judgment for plaintiff.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1033(7)—HARMLESS ERROR—VARIANCE.

Variance in evidence and findings showing and finding agreement looking to division between defendant and plaintiff, realty brokers and partners, on basis of net profits, complaint alleging agreement calling for division on basis of gross profits, held harmless to defendant.

6. INTEREST ⊜19(1)—AGREEMENT TO DIVIDE PROFITS — STATUTE — "LIQUIDATED DEMAND."

Where plaintiff procured for defendant an option on land under defendant's agreement to divide profits realized on sale, amount due plaintiff after sale by defendant at profit constituted "liquidated demand" on which plaintiff was entitled, by Civ. Code, § 1917, to legal interest from date of sale of land.

7. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜18(½)—"OPTION."

An "option" is neither a contract of sale nor an agreement to sell land, or other property, being a contract by which the owner of property invests another with exclusive right to purchase it at a stipulated sum within a limited or reasonable time, imposing no obligation to purchase.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Option.]

8. JOINT ADVENTURES ⊜1 — JOINT VENTURE BY REALTY BROKERS—PURCHASE OF OPTION AND SALE OF LAND—NECESSITY FOR WRITING—STATUTE.

Agreement between real estate brokers that one should secure option on land of third person, other to sell such land, and both to divide profits, was not required to be in writing by Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6.

9. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜18(3) — PAYMENT UNDER OPTION—EFFECT.

Where optionee paid, and owner accepted, $100 on purchase price, payment operated as exercise of optional right, and option agreement as such became inoperative, also became contract for sale of land, and agreements extending time for payment were without reference to term of option agreement, but only to time to which payment of balance of price was deferred.

10. JOINT ADVENTURES ⊂⊃4(1)—REALTY BROKERS—AGREEMENT TO SHARE PROFITS—EXTENSION OF TIME FOR PAYMENT.

Where realty brokers agreed to share profits from sale of land on which one should secure option for the other, the first's right to his share of profits was not affected, after exercise by the other of option on land procured by the first, by any agreement between other and landowner extending time for payment.

11. JOINT ADVENTURES ⊂⊃4(1)—REALTY BROKERS—SHARING PROFITS—POSTPONEMENT OF RIGHT OF PARTY.

By contract between plaintiff and defendant, realty brokers, to share profits realized on sale by defendant of land on which plaintiff was to procure option, plaintiff's right to payment held not postponed until mortgage debt given for price of land before resale was extinguished.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

12. BROKERS ⊂⊃43(2)—REALTY BROKER—EMPLOYMENT TO OBTAIN OPTION—WRITING—STATUTE.

Supreme Court is not prepared to hold that Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, requiring agreement authorizing or employing agent or broker to purchase or sell realty for compensation or commission to be in writing, is not applicable in case of simple contract between such agent or broker and a proposed purchaser to obtain option for purchase of realty.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Chas. O. Busick, Judge.

Action by J. W. Howard against the D. W. Hobson Company, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed to the District Court of Appeal, which affirmed, and defendant applies for hearing in the Supreme Court. Application denied.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for appellant.

C. E. McLaughlin and B. F. Driver, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. The second amended complaint in this action is in four counts. In the first count it is alleged that D. W. Hobson Company is a corporation having its principal place of business in San Francisco; that, prior to the 6th day of November, 1912, Maud Moore was the owner of a certain tract of land in Colusa county; that, in March, 1912, "plaintiff informed said defendant and its agents that he could obtain an option giving him the exclusive right to purchase said land for the sum of $25,000, and said defendant, then and thereby and through its authorized agents, agreed to and with plaintiff that, if plaintiff would secure the option from said Maud Moore for the purchase and sale of said land for the sum of $25,000," defendant would endeavor to sell said land, "and in the event of such sale would divide the amount received for said land in excess of $25,000 equally with plaintiff" and would pay to plaintiff "one-half of said excess sum over said $25,000 as his commission and share of the profits accruing under said option as aforesaid"; that, in March, 1912, plaintiff, pursuant to said agreement, procured from said Maud Moore an agreement in writing whereby, for the sum of $100 paid to her, she granted to defendant a 90-day option to sell said land; that plaintiff procured extensions of said option and that it was in full force and effect on the 6th of November, 1912; that, on said last-mentioned date, defendant purchased the property from said Maud Moore for the sum of $25,000 and sold the same to one Chester Von Grafen for $33,890; that, under and pursuant to said agreement between the parties hereto, defendant promised to pay to plaintiff one-half of said profits, amounting to $4,445; that demand was made upon defendant for the payment of said sum, which remains unpaid.

In the second cause of action it is alleged that defendant received from Chester Von Grafen the sum of $4,445 for the use of plaintiff, which has not been paid.

It is alleged in the third cause of action that, in May, 1912, "plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement by the terms of which defendant agreed that, if plaintiff would procure from the owners of that certain ranch commonly known as the 'A. W. Campbell Ranch,'" in the county of Yuba, "an option contract to purchase said ranch at a price not to exceed $60 per acre and would assign said contract to defendant, defendant would pay plaintiff for his services in procuring said contract the sum of $200." It is then alleged that plaintiff secured said option contract and assigned the same to defendant, that he demanded of defendant the payment of $200, but that said sum remains due and unpaid.

In the fourth cause of action the allegation is that defendant received $200 for the use of plaintiff on account of the option contract mentioned in the third count.

The answer denies the allegations of the first and second counts of the complaint; admits the procurement by plaintiff of the option set forth in the third count of the complaint, but alleges that plaintiff acted in the premises as the agent and employé of the defendant and held all rights under the contract as trustee for defendant; denies that defendant agreed, upon the assignment of said option by plaintiff to defendant, to pay him $200; and denies that said or any other sum is due plaintiff by reason of the facts alleged; and denies the averments, contained in the fourth cause of action, that defendant received the sum of $200 for the use of plaintiff.

The court found that the allegations of the complaint were true and that the denials in the answer were untrue. It was then found, in the exact language of the complaint, that plaintiff procured an option from Maud Moore pursuant to agreement with defendant, assigned the same to defendant, and that defendant sold the property to Von Grafen. It was next found that defendant, "in making said sale, expended and paid out" $1,786.24; "that the profit derived by said defendant in making said sale is the difference between $25,000 and $33,890, less $1,786.24, the total of said expenses, making a net profit received by defendant in making said sale of $7,103.76; that one-half of said profits is the sum of $3,551.88," which sum "was received by defendant in making the sale of the said premises and from Chester Von Grafen for the use and benefit of plaintiff." The findings then follow the allegations of the complaint with reference to the option for the sale of the Campbell ranch.

Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $3,751.88, with interest on $3,551.88 from the 6th of November, 1912. The appeal is from the judgment.

The record discloses evidence sufficient to support the findings: (1) That the defendant employed the plaintiff to secure for it options giving it the exclusive right to purchase both the Moore and Campbell properties, and that, as to the Moore ranch, the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to reimburse him for the services performed in securing the option to purchase the same by the payment to him of a sum equal to one-half of the net excess over the amount which the defendant was required to pay the owner of the land for it, and that for obtaining for it the option to purchase the Campbell property the defendant agreed to pay the plaintiff the sum of $200. (2) That the plaintiff did procure said options for the defendant, and the properties involved in said options were subsequently sold by the defendant for amounts, respectively, in excess of those for which they were purchased from the owners.

But it is contended that the judgment cannot be upheld for these several reasons, viz.: (1) That there is a material variance between the findings and the issues joined; that the findings are conflicting and contradictory, and are insufficient to support the judgment for the asserted reason that, while the contract pleaded is for one-half of the gross profits which might be obtained from the sale of the Moore ranch, the judgment is for one-half of the net profits found to have been realized from said sale. (2) That the court erred in allowing interest on the sum of $3,551.88, which sum was found to be one-half of the profits realized from the sale of the Moore ranch. (3) That the court erred in allowing testimony of the oral employment of the plaintiff by the defendant to procure the options mentioned, in refusing to strike out such testimony, and in refusing to grant defendant's motion for a nonsuit on the close of plaintiff's case, the grounds of such objection and motions being that the employment of plaintiff as above indicated was oral or not in writing, as is required (so it is contended) in such cases by section 1624, subd. 6, of the Civil Code. (4) That the uncontradicted evidence shows that the employment of the plaintiff was oral or not by a writing, hence such purported employment of the plaintiff for the purpose stated was void and consequently the finding of a contract of employment is contrary to the evidence. (5) That the contract alleged in the complaint related only to the "original term of option," and, the option having been extended by the owner of the property, a new contract, entirely independent of and distinct from the original option as obtained by the plaintiff, thereupon arose with which contract the plaintiff had no connection. There are some other propositions advanced under this head, to which due attention will be given in the course of the discussion to follow.

[1] Obviously, where findings are not waived, no judgment can stand where the findings are wholly outside the issues made by the pleadings. This is the general rule, which, however, has a limited qualification and which is applied in those instances where a case has been tried upon the theory, without objection from either party, that some vital question, not in fact made an issue by the pleadings, has nevertheless been made an issue by the introduction of proof addressed thereto.

[2] The rule in this state with respect to the construction of a pleading, for the purpose of determining its effect, is that its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties. Code Civ. Proc. § 452. It is not to be assumed from that rule of construction, however, that by construction there may be inserted in a pleading vital pretermitted averments, or averments which are neither directly set forth therein nor reasonably within the fair import of the language of those which are set forth. But if the averments themselves may, without a strained construction, or without doing violence to language, be held clearly to imply or state a fact essential to the statement of a cause of action or to the support of the theory upon which reliance must be had to make out a case or a defense, then the rule of the Code should be invoked and the pleading construed with a view to the promotion of substantial justice between the parties to the action.

[3] By the light of the rule thus stated, the complaint here must be considered, and, so viewing it, we cannot agree to the proposition that it is obnoxious to the objection made against it by the defendant. It will be observed that the allegation with respect to the compensation of plaintiff for procuring the Moore ranch option is that it was agreed by and between plaintiff and defendant that the defendant, in the event of a sale by it of said ranch, "would divide the amount received for said land in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars equally with plaintiff."

Nowhere does the complaint directly or expressly allege that the division was to be upon the basis of the gross profits realized from the sale of the land. Indeed, it is not therein stated whether the division shall be of gross or net profits, but merely of the amount in excess of $25,000 so received by the defendant on the sale. The word "receive," or "received," is, like many words in our language, a relative term, and its meaning or signification may be different, according to the circumstances under which and the connection in which it is employed. In this case it seems to us to be manifest that the word "received," as used in the pleaded agreement, has reference to the amount of money in excess of the purchase price of the Moore ranch which the parties are entitled to retain for their own use and benefit; that is to say, that sum of the excess which remains after all expenses necessarily incurred in negotiating and consummating a sale of the land by the defendant have been paid. If a broker, in selling land or other property, incurs expenses and pays the same, it cannot be said that he has received for his services the sum or sums which he has been compelled to expend in the liquidation of the expenses so incurred. Therefore we conclude that what the complaint means, by stating that the defendant agreed to divide equally with the plaintiff the amount in excess of the purchase price of the Moore ranch which the defendant received, was that the division should be upon the basis of the net, and not upon that of the gross, excess realized from the sale; that is, that the plaintiff should receive for his services one-half of what was actually earned as a result of the transaction, and in what is actually earned by the defendant cannot reasonably be included money paid out to carry out the transaction. That this is the correct interpretation of the word "received" as used in the complaint, and that said word was intended by plaintiff to bear that meaning in describing in the complaint his agreement with the defendant, is indubitably shown by paragraph 6 of that pleading, wherein it is alleged:

"That said purchase and sale of said real property as set forth in the last preceding paragraph of this complaint was made pursuant to said agreement between plaintiff and defendant and whereby defendant agreed and promised to pay plaintiff one-half of the profit resulting from the purchase and sale of said real property, * * * and the profit resulting from said purchase and sale and which in said agreement * * * was to be divided equally between them was and is the sum of eight thousand eight hundred and ninety dollars," etc.

The word "profits," says the Supreme Court in People v. Savings Union, 72 Cal. 199, 202, 13 Pac. 498, 499, "signifies an excess of the value of returns over the value of advances," or, as the word is defined in Connolly v. Davidson, 15 Minn. 519 (Gil. 428), 2 Am. Rep. 154, it means "the excess of receipts over expenditures," or in Eyster v. Centennial Board of Finance, 94 U. S. 500, 24 L. Ed. 188, it is "the receipts of a business, deducting current expenses; it is the equivalent to net receipts."

[4, 5] But it does not necessarily follow from the fact that the plaintiff asked in his complaint for more than the court found that he was entitled to under the agreement that a variance thus arises between the contract pleaded and the one found by the court. The gist of the agreement is that the defendant thereby employed the plaintiff to secure an option for the purchase of the Moore ranch and agreed and promised to pay plaintiff for that service, and assuming, for the purpose of the argument only, that the plaintiff sued for one-half of the gross excess, the situation which developed at the trial with reference to that contract is simply this: That the proof showed that, in stating in his complaint the amount due him from the defendant by virtue of the terms of said contract, he made a claim for a larger sum than the court found, upon sufficient evidence, that he was actually entitled to thereunder; that is, under the very contract declared upon. The difference thus arising between the agreement declared upon and the evidence and the findings could not have misled the defendant to its prejudice in maintaining its defense upon the merits, and therefore the variance, if variance there be, is immaterial and cannot be made to operate to overthrow the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 469; Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 724, 127 Pac. 66; Doolittle v. McConnell, Ex'r, etc., 174 Pac. 305. Indeed, far from misleading the defendant, the fact that a difference in the amount claimed by the plaintiff and the amount found to be actually due him under the pleaded agreement was brought out by the defendant itself. It is to be further suggested (again assuming that the complaint sets up an agreement which calls for a division upon the basis of the gross amount of the excess) that the finding that the sum due the plaintiff is considerably less than that so claimed by him is favorable to the defendant, and thus it is obvious that the latter in point of fact suffered no prejudice from the alleged variance.

It results from the foregoing that the findings, having followed the averments of the complaint, are neither conflicting nor contradictory, nor variant in any material aspect from the issues joined. Nor, it should be added, do we find anything in the cases cited by the defendant upon the point under present consideration which supports its objection that the findings are materially at cross-purposes with the issues as tendered by the complaint or with the contract as so declared upon.

[6] 2. We think the court was right in allowing legal interest on the share of the plaintiff in the "excess amount" for which the Moore ranch was sold by the defendant from the 6th day of November, 1912, the day on which the latter sold said ranch. Civ. Code, § 1917. It is, among other things, provided by that section that, unless there is an express contract in writing, fixing a different rate, interest is payable at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on moneys, after they have become due, "received to the use of another and detained from him." In this case, the money coming to the plaintiff as his share of the profits realized from the sale of the ranch became due on the day the sale was made by the defendant. It is argued, however, that the one-half of the money received by the plaintiff for the ranch in excess of the purchase price thereof "was not plaintiff's money received by defendant as a collector to be turned over to plaintiff, but on plaintiff's own version of the contract the excess sum was merely to be taken as a measure of the compensation which he was to have, and, according to the findings of the court, that measure remained unknown until the amount of net profits was ascertained. The unsupported and repugnant finding that the money was received to plaintiff's use being rejected," proceeds the argument, "nothing remains but the finding of an unliquidated demand due to plaintiff." And it is added that interest is not allowable on unliquidated demands, citing Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164, and Swinnerton v. Argonaut Land Co., 112 Cal. 375, 44 Pac. 719.

As above stated, the moment that the sale of the ranch was fully effected and completed by the defendant, that moment the latter became indebted to the plaintiff in an amount equal to one-half of the net sum received by the defendant over and above that paid for the property to the owner of the ranch; and at that moment of time the amount due the plaintiff became certain and definite or capable of becoming readily so by the simplest of arithmetical calculations by the defendant of the difference between the "excess amount" and the amount of the expense which it was necessary for it to incur to negotiate and consummate the sale. The defendant, of course, knew precisely what the expense of selling the ranch amounted to, and, of course, knew the "excess amount" received by him from the sale over the purchase price. The amount due the plaintiff, therefore, constituted, within the meaning of the law, a liquidated demand.

The sole reason given by the cases for the denial of interest on unliquidated demands is "that the person liable does not know what sum he owes, and therefore can be in no default for not paying." Cox v. McLaughlin, 76 Cal. 60, 67, 18 Pac. 100, 9 Am. St. Rep. 164. See, also, Courteney v. Standard Box Co., 16 Cal. App. 600, 613, 614, 615, 117 Pac. 778; McCowen v. Pew, 18 Cal. App. 482, 123 Pac. 354; Robinson v. American Fish Co., 17 Cal. App. 212, 119 Pac. 388; Fairchild v. Bay Point Ry. Co., 22 Cal. App. 328, 134 Pac. 338; Meyer v. Buckley, 22 Cal. App. 96, 133 Pac. 510. The reason of the rule disallowing interest on unliquidated demands has no application to the facts of this case, since, as above shown, the defendant knew precisely what sum it owed to the plaintiff.

The case cited by the defendant, Swinnerton v. Argonaut Land Co., supra, was an action on a quantum meruit for professional services performed by an attorney at law, and is not in point here. In all cases founded on implied contracts, or on express contracts for that matter, where the amount due cannot be ascertained except upon an accounting, or where (on implied contracts) it cannot be ascertained except upon evidence showing the reasonable value of services rendered or goods sold, the reason of the rule denying interest upon the amount thus ascertained to be due applies with peculiar pertinency, for the demand in such cases is unliquidated in the strictest sense. But, as we have shown, this is no such a case. Nor does it become one merely because the plaintiff was required to appeal to the courts for the enforcement of the terms of the agreement. As stated, the amount due plaintiff under the agreement was fixed and certain, and it was only the refusal of the defendant to comply with its plain provisions which necessitated, as may be true in the case of the payee or holder of a promissory note or that of an obligee of any other obligation, definite and certain in its terms, including that of the amount due, a resort to a judicial proceeding to enforce compliance with its terms.

[7, 8] 3. Both points 2 and 3, in the order in which they are above given, involve, so far as is concerned the premise thereof, the same proposition, viz.: That the authority of the plaintiff to negotiate for and secure the option for the purchase of the Moore ranch for the defendant was void because not in writing. The theory upon which these points are advanced is that the employment of the plaintiff by the defendant for the purpose of securing the option in question came within the terms of section 1624, subd. 6, of the Civil Code, which provides that "an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission" is invalid "unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent." Section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains a like provision in subdivision 6 thereof.

Both the plaintiff and the defendant were, at the time of the transactions upon which this action is founded, real estate brokers in the city of Sacramento. The contract entered into between the parties with respect to the Moore ranch described in the complaint was not for the sale or purchase of real property. All that the plaintiff was required or expected to do under the agreement was to secure an option for the purchase of the land to which the agreement related for the defendant. An "option" is neither a contract of sale and purchase nor an agreement to sell and purchase land or other property. An "option" is a contract by which the owner of property invests another with the exclusive right to purchase such property at a stipulated sum within a limited or reasonable time in the future, and, unlike an agreement to sell and purchase, imposes no obligation to purchase upon the party to whom it is given. Menzel v. Primm, 6 Cal. App. 204, 209, 91 Pac. 754, and authorities therein cited. As above stated, there was no obligation imposed on the plaintiff by the agreement in question to negotiate for the purchase of the property referred to for the defendant. He was simply employed to induce the owner of the ranch to give the defendant the right to purchase the property within a certain time—a right which it was wholly optional with it to exercise or not exercise, as it saw fit. Such being the nature of the agreement between the parties as to the Moore property, there was no legal necessity for reducing it to writing. In other words, such an agreement does not come within the provisions of section 1624, subd. 6, of the Civil Code, nor, to be valid, is it required by any provision of our statute of frauds to be in writing and "signed by the party to be charged," etc. But we may go further and hold that, even if it were necessary to concede that the agreement in question in effect involved the employment of the plaintiff to purchase the Moore property for the defendant, still, since said agreement was between real estate brokers and not between a broker and the owner of the land, it was not necessary, to make it valid, that it should have conformed to the formalities prescribed by subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code.

The evidence shows, as above pointed out, that both the plaintiff and the defendant were real estate brokers, and it is undisputed that the commissions for the sale of the land had been received by the defendant. Therefore there existed a fund out of which the defendant could have paid the commissions which the court found the defendant had promised to pay to the plaintiff.

In Gorham v. Heiman, 90 Cal. 346, 27 Pac. 289, the action was by certain real estate brokers against other persons engaged in a like business for a certain commission alleged to be due the plaintiffs for the sale of a mine under an oral agreement. There, as here, it was contended that the agreement upon which the action was based was void because it was not in writing and signed as required by section 1624 of the Civil Code. The Supreme Court, by the late Chief Justice Beatty, in reply to that proposition, said:

"But, reading the whole complaint together, it is apparent that the contract alleged was merely to buy and sell as brokers, and there is no statute of frauds requiring such contracts to be in writing. Besides, there is enough in the complaint to show a cause of action against the appellants, independent of the contract of partnership. It shows an agreement to co-operate in obtaining authority to sell, and in selling, a mine for an equal share of the commissions. It shows that the agreement was acted upon. It shows performance on the part of plaintiffs, collection of the commissions by appellants, and refusal to divide. Certainly this establishes a cause of action if the agreement was valid, and we know of no ground upon which it can be held invalid. Counsel seem to rely on section 1624 of the Civil Code, subdivision 6. But, clearly, that provision was only designed to protect owners of real estate against unfounded claims of brokers. It does not extend to agreements between brokers to co-operate in making sales for a share of the commissions. It may be, as counsel argue, that the allowance of such claims as plaintiffs and interveners make in this action, unsupported, as they are, by any written evidence of the contract, opens the door to frauds of as gross a nature as were ever perpetrated by real estate brokers under pretense of oral employment by the owners to make sales; but, if so, the evil is one which the Legislature alone can remedy. It might be as plausibly argued that contracts should generally be held void if not in writing; but the law is otherwise. Civ. Code, § 1622."

The foregoing is decisive of the point under present consideration, assuming, though not conceding, that the purpose of the agreement referred to here was to employ and authorize the plaintiff to purchase real estate for the defendant. A careful analysis of the following cases cited by the appellant will show that they do not modify or qualify or in any way change the rule as it is declared in Gorham v. Heiman: Aldis v. Schleicher, 9 Cal. App. 372, 99 Pac. 526; Casey v. Richards, 10 Cal. App. 58, 101 Pac. 36; Saunders v. Yoakum, 12 Cal. App. 543, 107 Pac.

1007; Johnston v. Porter, 21 Cal. App. 97, 131 Pac. 69; Sellers v. Solway Land Co., 31 Cal. App. 259, 160 Pac. 175.

[9-11] 4. The propositions last discussed in the briefs involve, among others, the question whether the purchase of the Moore ranch by the defendant was under the option procured by the plaintiff or under an option secured subsequently by the defendant itself without the aid of the former.

It appears that the Moore option was executed and dated April 19, 1912, and was to run for 90 days from said date. As a consideration therefor, the defendant paid the owner of the land the sum of $50. The option provided that the first payment on the purchase price of the land ($24,950) should be the sum of $1,950. On July 17, 1912—two days before the expiration of the time limited by the option—the defendant paid the owner and the latter accepted the sum of $100 on account of the first payment to be made thereunder. At the same time, the time for the payment of the balance on the first payment was extended by Mrs. Moore to October 19, 1912, and on the latter date it was further extended to November 1, 1912. These extensions, together with the acknowledgment of the receipt of the $100 payment, were indorsed in writing on the back of the original written option, and signed by Mrs. Moore. In evidencing the second extension of time—that is, from October 19 to November 1, 1912—the words "October nineteenth" were erased and the words "November first" inserted by interlineation in lieu thereof; the indorsement "M. M." (the initials of the owner Maud Moore) being subjoined thereto.

The specific contention is that the contract as alleged and proved related entirely to the original term of the option, and that "there is no evidence of any agreement covering extended time or new options"; that, since "it was a condition precedent under the contract as alleged and found that an excess or profit should be realized by the defendant on exercising the option and reselling the property at an advanced price," it was necessary to prove that that condition had been fulfilled; and that there was a failure of proof that said condition had been fulfilled, it "appearing that the purchase was not made under the option, but was made after it ceased to have any legal or binding effect."

It is not necessary to restate here the argument advanced by appellant in support of the above-stated propositions. We deem it sufficient to say that our opinion is that the purchase of the Moore land by the defendant was under the option procured for it by the plaintiff. The payment by the defendant of $100 on account of the first payment required to be made by the option agreement upon the exercise by the defendant of its right of option thereunder was made before the term of the option, as procured by the plaintiff for the defendant, had expired. The act and fact of the payment by the defendant and the acceptance by the owner of the $100 on the purchase price of the ranch operated, ipso facto, as an exercise by the defendant of its optional right and the option agreement as such thereupon became functus officio, and likewise became a contract for the sale of the ranch mutually binding upon Moore and the defendant. Smith v. Bangham, 156 Cal. 359, 104 Pac. 689, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 522; Menzel v. Primm, 6 Cal. App. 205, 91 Pac. 754. There being then no option agreement in existence, the extensions referred to, when made, could not have related to the "term" of the option agreement, but had reference entirely to the time to which was deferred the payment of the balance of the first payment required by the option agreement to be made upon the exercise by the defendant of its optional right thereunder. Of course, it will not be denied that the defendant and Mrs. Moore, after the former had accepted or exercised its optional right, or upon the exercise thereof, could make such further or different arrangements as they pleased as to the terms of payment of the purchase price, and, if they did do so, it cannot well be said that the effect thereof was to create a new option agreement. Such arrangements would simply mean that new or different terms had been introduced into the contract of sale obtained by the exercise by the defendant of its optional right secured to it by the option agreement as procured for it by the plaintiff. In other words, Mrs. Moore had the right to waive any default as to the first payment, if default there was, or to extend the time of such payment upon the acceptance of the optional right by the defendant, and such action on her part could not affect the right of the plaintiff to claim as against the defendant the stipulated compensation for his services in procuring for it the option agreement from and under which it obtained from Mrs. Moore the contract of sale and purchase.

The proposition, presented in connection with those last above considered, that the finding of an excess or profit on the sale by the defendant of the Moore ranch is not supported, because it appears from the evidence that the "defendant remains liable for $12,000 of the mortgage debt given for the purchase price," and therefore "it cannot yet be told that there will be any excess or profit," is devoid of merit. The predicate of the argument in support of this point is that, under the agreement declared upon by the plaintiff, one of the conditions upon which the plaintiff was to be paid one-half of the excess or profit realized from the sale of the ranch was that the fund from which the plaintiff was to be so paid was to be that created by such excess or profit and actually received by the defendant. We do not so read the pleaded agreement. As to that proposition, the complaint alleges that the defendant agreed:

"That, if plaintiff would secure the option from said Maud Moore for the purchase and sale of said land for the sum of $25,000, defendant * * * would under said option endeavor to effect a sale of said land for a sum in excess of $25,000, and in the event of such sale would divide the amount received for said land in excess of $25,000 equally with plaintiff, and it was then and there agreed * * * that if plaintiff procured the option as aforesaid from said Maud Moore * * * said defendant would upon the sale of said land for any sum in excess of $25,000 pay to said plaintiff one-half of said excess sum * * * as his commission and share of the profits accruing under said option."

Thus it will be noted that there is no provision in the agreement that the payment of plaintiff's share of the profits on the sale of the ranch was to be postponed or deferred beyond the time at which the sale of said ranch was actually effected or completed. As before suggested, the amount of the excess and plaintiff's share thereof could be known immediately upon the sale being made. The defendant could not require the plaintiff to wait for the payment of his one-half of the profits realized from the sale until the mortgage debt was extinguished, unless there was a covenant in the agreement to that effect, and, as seen, there was no such covenant in the agreement. Moreover, the defendant had received all but $12,000 of the sum for which it sold the land to its grantee, and had paid out of the profits it derived from the sale the expenses incurred in negotiating and completing the sale. Therefore, as above stated, it is manifest that it was not only in possession of the fund from which the plaintiff's share was to be paid, but, obviously, knew precisely how much the excess or profit amounted to.

The option on the Campbell ranch was in writing and to the plaintiff, who assigned it by writing to the defendant, under a preceding oral agreement by the defendant that plaintiff, upon procuring said option for it, would be paid by it the sum of $200. What has been said herein with respect to the oral agreement between the parties for the procurement of the option on the Moore property applies with equal pertinency and force to the oral agreement between them for the procurement by the plaintiff of the option on the Campbell property.

The several assignments of alleged error involving objections to rulings admitting certain testimony are connected with the questions above discussed, and further consideration thereof herein is, therefore, unnecessary.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

PER CURIAM. The application for a hearing in this court after decision in the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District is denied.

[12] In denying the application, we deem it proper to say that we are not prepared to hold that subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code is not applicable in the case of a simple contract between a real estate agent or broker and a proposed purchaser to obtain an option for the purchase of real estate by the purchaser. The opinion clearly shows that this was in substance a joint venture on the part of plaintiff and defendant for the sale of real property of a third party and the distribution of the profits between them. The District Court of Appeal was clearly right in concluding that subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code does not extend to agreements between brokers to co-operate in making sales for the sake of the commission or profits and that this was substantially such a case.

EMIGH-WINCHELL HARDWARE CO. v. PYLMAN et al. (Civ. 1582.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 26, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Dec. 23, 1918.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸281(2)—COMPLETION OF BUILDING—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not only to show a constructive completion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, but also an actual completion not later than May 2d, so that claim for lien for materials filed August 8th following was too late.

2. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸132(7)—"CONSTRUCTIVE COMPLETION" OF BUILDING — WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, as to mechanics' liens, any of the three circumstances mentioned constitutes constructive completion, and cessation from labor need not be added to the other circumstances to constitute constructive completion.

3. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸132(4) — TIME FOR FILING.

If owner does not file notice of completion, he, by virtue of Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, waives 30-day limitation given materialmen within which to file claims, but materialman must nevertheless file claims within 90 days as provided by concluding clause of said section.

4. MECHANICS' LIENS ⟸48, 132(8) — TIME FOR FILING—DETERMINATION.

Where hinges were never used in the building, they could not furnish the basis for a lien, and consequently the time when they were delivered cannot be taken into account in determining question whether lien was filed within statutory period.

5. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊜132(11) — TIME FOR FILING—DETERMINATION.

Where order for hinges was a separate, distinct, and independent contract or order from the other orders given, it could not affect in any way the right to file a lien for the other materials.

6. MECHANICS' LIENS ⊜132(11) — TIME FOR FILING—DETERMINATION.

Hinges, delivered but never used, must be eliminated in determining question whether lien for materials was filed within statutory period; payment in full having been made and accepted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by the Emigh-Winchell Hardware Company against Amos Pylman and others. Judgment in favor of defendant named, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for appellant.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Appellant makes the mistake of assuming that this is a case for the application of the section of the Code relating to the condition wherein there has been not an actual completion of the building, but a mere cessation from labor. If that were true, the building would not be deemed completed until 30 days after such cessation.

But, as pointed out in our former opinion, the evidence and the finding were to the effect that the building was actually completed on May 2, 1914. If respondent, Pylman, had relied upon the circumstances of the cessation of labor, regardless of actual completion, as the starting point for the statutory period within which a claim for lien must be filed, then there might be some merit in appellant's contention that its lien was filed in time. We have, however, no such case, and there is no occasion to invoke such provision of the Code. The language of the statute seems entirely too plain to permit of serious disagreement. Unless we are to disregard its unequivocal mandate, that the lien must be filed in any event within 90 days of the completion of the building, we must hold that appellant was too late. To the authorities cited in our former opinion we may add these two late decisions by our Supreme Court, in which the 90-day period of limitation is emphasized: Bird v. American Surety Co., 175 Cal. 631, 166 Pac. 1009; Hogan Lumber Co. v. Nichols, 170 Pac. 1106. As to the latter decision is may be said that Sunset Lumber Co. v. Batchelder, 167 Cal. 572, 140 Pac. 35, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 664, cited therein, involved work done under the old statute when both occupancy and cessation from labor were required to constitute constructive completion in the sense of the statute.

We adhere to the views expressed in our former opinion as follows:

"The action was against the owner and the contractor of a building for materials furnished for the use of said building, and for foreclosure of a mechanic's lien. Plaintiff recovered judgment against the contractor for the amount of the claim, but judgment for costs was entered in favor of defendant Pylman, from which the appeal has been taken. The court found that the work on the building was begun in the month of October, 1913, 'and was completed on May 2, 1914, * * * and was then and there occupied by said owner as completed, and at the same time the said defendant Pylman and his family moved into and occupied said building and began then and there openly and publicly to use and occupy the same as their place of residence, and they ever since have continued to so use and occupy said premises and to reside thereon.'

"It was also found that the owner had fully paid the contractor, and that the material was furnished by plaintiff at the instance and request of said contractor, but 'that no materials furnished by the plaintiff were used in said building after the 2d day of May, 1914,' although on the 10th of July following, plaintiff sent to said building four special hinges of small value which had been previously ordered by the contractor, and they were afterward paid for by the owner. It was also found that plaintiff filed its claim of lien for record on August 8, 1914. Indeed, it was so alleged in the complaint and not denied. The court concluded 'that the time to file liens for labor or materials furnished in the construction of said building began to run on the 2d day of May, 1914, and the time to file liens thereon expired on the 31st day of July, 1914, and prior to the filing of plaintiff's alleged lien.'

[1] "As to the finding in reference to the completion of the building, there can be no possible doubt of the sufficiency of the evidence in its support. It was stipulated at the trial that the Pylmans were living in the house on April 28, 1914, and from that time continuously. Nellie Pylman testified that on the 28th day of April the contractor had everything done with the exception of putting on a few hooks on the screen doors and a very few little necessary things, and that this was attended to within a few days and that the building was then accepted by them. It appears, also, that on April 13th the owner and contractor had a settlement and at that time agreed to eliminate certain work from the contract, and deductions were made for the things omitted. This was in accordance with the provisions of the contract between the parties, and the evidence shows that the contract, as thus modified, was completely executed.

"We have therefore not only constructive but actual completion of the building not later than May 2, 1914. As to the circumstances of occupation and acceptance of the building, section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that: 'In all cases any of the following shall be deemed equivalent to a completion for all purposes of this chapter:' (1) 'The occupation or use of a building, improvement or structure by the owner,' or (2) 'the acceptance by said owner of said building, improvement or structure.' Hence, it is entirely clear that we cannot question the finding of the court that said building for all the purposes of filing a mechanic's lien was completed on May 2, 1914.

"In reference to certain facts which the law declares to be sufficient to support the conclusion that the building for the purpose of a lien has been completed, it may be stated that the statute has undergone certain changes, which are pointed out in various decisions of the courts. From 1887 to 1897 said section of the statute limited the operation of the occupation or use and acceptance to those cases wherein there was a duly recorded contract, the Legislature having provided 'and in case of contracts, the occupation,' etc. In the latter year the section was amended so as to make occupation and acceptance apply to all cases, but a further amendment was added to the effect that either must be coupled with cessation from labor for 30 days in order to constitute constructive completion. These changes are fully discussed in Robison v. Mitchel, 159 Cal. 586, 114 Pac. 984, and we need not dwell upon them further.

[2] "Then comes the amendment of 1911, which applies to cases wherein the contract has not as well as those wherein it has been recorded; and, as clear as language can make it, the section now provides that any of the three circumstances shall constitute constructive completion, namely: (1) Occupation of the building; (2) acceptance of the building by the owner; and (3) cessation from labor for 30 days.

"By a sort of metaphysical refinement, appellant seeks to make it appear that cessation from labor for the period of 30 days must still be added to the other circumstances above mentioned to constitute completion, but the section is too plain to admit of discussion. Indeed, it is pointed out in Hughes Mfg. Co. v. Hathaway, 174 Cal. 48, 161 Pac. 1159, that the phrase 'completion of the building,' as used in the last clause of said section, 'must be understood to mean either the actual completion, or the completion by cessation of labor for thirty days upon the building, etc., or completion by occupation or acceptance, as the case may be.'

"The case is virtually as strong upon the theory of actual completion, as constructive by occupation or acceptance, since it was competent for the parties to provide for changes in the plans, and to so alter the contract, and thus have a completely executed agreement. White v. Soto, 82 Cal. 654, 23 Pac. 210; Gilliam v. Brown, 116 Cal. 454, 48 Pac. 486; Anderson v. Johnston, 120 Cal. 657, 53 Pac. 264.

"Nor is there any doubt as to the conclusion that plaintiff's claim of lien was filed too late.

"It is to be observed that the materialman has 30 days after he ceases to furnish materials within which to file said claim, and, upon the pretense of having furnished said hinges on July 10th, plaintiff claims to have brought itself within this provision. But the concluding portion of said section requires 'that all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building, improvement or structure,' etc.

[3] "Appellant contends that this time limit was waived for the reason that no notice of completion was filed by the owner. As to this, appellant is in error.

"Said section 1187 does indeed provide: 'In case such notice be not * * * filed then the said owner and all persons deraigning title from or claiming any interest through him shall be estopped in any proceedings for the foreclosure of any lien provided for in this chapter from maintaining any defense therein based on the ground that said lien was not filed within the time provided in this chapter.' This refers to the completion of the contract under which the material was furnished or to the labor done, and if notice of such completion is not filed by the owner he waives the 30-day limitation. Hughes v. Hathaway, supra.

"But the 90-day limitation applies to all cases. The concluding clause of the section makes this plain: 'Provided that all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days,' etc.

"Such is, also, the view taken by the courts. In the Robison Case, supra, referring to the foregoing clause, the court said: 'This would seem to fix a time limit within which all claims must be filed, regardless of whether the owner has filed his notice of completion or not.'

"In the Hughes Case, supra, it is declared: 'If no notice of completion is filed, the claimant is only required to see that his claim is filed before the expiration of the period of 90 days after the completion of the building, that is, of the building as a whole, as provided in the last clause of the section.'

"National Lumber Co. v. Kennedy, 28 Cal. App. 780, 154 Pac. 25, contains this declaration: 'The Legislature deemed such period ample time for otherwise obtaining information as to the time of completion. The provision that "all claims of lien must be filed within ninety days after the completion of any building" could serve no purpose other than to terminate the time within which the claim of lien might be filed. Such is the plain import of the language used.'

"The foregoing ought to set the matter at rest, and no further comment is called for.

[4] "As to the last item furnished by appellant, it should be said further that the hinges were never used in the building, and therefore they did not and could not furnish the basis for a lien, and, if no lien could be claimed for them, it logically follows that the time when they were delivered could not be taken into account in the determination of the question whether the notice of lien was filed within the statutory period.

" 'It is well settled by many decisions in this state that to entitle a materialman to a lien the materials must be furnished to be used and must actually be used in the construction of the building against which a lien is sought to be enforced.' Stimson v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 141 Cal. 32, 74 Pac. 357.

"That the last item when not used in the construction of the building must be disregarded in computing the time is expressly held in P. T. Walton Lumber Company v. Cox, 29 Okl. 237, 116 Pac. 798. Therein, certain doors were ordered and delivered but not used, and the Supreme Court of Oklahoma said that they constituted no proper item of charge on the lien statement, and that the date of the last item which was used was the one to be considered in the inquiry whether the material was furnished within the 60-day period required by the statute.

[5] "Again, it appears that the order for the hinges was a separate, distinct, and independent contract or order from the other orders given, and therefore it could not affect in any way the right to file a lien for the other materials. The point is considered in the case of Barrows v. Knight, 55 Cal. 155. Other authorities of similar import are Phillips on Mechanic's Liens (3d Ed.) §§ 324, 325, 326 and 327; Lane & Bodley Co. v. Jones, 79 Ala. 156; Maryland Brick Co. v. Dunkerly, 85 Md. 199, 36 Atl. 761; Brunt v. Farinholt, 121 Md. 126, 88 Atl. 42; Cross v. Eyerley, 86 Neb. 516, 125 N. W. 1085.

[6] "It seems equally plain that the hinges must be entirely eliminated from consideration, for the reason that payment in full was made for them and accepted. But to avoid confusion, we deem it proper to add that, if the hinges had been used in the building in pursuance of a contract therefor, such circumstance would not save the lien upon the theory that the claim was filed within 30 days thereafter. Indeed, the 30-day requirement was waived, as we have heretofore seen. But if the hinges had been so used, such use might have been regarded as extending the time of the completion of the building so as to avoid the bar of the 90-day period. In other words, under the circumstances suggested, the court would not permit the owner to say that the building had been completed prior to the use of said material, and therefore that the notice of lien was filed too late.

"In the final brief, for the first time, appellant claims that the judgment must be reversed 'for the failure of the court to find that the lien was not filed within 90 days after the plaintiff had ceased to furnish materials.' In view of the fact that it does appear from the findings that said notice of lien was not filed within 90 days after the completion of the building, the said consideration would be immaterial.

"However, appellant is in error in the statement. The court specifically finds when the materials were furnished, including the date of the last item, as appears in paragraphs 5 and 6 of the findings, and, also, when the notice of lien was filed. Thus is the point covered.

"It seems hardly necessary to notice the cases cited by appellant, as they are so easily distinguished from the one before us; but we may refer to them briefly.

"In Yost v. Roux, 27 Cal. 307, 149 Pac. 781, the materials for which the lien was claimed were actually used in the building, and the notice of lien was filed within 90 days of the completion of the building, as found by the court. In fact, it was properly held by this court that, as to the materialman, the building was not completed until his materials were used; the main contention there being as to whether the lien should be filed within 30 days of the completion of the building or of the time when the claimant 'ceased to furnish materials.'

"Schwartz v. Knight, 74 Cal. 432, 16 Pac. 235, has no similarity to the case at bar. Therein, the filing of the notice of lien was held to be premature because the building had not been completed. Under the provisions of said section 1187, as it existed at that time, it was held that, as the plaintiffs were not original contractors, 'the law required them to file their lien within thirty days after the completion of the building.'

"In Willamette Steam Mills Lumbering & Mfg. Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629, several interesting questions growing out of the Mechanic's Lien Law are learnedly discussed, but the decision has no particular bearing upon the question involved herein. What was said in reference to said section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be regarded with the recollection of the fact that it was amended before the action was brought. Therein, it was held that, in the case of a contract not recorded, a laborer or materialman in order to perfect his lien must file it within 30 days after the completion of the building, or after there had been a cessation of labor for 30 days upon the unfinished building.

"In the case of Boscus v. Waldmann, 31 Cal. App. 245, 160 Pac. 180, decided by this court, it appears that the notice of lien was filed within 90 days after the completion of the building, and the discussion in reference to the notice to be given by the owner was addressed to the 30-day provision of the statute."

The judgment is affirmed.

GLOBE GRAIN & MILLING CO. v. WALKER CONST. CO. (Civ. 2606.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 29, 1918.)

SALES ⊂=359(2) — ACTION FOR PURCHASE PRICE—EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover the purchase price of rolled barley, where plaintiff showed that the barley when sacked had been weighed, and that those weights were the ones charged against the defendant, it made out a prima facie case, which was not disturbed by testimony that rolled barley would shrink, where it was not shown to what extent it would shrink, or that the shrinkage would be more than nominal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by the Globe Grain & Milling Company against the Walker Construction Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. D. Noel, of El Centro, for appellant.
Herbert L. Iasigi, of El Centro, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff awarding a sum of money found to be due on an account for merchandise sold by the plaintiff to the defendant.

But one point is made upon the appeal. It is claimed that plaintiff did not sustain the burden of proof by showing that the grain alleged to have been sold and delivered to defendant was of the weight for which charge was made. We think that there is nothing in the point. The evidence showed that a course of dealing had been had between the plaintiff and defendant for a number of years, during which time it was the custom of the defendant to send its drivers to the warehouse of the plaintiff with orders for grain, consisting mainly of two kinds, whole barley and rolled barley. Duplicate invoices were prepared at the time of delivery, showing the items of merchandise delivered and the weights thereof, copy of which was received by each driver with the grain so purchased. Plaintiff's witnesses testified that the rolled barley was sacked 75 pounds to the bag being correctly weighed at the time of the sacking thereof; that as to the whole grain, that was weighed out when sold. That the grain sold to defendant was handled in this manner, the rolled barley being delivered as of weight 75 pounds to the sack, and the weight of the whole grain ascertained at the time the drivers received it. On cross-examination of plaintiff's witness, defendant asked as to whether it was not a fact that after rolled barley was sacked it would shrink in weight by being stored, and the witness replied that it might do so; he further testified that he did not know how long this rolled barley which the defendant received had been sacked prior to delivery; that possibly it might have been sacked several weeks. No attempt was made by defendant to show what the shrinkage in weight would amount to—whether of considerable amount or nominal. Neither was it shown how long this particular barley had remained in storage. We think that where the plaintiff showed that the rolled barley when sacked had been accurately weighed, and that those weights were the ones charged against the defendant, it made out a prima facie case. It was not shown by the cross-examination, as we have noted, that any shrinkage over any length of time, long or short, would be more than nominal, and hence, in our opinion, nothing appeared before the court in evidence which is sufficient to disturb the prima facie case so established in plaintiff's behalf.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WATTERSON et al. v. CRUSE. (L. A. 4530.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 7, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸110—ORDERS APPEALABLE—DENIAL OF NEW TRIAL.

Since the amendment of 1915 to Code Civ. Proc. § 963, an appeal cannot be taken from an order denying a new trial.

2. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸24, 25—LOCATION OF MINING CLAIM—EFFECT OF ABANDONMENT OF MILL SITE.

Where locator of a mill site under the first division of Rev. St. U. S. § 2337 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4645), ceases by reason of abandonment or forfeiture to be the proprietor of the vein or lode, the right to the associated mill site is also ended.

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸26 — RELOCATION—MILL SITES.

Where a locator of a mining claim abandoned or forfeited the same, together with the mill site, under Rev. St. U. S. § 2334 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4642), a relocator, under section 2322 (section 4618), had the right of possession and enjoyment of buildings and improvements which had been so affixed to the land by the original locator as to become a part of it.

4. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸24, 25—ABANDONMENT OR FORFEITURE OF LOCATION — FIXTURES.

The status of a locator of a mining claim is not that of a mere licensee, his possession having the attributes of a title in fee; and hence there is no implied agreement that he has a reasonable time after forfeiture or abandonment to remove fixtures.

5. FIXTURES ⟸9—RIGHT OF REMOVAL.

While things affixed to the soil ordinarily belong to the owner of the soil, there may be a right of removal arising from the agreement of the parties or their relation. Civ. Code, §§ 660, 661, 1013, 1019.

6. FIXTURES ⟸24—RIGHT OF REMOVAL—LICENSEE.

One who has affixed improvements to land under license from the owner is generally held to have a right to remove them within a reasonable time after the termination of the license.

Action by W. W. Watterson and another against W. D. Cruse. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

L. C. Hall, of Bishop, for appellant.
A. H. Swallow, of Bishop, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. On July 2, 1912, Southern Belle Mines Company, a corporation, was the owner and in possession of three mill sites which had been located and used in connection with certain lode mining claims theretofore located by said mining company. On the mill sites there had been erected a quartz mill, a dwelling house, and a boarding house. A barn and office building stood on one of the mining claims. On said day the corporation sold the quartz mill and the other buildings to the plaintiffs, with the right to remove the structures in the future. During the year 1913 the Mines Company performed no labor and made no improvements upon said mining claims or mill sites. On January 1, 1914, the defendant and one Sproul (whose interest was subsequently transferred to defendant) made discovery of a mineral bearing lode, and located thereon a lode mining claim. On March 31, 1914, defendant made a similar discovery and location of a second claim. Everything necessary to constitute a valid mining location was done in each instance. The boundaries of the claims thus located included the ground occupied by the mill and other buildings above mentioned. In May, 1914, the defendant commenced to remove some of the buildings, whereupon plaintiffs brought this action, seeking an injunction to restrain the defendant from so doing, or from preventing the plaintiffs from removing the structures. The court gave judgment, declaring the plaintiffs to be the owners of the improvements, and allowing them to remove the same within two months. The decree also enjoined any interference with such removal during the two months' period.

[1] The defendant appeals from the judgment. His attempted appeal from the order denying a new trial is nugatory; the order having been made after the amendment of 1915 to section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Gray v. Cotton, 174 Cal. 256, 162 Pac. 1019.

[2] There is no controversy over the facts, which are here stated as they were found by the court. The only question is whether the ownership and right of possession of the buildings was in the plaintiffs or the defendant. These buildings stood in part upon mining claims and in part upon mill sites. No legal distinction can be drawn in this regard; the case being the same as if it involved improvements upon mining claims alone. Under the mining law mill sites may be located either in connection with the ownership of a vein or lode or independently of the ownership of a mine by the owner of a quartz mill or reduction works. Rev. St. U. S. § 2337 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4645). The findings in this case expressly declare that the mill sites in question were located and used in connection with lode mining claims owned by the Mines Company, "and not otherwise." The company's right was therefore founded upon the first provision of section 2337, the one permitting the location of a mill site as an adjunct to a lode claim. Where the locator of such a site ceases, by reason of abandonment or forfeiture, to be the proprietor of the vein or lode, the right to the associated mill site is also ended. 2 Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 564.

[3] By the failure of the Mines Company to perform labor or make improvements during 1913, its mining locations (and the connecting mill sites) became open to relocation (Rev. St. U. S. § 2334 [U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4642]), and, upon a valid location by others, the right of the original locator to the occupancy and use of the land embraced within the boundaries of the new locations was forfeited. Thereupon the relocator was clothed with "the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of all the surface included within the lines of the location." Rev. St. U. S. § 2322 (U. S. Comp. St. 1916, § 4618). This carried with it the right of possessing and enjoying everything which had been so affixed to the land as to become a part of it. Mr. Lindley states the rule thus:

"Such improvements or betterments as have been placed upon the property by the original locator, if they fall within the class designated as fixtures, become a part of the realty, and the subsequent appropriation of the land carries with it, necessarily, whatever may be affixed to it. Prior to the determination of his estate by the perfection of a relocation, it cannot be doubted that the prior locator may sever and remove all machinery, buildings, and other improvements which, by the manner of their attachment to the soil, have become a part of the freehold. But his right of entry for that purpose ceases when his estate is terminated." 2 Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 409.

Notwithstanding the respondents' vigorous attack upon this passage, we are satisfied that it is a correct statement of the law.

[4-6] That the structures here involved constituted fixtures, as that term is defined in our Code (Civ. Code, §§ 660, 661), is conceded. This does not finally determine which of the contending parties is entitled to them. While things affixed to the soil ordinarily belong to the owner of the soil, there may be a right of removal arising from the agreement of the parties or their relation. Civ. Code, §§ 1013, 1019. Thus, he who has affixed improvements to land under a license from the owner is generally held to have a right to remove them within a reasonable time after the termination of the license. Bronson on Fixt. §

106; 19 Cyc. 1056. An agreement for such right of removal is implied from the circumstances. The respondents seek to apply this rule to the case at bar. But there is no real analogy between the status of the locator of a mining claim and that of a mere licensee. While the paramount fee remains in the government until it has issued its patent, yet as to every one else—

"the estate acquired by a perfected mining location possesses all the attributes of a title in fee, and so long as the requirements of the law with reference to continued development are satisfied, the character of the tenure remains that of a fee." 2 Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 539; Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59; Hughes v. Devlin, 23 Cal. 501; Buchner v. Malloy, 155 Cal. 253, 100 Pac. 687.

The interest of the locator is treated as a vested estate. Hughes v. Devlin, supra; Clipper M. Co. v. Eli M. Co., 194 U. S. 220, 24 Sup. Ct. 632, 48 L. Ed. 944. It is true that the right may be forfeited by failure to do the required work, followed by a relocation. But such forfeiture is in no way similar to the revocation of a license. It may much more aptly be compared to the termination of the right of a vendee or option holder for failure to comply with the covenants or conditions upon which his right of possession and purchase depend. In such case the fixtures belong to the vendor, and the defaulting vendee or optionholder has no right to remove them. Pomeroy v. Bell, 118 Cal. 635, 50 Pac. 683; Hemenway v. Cutler, 51 Me. 407; Westgate v. Wixon, 128 Mass. 304; 10 Cyc. 1061. In Pomeroy v. Bell, supra, the court explains the rule, saying, in effect, that no agreement for removal can be implied where fixtures are annexed by a vendee, because such vendee, unlike a tenant, makes the improvements in contemplation of becoming the owner of the land. So here, at the time the Southern Belle Mines Company attached the improvements to the land, it was vested with the right to hold the land so long as it did the annual work required, and thereafter until a valid location was made by another. The loss of its right resulted from its own failure to meet the conditions which, as it knew, were imposed by the law. It placed the improvements upon land in which it had an interest, and in which, presumably, it expected to acquire an estate in fee. These circumstances preclude the inference of any agreement that it should be allowed to sever and remove the buildings after its rights in the land had terminated.

When the defendant made the locations under which he claims, the interest of the former locator came to an end. By his locations, the defendant acquired the exclusive right of possession and enjoyment of the land, and this necessarily included everything that was a part of the land. The plaintiffs could not, of course, by their purchase from the Mines Company, acquire any better title than their grantor had.

There was therefore no foundation for the decree giving to the plaintiffs a right of removal of the fixtures, or for the adjudication that the plaintiffs were the owners thereof. Upon the facts found, the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to enter judgment in favor of the defendant.

JACUZZI v. JACUZZI et al. (Civ. 1846.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 31, 1918.)

1. Work and Labor ⟸22—Action—Sufficiency of Complaint.

In action for compensation for work and labor performed, complaint must allege nonpayment.

2. Trial ⟸397(1)—Findings—Nonpayment—Necessity.

In action for compensation for work and labor performed, court's failure to make findings as to defendant's nonpayment of compensation was ground for reversal notwithstanding insufficiency of defendant's evidence to show that payment had been made; such insufficiency merely entitling plaintiff to a finding in his favor on issue of nonpayment.

3. Trial ⟸404(1)—Action for Compensation—Cross-Complaint—Findings.

In action for compensation for services performed at defendant's request, in which defendant filed cross-complaint, where facts alleged in cross-complaint were not inconsistent with those alleged in complaint, being merely an offset in part, court's finding of indebtedness due plaintiff necessarily involved a consideration of the claim in the cross-complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Rauchens Jacuzzi against Frank Jacuzzi and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Rose & Scoville, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ernest M. Torchia, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff sued defendants for a sum of money, alleging that the debt was incurred by defendants for work and labor performed at defendants' request. Appellant Remington filed an answer denying the indebtedness, and also a cross-complaint to which plaintiff made denial. The court found that plaintiff was entitled to recover, and rendered judgment accordingly. This appeal was taken from the judgment, and is presented on the judgment roll alone.

[1, 2] The contentions of appellant are that the court failed to find on the issue as to the nonpayment of the plaintiff's claim, and also failed to make particular findings on the issues presented by the cross-complaint. It is true that the court failed to make a finding as to the nonpayment of the debt, merely finding that within two years before the commencement of the action labor and services were rendered by plaintiff at the special instance and request of appellant, and that the reasonable value thereof was a certain sum, stating it. The complaint was sufficient in its allegation as to nonpayment, and the answer took issue with it as to that fact. The allegation of nonpayment made in the complaint was essential to the statement of a good cause of action.

"It has been held in numerous cases that a party suing upon a contract to pay money must show a breach of the contract—that is, must allege the nonpayment of the money which he seeks to recover—or his complaint states no cause of action, and may be assailed by a general demurrer. In Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 80 Cal. 506 [22 Pac. 939], the last case in which this rule is declared, it is said: 'The complaint was fatally defective in this respect. It contained no allegation of nonpayment; nor is there any allegation from which such nonpayment can be implied.'" Grant v. Sheerin, 84 Cal. 197, 23 Pac. 1094.

Respondent cites certain cases dealing with the sufficiency of findings where no issue was made by the pleadings. Those authorities are not applicable to the case here. That the trial court is required to make findings upon all material issues seems not to be controverted, and that a failure to make such findings is ground for reversal. Kusel v. Kusel, 147 Cal. 52, 81 Pac. 297. The case is not helped by a consideration of the contention, sustained by authorities (Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 Pac. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127), that the defense of payment was affirmative on the defendant, and that, in the absence of any finding shown in the judgment-roll determining that issue, it will be presumed no evidence was introduced thereon. Assuming that no evidence was presented by the defendant sufficient to show that payment had been made, this fact would only have aided the plaintiff to the extent of entitling him to a finding in his favor on the issue.

[3] As to the failure to make findings on the issues presented by the cross-complaint, we agree with respondent's counsel when he says:

"The facts alleged in the cross-complaint are not inconsistent with those alleged in the complaint, being merely an offset in part, and the finding of indebtedness due plaintiff necessarily involves a consideration of the claim in the cross-complaint."

In Stewart v. Hollingsworth, 129 Cal. 177, 61 Pac. 936, the court said:

"In the absence of any bill of exceptions or other showing that evidence was given upon the issues presented by the cross-complaint, the omission of the court to make findings upon such issues is not a ground for the reversal"

—there being added in the opinion the statement which is set forth in substance by counsel for respondent and which we have quoted from his brief.

The judgment is reversed.

EVANS v. WIXOM. (Civ. 2603.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 4, 1918.)

1. False Imprisonment ⟸20(1)—Sufficiency of Complaint—Legal Warrant.

Complaint for false imprisonment did not state a cause of action, where it did not allege that plaintiff's arrest was not under a legal warrant.

2. Malicious Prosecution ⟸51 — Complaint—Termination of Prosecution.

A complaint for malicious prosecution of proceeding in which plaintiff was charged with being an insane person was insufficient, where it did not allege that the proceeding to determine plaintiff's sanity had terminated.

3. Appeal and Error ⟸1170(3)—Review—Harmless Pleading.

Failure to draw complaint so it was clear whether action was for malicious prosecutions or for false imprisonment, and insufficiency of complaint to state cause of action on either theory, was not rendered harmless by Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that judgment will not be reversed for error in pleading not resulting in a miscarriage of justice.

4. Appeal and Error ⟸1170(3)—Review—Harmless Error — Construction of Statute.

Const. art. 6, § 4½, providing that judgment will not be reversed upon ground of error as to any matter of pleading not resulting in miscarriage of justice, will be liberally construed, but will not be permitted to destroy pleading as a necessary element in legal procedure.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by Jesse Evans against Alexander Wixom. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Childers & Bruce, of El Centro, and Walter H. Sprague, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Dan V. Noland, of El Centro, D. L. Ault, of Calexico, and Walter B. Kibbey, of El Centro, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. [1, 2] Appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages caused by certain wrongful acts of the defendant. The complaint is so drawn that it is not clear whether the plaintiff intended to allege a cause of action for false imprisonment or a cause of action for malicious prosecution of a certain proceeding in the superior court whereby the plaintiff herein was charged with being an insane person. If we consider the action as one for false imprisonment, the complaint does not state a cause of action, since it does not show that the plaintiff's arrest by the sheriff in the former proceeding was not under a legal warrant. If we accept the other alternative theory of the action, the complaint does not state a cause of action, since it does not appear therefrom that the proceeding to determine the question of the plaintiff's sanity has yet terminated.

Defendant's appeal comes before the court upon the judgment roll alone. The record shows that the defendant demurred to the complaint and the demurrer was overruled; whereupon the defendant answered, and the case went to trial before a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The judgment conforms to that verdict.

Appellant contends for a reversal of the judgment upon the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action. Counsel for respondent have not attempted to defend the complaint. On the contrary, they say that—

"For the purpose of this argument, we are willing to concede that there was an error in pleading."

They endeavor to sustain their judgment by contending that under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution of this state, as amended in November, 1914, the judgment must be affirmed unless after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice; and that this cannot be ascertained on an appeal from the judgment roll alone.

[3, 4] If we are to agree with respondent's position on this matter, we will be required to presume something far beyond the lines established by the presumption that the facts alleged in the complaint were determined in favor of the plaintiff by the jury. We must also presume that any other facts, though not within the issues raised by the pleadings, were actually tried and determined if such determination was necessary to make out a cause of action for the plaintiff. We are satisfied that the constitutional provision above mentioned was not intended to carry the protection of judgments to any such extreme length. The phrase, "any error as to any matter of pleading," in said section 4½, is entitled to very liberal construction, but not to a construction which will destroy pleading as a necessary element in legal procedure.

The judgment is reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Willis I. Morrison, Judge.

Action by Anna Kengel and husband against John Stuart and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Harry W. McNutt and Delphin M. Delmas, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Trusten P. Dyer and N. B. Nelson, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. This is an appeal presented on the judgment roll and is taken by the plaintiffs from a judgment entered in favor of defendants, quieting title to a small parcel of land. It is contended that on the findings of fact made by the court the judgment cannot be maintained. The findings are somewhat prolix and in some portions thereof, particularly in paragraphs VIII, X, and XI, the land is misdescribed; the word "east" being used twice instead of "west." As this misdescription is plainly an error and as other portions of the findings correctly state the terms of description, it may be taken that there is no dispute in regard to that matter.

Abstracting the facts found by the court, the case may be briefly stated: In the year

1897, one Knutson was the owner of a rectangular plot of ground containing 5.10 acres. On April 24, 1897, Knutson deeded to one Tasker the "east 2 acres" of said land, and on August 8, 1904, Tasker, by same deed description, conveyed the said two acres to defendants here. It will be seen, then, that after the conveyance to Tasker there remained of the plot of ground in the ownership of Knutson the west 3.10 acres. However, in 1899, Knutson conveyed to one Gresenthwaite by deed the "west 3 acres" of the land then owned by him, and in December, 1905, Gresenthwaite conveyed to plaintiffs, by same deed description, the said west 3 acres. Knutson retained title to an intervening strip between the east 2 acres and the west 3 acres, consisting of .10 of an acre. On the 26th of November, 1913, Knutson, by quitclaim deed, transferred all of his title in the entire tract of land to the plaintiffs, excepting in his deed the east 2 acres, which he had in 1897 transferred to Tasker. The result of this quitclaim conveyance was prima facie to give title to plaintiffs in the .10 of an acre of land constituting the narrow strip lying between the easterly and westerly portions of the plot. It is this narrow strip that is made the subject of this suit, as to which plaintiffs sue to quiet their title. Gresenthwaite, in 1903, erected a fence on the easterly boundary of the west 3 acres, which fence divided the 3 acres from the easterly portion of land and immediately divided the west 3 acres from the strip in controversy. At the time of and prior to the purchase by the defendants of the east 2 acres from Tasker, defendants were told by Gresenthwaite that the fence was correctly located and marked the boundary line between the two properties. Upon that representation the defendants relied and made their purchase from Tasker. Defendants paid the taxes levied and assessed on the east 2 acres and the plaintiffs on the west 3.10 acres. It would appear from the findings, however, that the plaintiffs did not claim the ownership of the .10 of an acre composing the strip in dispute, until after they received the quitclaim deed from Knutson in November, 1913. This action was brought in May, 1914. As we gather from the findings upon which judgment was entered in favor of defendants, the trial judge concluded that, by reason of the statements of Gresenthwaite to defendants that the fence which he had erected was located upon the correct line of division, the plaintiffs, Gresenthwaite's successors in interest, were estopped from making any claim to the disputed strip. The findings also recite that prior to the building of the fence the boundary line was uncertain, this finding evidently being made for the purpose of determining in favor of defendants an additional issue as to an agreed boundary line, so as to bring the case within the ruling made in Young v. Blakeman, 153 Cal. 477, 95 Pac. 888, and Grant's Pass Land, etc., Co. v. Brown, 168 Cal. 456, 143 Pac. 754.

There is no finding from which it can be deduced that Knutson in making his conveyance did not intend to reserve title to the small strip of land to himself, or, if he did intend to convey it, as to which parcel it was intended to be attached—whether the easterly two acres or the westerly three acres. The bald fact is then apparent that neither the defendants nor the plaintiffs, prior to the making of the quitclaim deed to plaintiffs by Knutson, had any title in the strip of land, unless they had obtained it by adverse possession, which the facts as found do not show. It follows also, necessarily, that when Gresenthwaite stated that the fence which he had erected was on the boundary line, he was altogether correct in that statement, so far as the land conveyed to him was concerned, for between the fence and the westerly line there was 3 acres of ground, all that his deed called for. On the other hand, the defendants also obtained the 2 acres of land called for by their deed, exclusive of the strip in dispute. The court finds that defendants did not pay the taxes upon the strip during any of the time; hence they obtained no title by adverse possession. Under the facts set out in the findings, had Knutson continued to retain title to the strip, instead of quitclaiming to the plaintiffs, and had the defendants brought an action against Knutson to quiet title, it must be apparent that they could not have prevailed. For precisely the same reasons, they were not entitled to judgment against the plaintiffs, who had succeeded to Knutson's title in the disputed land. We have already suggested reasons why the finding as to an estoppel against the plaintiffs is not supported by the facts. At the time the alleged representations were made by Gresenthwaite as to the fence marking the correct boundary line, those statements were true; subsequently the plaintiffs obtained a deed from the true owner, which transferred title to them of the additional strip of land. Their situation as to the ownership of the disputed strip was different after they obtained the quitclaim deed than it was at the time of the making of the alleged representations.

For the reasons given, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

That a foreign corporation in a single instance acts as trustee under a deed of trust for the holders of mortgage bonds, collects interest, takes title to property as security, and otherwise discharges the duty of a trustee, does not constitute "carrying on business" in the state within Civ. 2. EVIDENCE ⟸158(27) — ADMISSIBILITY — SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

In a foreclosure suit under a deed of trust, evidence by a bondholder that the mortgagor had issued a certain number of mortgage bonds was inadmissible; the bonds themselves, with the proceedings under which they were executed, being the best evidence.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1050(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action to foreclose a deed of trust securing corporate bonds, evidence by a bondholder relative to the number of bonds issued, although inadmissible as not the best evidence, was rendered harmless by testimony as to delivery of the bonds not objected to, and that a copy of such bonds set forth in the complaint was substantially the same as the bonds to which witness referred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Suit by the Equitable Trust Company of New York against the Western Land & Power Company, August Anderson, Emily C. Dodge, and others, to foreclose a deed of trust. From a judgment for plaintiff, the two last-named defendants alone appeal. Affirmed.

R. M. Rankin, of Susanville, for appellants.

I. M. Peckham, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an action to foreclose a deed of trust or first mortgage on lands in Lassen county made by defendant power company to plaintiff to secure a $500,000 issue of first mortgage bonds of defendant power company, in two series of $1,000 and $500 denominations, respectively, as provided for by deed of trust.

The trust deed was made July 15, 1911, and was recorded August 1, 1911. Pursuant thereto, the power company issued 290 of the $1,000 bonds and 360 of the $500 bonds. The power company failing to pay the accrued interest, the majority bondholders requested the trustee to foreclose, and this action was instituted in compliance with that request.

September 20, 1912, appellant Anderson, having taken judgment against the power company for $671 on certain assigned labor claims, at execution sale thereunder bought the power company's equity of redemption in 280 acres of the land covered by the deed of trust, and, subsequently, April 27, 1914, conveyed an undivided half interest in the land so purchased to appellant Emily C. Dodge.

The action was tried September 1, 1916, and plaintiff had judgment foreclosing said deed of trust, which was entered October 26, 1916. The power company defaulted. Defendants Anderson and Dodge appeal from the judgment.

It is contended by appellants that the evidence is insufficient to support certain findings of fact by the court: That the evidence does not sustain the averment by the complainant, which was denied by the answer, that the power company "made, executed and delivered and issued for a valuable consideration" the bonds described in the complaint.

In establishing its case plaintiff introduced a certified copy of the statutes of the state of New York incorporating the plaintiff corporation and defining its powers and duties; also, a certified copy of the articles of incorporation of the defendant power company on file in the office of the secretary of state. Plaintiff then offered in evidence two sample copies of these bonds, one numbered D 36 for $500 and one numbered M 1 for $1,000. Objection was made as immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent—"incompetent particularly for the reason that it has not been shown that the plaintiff corporation is entitled to carry on business in the state of California or to acquire the title, the legal title, to any property. Mr. Peckham (plaintiff's attorney): That is not in issue by the pleadings and therefore stands admitted."

After argument, the court overruled the objection and admitted these sample copies of bonds as Exhibits 3 and 4. These samples purport to set forth the facts as to the power company's purpose in issuing the bonds. Sample D 36 recites that—

"This bond (one of the samples) is one of a series of coupon bonds of the Western Land & Power Company, numbered consecutively from D 1 to D 400 and from M 1 to M 300 both inclusive. * * * Subject to the terms of the mortgage or trust deed hereinafter referred to"—the aggregate amount not to exceed $500,000.

Other recitals follow not necessary to be stated. Sample M 1 is to like effect.

Plaintiff holds a charter under the laws of the state of New York; its place of business is in the city of New York, and the character of its business requires that it be there transacted; the bonds in question and the interest coupons are payable there. So far as appears, plaintiff has never transacted any business in this state, unless it can be said that to act as trustee for the holders of the power company's bonds, collect accruing interest, taking title to property as security, and otherwise discharging the duties of trustee can be said to violate section 408 of the Civil Code.

In Roseberry v. Valley Building & Loan Ass'n, 35 Colo. 132, 83 Pac. 637, it was said:

"The only business which plaintiff actually transacted in this state (Colorado) is that involved in this action. There is no averment that it has made any other loan or sold any other stock, and proof of the allegation which is made would be that plaintiff loaned money to defendant and took his mortgage. It has been repeatedly decided in this jurisdiction that a single act of business does not come within the purview of these statutes."

There the statutes are somewhat similar to ours.

The question was quite fully discussed in Ammons v. Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co., 5 Ind. T. 636, 82 S. W. 937, where an act of Congress was involved which required certain things to be done before any foreign corporation shall begin to "carry on business" in the Indian Territory. It was held:

"That a single act of business is not doing or carrying on business within the meaning of the act of Congress."

The rule is similarly stated in 13 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 869, and numerous cases cited in support of the text. It was held, in Wilson v. Peace, 85 S. W. 31, syl. (38 Tex. Civ. App. 234), that—

"The ownership of land (in Texas) by a foreign corporation, and the lease of the same on shares, and the assignment of the rent by it, do not constitute doing business in this state, in such sense as to require such corporation to obtain a permit from the secretary of state."

To like effect is the decision in the case of Louisville Property Co. v. Mayor and City Council of Nashville, 114 Tenn. 213, 84 S. W. 810.

[1] Respondent contends, aside from the decisions above pointed out, that the objection is an affirmative defense, not set up in the answer, and, in the absence of proof of noncompliance, the deed of trust had its usual effect. The legal title vested in the trustee, unless defendant showed from the records of the county the special facts showing it did not. However this may be, the cases seem to hold with much unanimity that an isolated act, such as is here shown, is not carrying on business in the state within the meaning of the statute.

The only objection made to the sample bonds was that plaintiff had not complied with the statute. The objection was properly overruled and the samples became part of the record.

At this point the deposition of Harry H. Gallinger, taken in San Francisco, was opened. Objection to its being read was made on the ground that the time given for taking the deposition was too short and on the further ground that a stipulation had been made to take Gallinger's deposition in New York City. The objection was overruled and the deposition admitted. It appeared that this witness was the holder of a majority of the bonds issued by the power company. Over objection that it was not the best evidence, the witness was permitted to testify, to the direct question, that the power company, on July 15, 1911, at the city of New York, "made and executed 700 first mortgage bonds each of which bore the date of July 15, 1911. * * * The Court: The record is the best evidence. Mr. Peckham: It is evidence of the number of bonds. It would be impractical for us to produce all the bonds issued. The Court: Objection overruled." Counsel handed witness the complaint and asked him to examine the copy of the bond set forth in paragraph VI and to state whether the bonds mentioned by the witness in his previous answer "were substantially in the words and figures of the copy of the bond in the complaint." The witness answered, "Yes, sir." He testified that he had none of the bonds with him: that they were with the Equitable Trust Company of New York and were deposited with the company in June, 1915. The witness, over objection that it was not the best evidence, testified that, after the execution of the bonds, as mentioned by him, and prior to the commencement of the action, the power company, "for a valuable consideration, made, executed, delivered, and issued 290 of the first mortgage bonds of the denomination of $1,000"; and he gave like answer as to 360 bonds of the denomination of $500. Counsel for plaintiff, in support of the questions, remarked:

"It is impracticable to produce every bond issued by this company, and we have sample copies of them before the court. * * * That is one of the bonds before the court, and this is testimony as to the number issued."

The witness then testified, to which there was no objection made, that the plaintiff company accepted the trust involved in the trust deed, dated July 15, 1911, and duly qualified thereunder and ever since has been and now is acting under that deed of trust and mortgage. He testified, also, without objection, that, on June 9, 1915, he presented to plaintiff at its office in New York certain described coupons calling for interest on said bonds and demanded payment; that payment was refused; that on that day the witness was the holder of a majority of the outstanding bonds of said power company. He was then asked to state whether or not on that date he "requested plaintiff to declare the principal and interest of all bonds secured by that first mortgage or trust deed and then and there outstanding to be due and payable immediately." Objection was made to the question that the demand is by the deed of trust required to be in writing and the writing is the best evidence, and, further, that the question calls for a conclusion of the witness. It appeared that this request was in writing. To the question was added a statement of the purpose of the request, to which like objection was made. At the suggestion of plaintiff's attorney, the objection was overruled, "subject to counsel's motion to strike out." No answer is in the record, but the witness was shown a paper which, the record states, "shows on its face that it is a carbon copy of that written request." The witness stated that it was a true copy of the original signed by him before a notary public. The copy was offered in evidence. Objection was made that this copy is secondary evidence; "that the original is filed with the plaintiff and presumed to be in the plaintiff's possession and is the best evidence * * * and has not been introduced or accounted for." The court seemed to be of the opinion that, as the original paper is in the possession of plaintiff, this copy was inadmissible to establish the fact in question, but "for the purposes of the deposition" the court overruled the objection. "Mr. Rankin (defendants' attorney): That didn't go to the extent of proving the allegation of the complaint? The Court: That is a question in my mind whether it goes that far or not, whether the court would receive it for that purpose. If it is evidence of that fact you have it in the record." The document, Exhibit B, was then read in evidence. Counsel for defendants then made a motion to strike out the answers given by the witness, and, after some remarks, said:

"The copy you offer, is it the demand that the Equitable Trust Company declare all bonds due and payable and so forth, is that the paper you referred to? Mr. Peckham: Yes. Mr. Rankin: Then I am mistaken. The Court: Motion denied."

It is not quite clear what counsel meant by saying he was mistaken; but, followed as it was by the ruling apparently different from the impression the court had of the admissibility of the document, we must conclude that counsel intended to waive his objection.

Mr. Peckham was then sworn as a witness and testified, without objection, that he personally served upon the power company the declaration of the Equitable Trust Company which was received by the power company June 19, 1915. This declaration recites the proceedings set forth in the complaint leading up to the default of the power company; that the holder of a majority of the bonds now outstanding of said company has filed a written request to declare the principal of said bonds due and payable immediately, and closing with the declaration that "the principal of all bonds secured by the said first mortgage or trust deed now outstanding is due and payable." It was then shown that, on June 23, 1915, plaintiff demanded of the power company payment of the principal sum of all outstanding bonds secured by said mortgage of $470,000, together with interest. The refusal of the power company to pay said demand was also shown.

[2, 3] Turning back to certain rulings of the court, we think the testimony of Witness Gallinger that the power company executed 700 first mortgage bonds was inadmissible. The bonds themselves, together with the proceedings of the power company under which they were executed, would be the best evidence. The witness, however, was permitted to testify, without objection, that the copy of these bonds as set forth in the complaint was substantially the same as the bonds to which he had just referred. The sample copies previously admitted recited the facts substantially as testified to by the witness.

A word as to the admission of Witness Gallinger's testimony that the power company executed and delivered to plaintiff the number of bonds in question.

It was held in Dickerman v. Northern Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 193, 194, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 316 (44 L. Ed. 423), that—

"It was sufficient to prove that the bonds were valid and were outstanding obligations of the company, and it was not necessary to show in whose hands they were or to require their production."

It was pointed out that the bonds were often widely scattered, making it impossible to produce them, and that "the practice has been to order a decree of foreclosure and sale without their production." It has been shown that the bonds in the present case are in the possession of the plaintiff for purposes of the trust. A sample copy is in evidence, and, without objection, it was shown that the bonds mentioned in the complaint are substantially in their terms the same as the sample. They import execution, consideration, and validity on their face, and their possession by plaintiff implies that they were delivered. There is sufficient evidence, admitted without objection, to show that the bonds mentioned in the complaint were delivered to plaintiff to be held and dealt with in accordance with the trust imposed upon it, and that the action is but the final step contemplated by all the parties in case of default by the power company.

Conceding error in the rulings above noted, they are not of such gravity as to justify the reversal of the judgment. It appears clearly enough that under no circumstances could a new trial give superiority to appellants' lien. The sale under which they claim is based upon a judgment entered more than a year after the recording of the deed of trust and mortgage given by the power company and the issuance and delivery of its bonds to the plaintiff for the purposes of the trust.

The judgment is affirmed.

O'BRIEN v. NEW METHOD CO-OP. LAUNDRY CO. (Civ. 2595.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 31, 1918.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⟸136(14) — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In negligence action, the fact of negligence or the lack of it was for the jury.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸702(1) — REVIEW — PRESUMPTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF CHARGE.

Where bill of exceptions does not contain all the instructions given by the court, but only those made the subject of the claim of error, it will be assumed on appeal that the whole charge would show no error, and that imperfections of instructions exhibited were harmonized and a correct statement of the law made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Agnes O'Brien against the New Method Co-Operative Laundry Company. From a judgment for defendant and from order denying motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James Donovan and John L. McGonigle, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Elmer R. McDowell and R. C. Gortner, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, entered upon a verdict returned by a jury. There is also an appeal taken from an order denying a motion for new trial.

Plaintiff was operating a shirt-ironing machine in the establishment of defendant. The machine was arranged in such a way that, after the shirt was placed upon a board or roller, the board was made, by mechanical means to pass forward and backward underneath hot rollers. The fingers of plaintiff's right hand were caught in the rollers and burned. She alleged that the machine was unsuitable and dangerous in that it would, without warning, act irregularly and "jump" and that because of the "jumping" her hand was caught and her fingers burned and injured. Defendant denied negligence on its part, and alleged, further, "that if plaintiff was injured in the operating of said machinery the said alleged accident was due to plaintiff's carelessness in operating the said shirt polisher." It is first contended that this allegation was insufficient to present the issue of contributory negligence. However, we find, upon examining the statement of the evidence, that testimony without objection was introduced tending to show, and from which the jury might rightly conclude, that in operating the machine plaintiff was habitually negligent in not giving close attention to her work, and that she had been advised that she should be careful and "keep her eye on the work while she was ironing, because the machine was dangerous." There was testimony also by others who operated the machine before and immediately after the accident that it was in good working order, and that it did not "jump," as the plaintiff asserted it did. It is very clear that the parties to the suit considered that the issue of contributory negligence was before the court, and that they tried the case upon that assumption. While there was a demurrer to the answer, it appears not to have been specially pointed to the alleged insufficiency of the plea of contributory negligence.

[1] Counsel for appellant further insist that, on the mere testimony as stated by the plaintiff that the machine worked in an irregular manner, a prima facie case was made out, and that there was no evidence sufficient to overcome that. Suffice it to say that it was for the jury to take the whole case as made by the evidence on behalf of both plaintiff and defendant and determine the fact of negligence or the lack of it.

[2] A number of instructions are referred to as having been given and refused, for which error is claimed. The bill of exceptions does not contain all of the instructions given by the court, but only those the giving of which and refusal to give which are made the subject of the claim of error. In such a state of the record we must assume that were the whole charge of the court before us, it would not show error, but that any imperfections of instructions as are exhibited here were harmonized, and that a correct statement of the law was made. Harris v. Barnhart, 97 Cal. 546, 32 Pac. 589; Churchill v. More, 4 Cal. App. 219, 88 Pac. 290. It necessarily must be said that from such a record this court would not be justified in determining that there had been a miscarriage of justice.

We find nothing in the argument presented upon this appeal which justifies interference with the judgment or order as entered.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; MYERS, Judge pro tem.

PEOPLE v. BAILEY. (Cr. 611.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Oct. 30, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1159(3)—REVIEW—CONFLICTING TESTIMONY.

An Appellate Court cannot interfere with the verdict of a jury made upon conflicting testimony unless the evidence is so unsubstantial as to amount to no proof at all.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

JAMES, J. Appeal from a judgment directing the imprisonment of the defendant in the state penitentiary.

Appellant was charged by an information of the district attorney with the crime of murder, alleged to have been committed on or about the 15th day of December, 1917, in the county of Imperial. There were two trials, the jury having disagreed at the first, and upon the second returned a verdict of manslaughter, carrying the recommendation that there be imposed "the minimum sentence." In view of the point made by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the conviction, we will relate the story of the crime, as the evidence shows it, with considerable detail, giving particular emphasis to all of the testimony introduced on behalf of the prosecution which, it is claimed, tends to show the defendant's guilt:

On December 15, 1917, appellant was the owner of a small store at a little place called Rockwood, in Imperial county. The deceased was a friend of the defendant, and resided alone in a small house or cabin a short distance away from the store, just how far does not appear. The deceased took his meals with appellant at the store. Another man, named Curran, was at the time residing with the defendant at the store. No other persons lived at that place. There was an apartment in the rear of the storeroom where there was a bed in which the men slept, and it was also in the rear part of the building that they prepared and ate their meals. At about 12 o'clock on the night preceding the alleged murder, a trapper, named Moore, knocked at the door of the store and awakened appellant. At the request of the trapper, Bailey went out and assisted him in finding a sack which he had brought on the stage with him and which he had mislaid in the darkness. This sack contained some vegetables and two quart bottles of intoxicating liquor, one being corn whisky and the other pure alcohol. The trapper remained through the night and at least through the larger portion of the next day. All of the three men, Curran, Moore, and appellant, were in the habit of using intoxicants to excess, as was also deceased. The three men first mentioned, after the arrival of the trapper, had some drinks, and on the following morning they again partook of the liquor, at least appellant and Curran did. At that time they used the pure alcohol, diluted with water, into which was mixed sugar. At the time for the morning meal on the 15th appellant went to the house of deceased and brought him over to the store to have breakfast. The deceased, it appears, there partook of the liquor. Later on in the morning, at perhaps about 10 o'clock, deceased and Curran went to a ranch owned by the deceased, which was located some distance out of the town of Rockwood. They returned from there between 12 and 1 o'clock, deceased going to his cabin, and Curran returning to the store of appellant. No witness saw Curran or the deceased at the time the latter reached his cabin, and from this point on, up to the time of the discovery of the dead body of deceased in his cabin, between 3 and 4 o'clock of the same afternoon, the story as to the movements of Curran and appellant is somewhat in dispute. It was several weeks after the alleged murder that appellant was arrested and charged with the crime, and up to the time of the first trial Curran was held as a witness in the custody of the sheriff in default of bond. After the first trial he was released, and it appears that he promptly disappeared, and the sheriff was unable to find and subpœna him when the second trial came on. His testimony, as given at the first trial, was read in evidence from the reporter's transcript, and it was this testimony that the prosecution mainly relied upon in the effort to fix the crime upon appellant.

We will proceed to the narrative of this testimony so given by Curran. The witness stated that upon returning from the ranch with deceased he left deceased at the latter's cabin and went on to the Bailey store; that he found Bailey seated at a table in the rear of the store, with the trapper, Moore, with a bottle of whisky before them, a portion of which had been consumed; that he found the empty bottle which he presumed had contained the alcohol lying on the floor, and this he threw away. Curran stated that he was pretty well intoxicated at the time; he felt badly; that he proceeded to the rear of the store, where the bed was, and lay down; that appellant came back where he was and remarked aloud that Curran had gone to bed, and then took a cover of some sort and laid it over him; that Bailey then went toward the front of the store and out; that in front of the store was a chair and a bench; that he (Curran) did not know where appellant went when he disappeared through the front of the store, and did not know whether he left the premises or not; that the witness went to sleep and remained asleep until about 3 p. m., when he awoke and found appellant seated in a chair in front of the store asleep; further, that a revolver was habitually kept about the store; that it was sometimes kept under the store counter, sometimes in a rice barrel, and sometimes under the pillow of the bed; that when he arrived from the ranch at 1 o'clock he noticed that appellant had the revolver stuffed down into his trousers, as he sat at the table with the trapper; that when he awoke in the afternoon he was still feeling badly; that he took a package of cigarettes over to a man working at a milling establishment near by, came back, and talked with appellant; that something was said about the deceased and also about preparing a meal; that he (the witness) went to the cabin of deceased to call him; that he found the deceased lying in a pool of blood dead, upon the floor of one of the rooms; that he immediately returned to the store, informed appellant of what he had found, and was instructed by appellant to call some of the men and notify the officials; that when these arrived, the party, including the witness and appellant, went over to the cabin and viewed the dead body, and they returned to the store; that appellant himself phoned to the sheriff; that the witness noticed some red marks or spots upon the trousers and shoes of appellant and called appellant's attention thereto, whereupon appellant informed him that he had spilled some catsup over them; that the witness told appellant that the spots "looked bad," whereupon appellant took off the trousers and washed his shoes. Other details given by the witness we do not regard as in any way presenting incriminating matter.

An officer who visited the store asked whether any weapons were kept about there, and was told by Curran that there were weapons, including a revolver; that he asked that the revolver be given him, and that Curran went to the bed and took the revolver from under the pillow; that it was a 38-caliber revolver, fully loaded, except that one chamber had been discharged; that there was about the weapon an appearance and smell as though the revolver had been discharged, as the witness said, within a few hours previous. No attempt was made by appellant to destroy or conceal the trousers, and portions of them were later taken for the purpose of having the spots analyzed. One witness, who was engaged in a laboratory in Los Angeles, testified that he had analyzed the coloring matter obtained from some of the spots, and that he had determined that it was human blood.

At no time did appellant make any statements which tended of themselves to incriminate him. Some little contradiction was shown between statements made at the trial, regarding the time when the shot had been fired from the chamber of the revolver and statements made previously. It was shown that the witness had previously stated that the gun had been fired about a month before the alleged homicide, and his statements at the trial showed that it had been fired about a week before. Appellant and the deceased had always been close friends. Appellant testified that deceased had done some favors for him and that he had done many favors for the deceased. The only hint of any quarrel was that relating to an argument which occurred between the two men at a time considerably in advance of the commission of the alleged crime, which argument arose over the refusal of deceased to pay fare to an automobile driver who had brought the two men home from some point. At that time the deceased was objecting to the amount of the fare, and appellant insisted that he should not argue with the driver, but pay it. The fare was paid and the dispute there ended, and from no testimony does it appear that the men were other than upon the most amicable terms thereafter, as they had theretofore been. It was established that deceased was killed by a bullet passing through his head, and a bullet, which was picked up in the room near the body, was of 38-caliber.

[1-4] We have now stated all of the most material evidence offered in the case by which the prosecution claimed that the guilt of appellant was established. The question, then, submitted to us is as to whether this evidence was of such a substantial nature as to justify the conviction, or whether it merely presents a set of suspicious circumstances the sum of which cannot amount to proof of the commission of the alleged crime by appellant. We are not satisfied that the proof made was sufficient to support the verdict of the jury. In expressing this conclusion we have not left out of view the requirement that, before an appellate court can interfere with the verdict of a jury made upon conflicting testimony, the evidence shown must be of such an unsubstantial nature as to amount to no proof at all; and thus do we characterize the case for the prosecution, as shown in this record. The evidence was circumstantial purely, and at best established only a suspicion of guilt; the alleged incriminating circumstances stood alone and formed no completed chain. No witness produced at the trial saw appellant go to the house of deceased on the afternoon referred to, no one saw him at that house, and no one saw him on that day discharge a revolver. Absolutely no motive for the crime was established, and the fact of the conceded friendship between the deceased and appellant is a potent argument against any subtle motive having been aroused in the mind of appellant. The statement of the medical expert that the blood that he found upon the trousers was human blood did not have any direct effect to connect appellant with the alleged murder; and this witness declined to state as to whether the blood that he examined was fresh or old. The opinion of the officer who examined the revolver, to the effect that he believed from the smell and appearance that the chamber had been discharged within a few hours prior to the making of his examination, while also a suspicious circumstance, could not legally be given much weight, unsupported by some proof other than that narrated, such, for instance, as establishing what the prosecution did not establish, that appellant, between the time that deceased returned to his cabin and the time of the discovery of his dead body, had visited the latter's place of abode. It is understood, of course, that in considering the particular question under discussion the evidence for the prosecution must be taken alone and given the strongest interpretation permissible. It may be added, however, that as to each of the matters adverted to, the appellant testified freely and offered plausible explanation. As to the firing of the gun, he stated that, at the time he was first interrogated about it, he did not recall precisely the time that he had fired the gun, but that some days after that time a witness (apparently reputable) had reminded him that about a week before that time he had, in the witness' presence, discharged the gun at a stray dog near the store. He produced this witness, who corroborated the testimony fully. As to the alleged blood spots, he testified that on the day of the alleged homicide he was intoxicated, and that in taking catsup from a bottle he had spilled the contents down the front of his trousers and onto his shoes, and remembered that Curran had called his attention to it, and that at that time he had taken off the trousers and washed one of his shoes to clear it of the stains. He further stated that a day or so before, while wearing the same trousers, he had killed some squabs with a butcher knife, and that, no doubt, blood had dropped upon the trouser legs from the birds; that he knew of no other blood having gotten there, although he said he was in the habit of shooting rabbits and of wearing the trousers while so engaged. He testified further that he was lying down when Curran returned that afternoon, and that he did not get up until later in the day. He flatly contradicted Curran as to the latter having gone to sleep, and stated that he saw Curran behind the counter after the latter arrived from the ranch and saw him there again when he woke up. Another witness, apparently reputable, testified that he saw Curran back of the counter at about 1 o'clock and again at 3. Appellant stated, and there appeared to be no dispute about that, that it was his habit to keep the revolver about the store on account of thieves, who had previously robbed him; that on the day in question he did put the revolver in his trousers for a time, but did that because he found it under the counter and was afraid some one would take it; and that he had put it in his pants, intending to put it under the pillow, but was interrupted at the time. He did not state, however, with clearness as to when the gun had been replaced under the pillow. Upon the evidence introduced on behalf of the people, including all of the alleged contradictions, as shown in the statements made by appellant, we do not think that a sufficient case was made entitling the jury to return a verdict of guilty. Having reached that conclusion, it will not be necessary to give particular attention to the alleged errors assigned by appellant. We may call attention, however, to one of them: The defense produced two witnesses who were ready to testify that between 1 and 3 o'clock on the afternoon of December 15th, when they saw Curran back of the counter at appellant's store, Curran told them that Bailey was asleep. It will be remembered that Curran's testimony was that he himself went to bed, and that he did not know what happened after that until just before the time the body of deceased was discovered in the cabin. That this testimony was most material there can be no doubt; that it was admissible as part of the res gestæ we do not believe. It was purely impeaching testimony, and no foundation had been laid for its introduction in the examination of Curran. We called attention to the fact that Curran had disappeared at the time of the second trial and could not be found; hence his testimony, given at the previous trial, was read in evidence. He was not at that time asked as to whether he had made the statement to these witnesses to the effect that on that afternoon appellant was asleep. It might well be that the defense, as counsel state, was laboring under a disadvantage because he did not know that there were witnesses available at the first trial who would testify to these facts. But that was a misfortune which could not be made to supply the want of sufficient foundation being laid for the introduction of the testimony referred to.

For the lack of sufficient evidence shown to justify the verdict of the jury, the judgment appealed from is reversed.

PEOPLE v. ALI. (Cr. 622.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1144(19)—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where record on appeal does not show that an application stating grounds of appeal was filed by appellant as required by Pen. Code, § 1247, and no suggestion was made that record was insufficient, it will be presumed that no such application was filed.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊜1071—APPEAL—FILING OF APPLICATION—GROUND OF APPEAL.

The filing of an application stating grounds of appeal required by Pen. Code, § 1247, is mandatory, and upon appellant's failure to so do an appeal will be dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

M. Ali was convicted of embezzlement, and from the conviction and from order denying new trial he appeals. Appeals dismissed.

O. V. Willson, of El Centro, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CONREY, P. J. [1, 2] In the court below the defendant was convicted of the crime of embezzlement. He gave notice of appeal from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. A clerk's transcript and a reporter's transcript of all of the evidence received at the trial (excepting a certain exhibit) are on file in this court. The Attorney General objects to any consideration of these appeals for the reason that the record does not show that an application stating the grounds of the appeal was filed by the defendant as required by section 1247 of the Penal Code. This objection was called to the attention of defendant's attorney by the service upon him of respondent's brief more than a month prior to the submission of the case in this court. No suggestion has been made that the record is incomplete, and we therefore assume that appellant failed to comply with the requirements of said section 1247, by neglecting to file the application required by that section. The filing of such application is mandatory. The section itself declares that "if such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual and shall be deemed dismissed and the judgment or order may be enforced as if no appeal had been taken." Rhodes v. Sargent, 17 Cal. App. 54, 56, 118 Pac. 727; People v. Measor, 20 Cal. App. 406, 129 Pac. 469.

The appeals are dismissed.

VON DER KUHLEN v. CLINE, Sheriff.

(Civ. 2804.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 4, 1918.)

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES ⊜92—FAILURE TO PROCEED UNDER EXECUTION—EXCUSE.

Action of claim and delivery against sheriff and others by a third party claiming title to automobile levied on, not being one in which court had authority to grant injunction order restraining sheriff from making sale, would not justify him in refusing to proceed, where bond had been given to indemnify him against such third party's claim.

Petition by Charles Von Der Kuhlen for a writ of mandate requiring John C. Cline, Sheriff of the County of Los Angeles, to advertise and sell property levied upon under execution. Granted.

H. L. Sacks and Isaac Pacht, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Ward Chapman and L. M. Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In a certain action in the superior court of Los Angeles county Charles Von Der Kuhlen, as plaintiff, obtained judgment for the recovery of a sum of money against the defendant A. E. Warmington. On an execution issued in that action, the sheriff levied upon and took from the possession of Warmington an automobile, which, under the plaintiff's direction, he had seized as property of Warmington. Thereafter the California Southern Railroad Company filed a third party claim with the sheriff, claiming that the automobile was its property. To indemnify the sheriff against such third party claim, Von Der Kuhlen gave to the sheriff an indemnity bond as provided by law. Nevertheless the sheriff now refuses to proceed under the execution and make sale of the property so left in his custody.

After said indemnity bond had been given, the California Southern Railroad Company, as plaintiff, filed an action in claim and delivery against the sheriff and others, alleging that said automobile was the property of said plaintiff California Southern Railroad Company, and that, as such owner, it was entitled to the possession thereof. Thereafter in that action the railroad company filed an affidavit and made a motion to the court praying for an injunction to restrain the sheriff from selling the automobile under the execution issued in the case of Von Der Kuhlen v. Warmington. The court thereupon made an order purporting to enjoin and restrain the sheriff from making any sale of the automobile under and by virtue of said execution, until further order of the court. The sheriff's refusal to proceed under the execution is based upon said restraining order. The sheriff having thus refused to proceed, Von Der Kuhlen now petitions this court for a writ of mandate requiring the sheriff to advertise and sell the automobile under said execution.

The action of California Southern Railroad Company against Cline and others was an action at law, and not a suit in equity. It does not appear that the complaint in that action demanded equitable relief or that it stated any facts upon which equitable relief should be grounded. The case was not one in which the court had authority to grant an injunction. It is manifest that, if the railroad company is the owner of the automobile and entitled to possession thereof, the railroad company will be able to obtain adequate relief in damages against the sheriff, and the sheriff in turn is adequately protected by the indemnity bond. A third party claimant may not by an injunction thus obtained interfere with the execution of process under a lawful judgment between other parties. The only exception to this rule must be found in some case of an equitable nature wherein a third party claimant's cause of action itself furnishes ground of equitable relief. The restraining order relied upon by the defendant here does not come within such exception.

The defendant herein has failed to show any valid reason why he should not proceed under the levy and make sale of the property. His duty to so proceed requires the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins upon him as a duty resulting from his office. The plaintiff is entitled to the demanded writ.

On October 31, 1918, immediately after the submission of this matter for decision, the court made its order that the peremptory writ of mandate issue, and stated that an opinion in writing would subsequently be filed. Pursuant to the intention thus expressed, this opinion is now placed on file.

In re SLOAN'S ESTATE. (L. A. 5827.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂271—AGREEMENT SETTLING PROPERTY RIGHTS—VALIDITY.

Agreement between husband and wife after separation settling rights in property, all of which was declared to be community property, and relinquishing all rights to inherit from each other, held clearly authorized by Civ. Code, § 158, and to bar wife from rights in husband's estate accorded by Code Civ. Proc. § 1465.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂271—SETTLEMENT OF PROPERTY RIGHTS — RIGHT TO CHANGE BENEFICIARY IN LIFE POLICY.

Under agreement between husband and wife settling their rights in community estate, husband to have all money and "other securities which he now owns," included insurance policies upon life of husband in which wife had no vested interest, and husband presumably had the right to substitute the name of another for that of wife as beneficiary.

3. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂271—SEPARATION AGREEMENT—INVALIDITY.

Agreement between husband and wife relating to alimony and action for divorce made on the same day as agreement settling property rights in community estate held distinct and separate from community agreement, so that, conceding invalidity of the former, it would not, under Civ. Code, § 1642, be read in connection with community agreement so as to invalidate it.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂271—AGREEMENT SETTLING PROPERTY RIGHTS — CONSIDERATION.

Agreement between husband and wife, relating to alimony and divorce, held not to impose any obligation on wife to sue for divorce, so that agreement could be deemed a consideration for another agreement executed on the same day, settling property rights in community estate.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂271—AGREEMENT SETTLING PROPERTY RIGHTS—RESCISSION.

In view of Civ. Code, § 1691, where wife neither restored nor offered to restore real property conveyed to her pursuant to agreement with husband settling property rights in community estate, held she could not claim the right to rescind and take property rights in her husband's estate accorded by Code Civ. Proc. § 1465.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the Estate of James Harvey Sloan, deceased. From a judgment of dismissal entered against petitioner, Dola Arvilla Sloan, upon sustaining of a demurrer to her second amended petition without leave to amend, she appeals. Affirmed.

Ray L. Chesebro and Edward Winterer, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William H. Fuller, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of dismissal entered against petitioner, Dola Arvilla Sloan, upon the sustaining of a demurrer to her second amended petition, filed under section 1465, Code of Civil Procedure, without leave to amend.

It appears from the petition that petitioner and James Harvey Sloan were married on the 15th of January, 1894, and lived together as husband and wife until March 16, 1916, on which date he left the family residence and thereafter, without her consent, continued to live separate and apart from her; that on July 25, 1916, the parties entered into an agreement, which, after reciting the fact that they were husband and wife and desirous of settling their rights as to property, all of which, it was declared, was community estate, provided that Dola Sloan should have as her sole and separate property certain described real estate, including the family residence, valued at $6,000, upon which she, on October 5, 1915, had filed a declaration of homestead, together with the furniture and furnishings therein, also all moneys then in her possession and that due to her. As to the husband, it was agreed that he should, as his sole and separate property, retain all moneys then in his possession, and that due him, and also "all stocks, bonds and other securities which he now owns or which he may hereafter acquire," together with his professional library then in possession of the wife, and which she agreed to surrender to him on demand therefor, also all the office furniture, effects, fixtures, and certain described dental appliances. The agreement further provided that:

"All property hereafter acquired and all earnings which may be made or acquired by the parties hereto shall be his or her sole and separate property, respectively, free from all claim of the other party; that each of the parties hereto shall have the right to dispose of his or her property, both real and personal, that may be hereafter acquired by either of them, as fully and effectually as if the parties hereto were not married and had never been married, and that each party hereby releases and relinquishes to the other party, and to his or her heirs, assigns and legal representatives, all claims, demands and interests against or in the estate of the other upon the death of either.

"Ninth. That the parties hereto, and each of them, do hereby waive and relinquish and surrender any and all claims and rights to inherit from the other in case one or both of the parties hereto shall die intestate, which claim and right and all of them said parties and each of them, respectively, do hereby and do now forever relinquish and surrender in favor of all of the heirs of such party so dying and to the exclusion of either and each of the said first or second parties hereto, respectively.

"Tenth. That the parties here to do and have hereby settled and forever adjusted by and between themselves all present and future property rights of every kind and nature, whether community or separate property, wheresoever the same is or may be located, and all other rights and claims which either may have or claim to have against the other so far as their property rights are concerned, and in addition thereto the said parties hereto do hereby settle and adjust, and have settled and adjusted, and forever determined all their respective rights to, of and in any inheritances the one from the other, respectively."

On the same date there was delivered to the wife and recorded at her request, a grant deed, from the husband, conveying to her the property on which she had declared a homestead, the other parcels of the estate having been theretofore conveyed to her. On the same date, to wit, July 25, 1916, another instrument in writing was executed by the parties, whereby, after reciting that differences had arisen between them, "by reason of which it may become necessary that the marriage * * * be dissolved by proper legal proceedings * * * and in order that there may be no controversy between the parties at the time of said event, if it does occur, in reference to alimony and attorney's fees," it was agreed that commencing with August 1st, following, the husband should pay to the wife $40 per month up to April 1, 1917, which payments at said time should cease, except in the event the wife instituted an action for divorce, in which case in addition to $125 to be paid by the husband for attorney's fees and costs, said payments of $40 per month should continue to be paid to the wife for her support, and in lieu of alimony; providing that if she obtained an interlocutory decree by October 1, 1917, the payments should continue for one year thereafter, at the expiration of which time they should cease and the husband be released from further obligation for maintenance and support of the wife. It was further agreed that the wife should not interfere with the business of the husband, and that if he failed to make the payments as agreed she might terminate the agreement, and further agreed that no action for divorce brought by the wife should be based on the grounds of adultery of the husband. On November 1, 1916, the husband died, leaving a will, which was admitted to probate and letters testamentary issued to Chas. E. Putnam as executor.

[1] Appellant's chief contention is that Exhibit B, by which the parties declared that all property owned by them was community estate, which under an executed agreement (section 1661, Civ. Code) was divided, the husband conveying to the wife as her sole and separate estate real property of an admitted value of upwards of $6,000, the title to which stood in his name, is void on its face. Considered alone, there is no merit in this contention. The contract is clearly one authorized by section 158, Civil Code. Yoakam v. Kingery, 126 Cal. 30, 58 Pac. 324. It was made by parties capable of contracting and upon a sufficient consideration. Conceding at the time of the husband's death appellant was, in the absence of an agreement for a separation, as was the case in Estate of Miller, 158 Cal. 420, 111 Pac. 255, and Estate of Yoell, 164 Cal. 540, 129 Pac. 999, and therefore, as his widow, entitled to the rights and property accorded by section 1465, Code of Civil Procedure, nevertheless, by the terms of the agreement, petitioner in express terms and in language that is most apt for the purpose relinquished all claim and right to his property and estate, thus barring herself from the claims made, just as effectually as such an agreement would bar her right as widow, to administer upon the estate of her deceased husband. Estate of Walker, 169 Cal. 400, 146 Pac. 868.

[2] The subject of the agreement was all the community property of the parties. This though not specifically mentioned other than as securities (Thayer v. Wathen, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 382, 44 S. W. 906; 35 Cyc. 1283), "which he now owns or may acquire," included the insurance policies upon the life of the husband, in which petitioner had no vested interest, and hence, presumably, the assured had the right to substitute for her the name of some other beneficiary.

[3] Petitioner insists, however, that, conceding the agreement, when considered alone, is valid, and constitutes a relinquishment of her asserted rights, nevertheless, it must be read and interpreted in connection with Exhibit C as a part thereof. That the two documents made at the same time must, under section 1642, Civil Code, be deemed one instrument, and, thus considered, it is void on its face, for the reason that it violated good morals, as it shows the design and purpose thereof was to facilitate the procuring of a divorce. Newman v. Freitas, 129 Cal. 283, 61 Pac. 907, 50 L. R. A. 548. We are not impressed with counsel's argument upon this point. Conceding the agreement designated "Exhibit C" to be void for the reason that it was calculated to induce or facilitate the bringing of an action for divorce as claimed by appellant, it relates to a different subject, and is entirely distinct, disconnected, and separable from the valid agreement designated as "Exhibit B."

[4] Moreover, since it imposed no obligation upon the wife to sue for a divorce, it cannot be deemed a consideration for the execution of Exhibit B. No possible cause of action in favor of the husband could have grown out of the wife's failure for any length of time, nor for any cause, to sue him for divorce, nor in case of such suit could the agreement (Exhibit C) control the action of the court in the exercise of its discretion, in allowing her alimony or attorney's fees. No act of omission or commission on the part of either party in violation of the provisions of Exhibit C could affect the acts had and taken under the terms of Exhibit B.

[5] It is next claimed that, assuming the contract on its face to be valid, it is shown to be void by reason of extrinsic matters alleged in the complaint. This contention is based upon a number of grounds, among which it is claimed the purpose thereof was to facilitate a divorce between parties and hence, founded upon an immoral consideration; that it was procured by fraud, consisting in the alleged fact that deceased represented that unless she entered into the agreements he would abandon her forever without support; that he promised that her name as beneficiary in certain certificates of membership in the Bankers' Life Association would not be changed, so that upon his death the proceeds thereof would be paid to her; that a will theretofore made by him in her favor should not be revoked, and that she signed the instruments as the result of coercion and undue influence practiced upon her by deceased. As to all these and other like allegations, in so far as they are sufficient to constitute fraud upon whatsoever grounds based, a sufficient answer thereto, since we hold the contract valid, is that, while petitioner sought a rescission of the agreement under which the community of the couple was divided, and real property of $6,000 in value actually conveyed to her as her sole and separate estate, she neither restored, nor offered to restore, the same, which by section 1691, Civil Code, is made a condition precedent to the maintenance of an action to rescind.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

McDONOUGH v. COOPER. (Sac. 2736.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 10, 1918.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂231—IRRIGATION — SALE FOR ASSESSMENT — DEED — CONCLUSIVENESS.

St. 1897, p. 271, § 48, makes deed following sale for nonpayment of assessment levied by irrigation district conclusive with respect only to matters not covered by preceding provision, declaring its effect as prima facie evidence.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂231—IRRIGATION — SALE FOR ASSESSMENT — DEED — CONCLUSIVENESS.

Under St. 1897, p. 271, § 48, deed following sale for nonpayment of assessment levied by irrigation district is not conclusive of lawful assessment of property.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂231—IRRIGATION—SPECIAL ASSESSMENT.

Under St. 1897, p. 274, §§ 59, 60, there is no requirement as to how special assessment levied by irrigation district shall be entered on roll, and segregation is not essential.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂231—IRRIGATION—SALE FOR ASSESSMENTS—CERTIFICATE.

Certificate of sale for delinquent assessment levied by irrigation district, though it was not dated on day of sale, and did not specify when purchaser would be entitled to deed, sufficiently met substantial requirements of statute (St. 1897, p. 254).

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂231—IRRIGATION—SALE FOR ASSESSMENT—CERTIFICATE.

Formal irregularity of certificate of sale under assessment levied by irrigation district, in that it was not dated on day of sale, held cured by curative clause of St. 1897, p. 271, § 48, making deed conclusive evidence of regularity of proceedings.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon.

Action by Thomas McDonough against Ida B. Cooper. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Griffin & Carlson, of Modesto, and Geo. Cosgrave, of Fresno, for appellant.

W. H. Hatton and Hatton & Scott, all of Modesto, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action to quiet title to two parcels of land in the city of Modesto. The court gave judgment declaring defendant, Ida B. Cooper, to be the owner of the property. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The plaintiff deraigned title from the United States. The defendant, Cooper, claimed under a deed following a sale for nonpayment of an assessment levied by the Modesto irrigation district for the year 1905.

[1] Section 48 of the act under which the sale was had makes the collector's deed, duly acknowledged and proved, prima facie evidence that the proceedings were regular in seven specified particulars, and then declares that such deed is conclusive evidence of "the regularity of all the proceedings from the assessment by the assessor, inclusive, up to the execution of the deed." St. 1897, p. 271. This conclusive evidence clause differs from section 3787 of the Political Code in that it does not qualify the word "proceedings" by the word "other." Nevertheless, we do not doubt that, as was intimated in Escondido H. S. Dist. v. Escondido Seminary, 130 Cal. 128, 133, 62 Pac. 401, and held in Bruschi v. Cooper, 30 Cal. App. 682, 692, 159 Pac. 728, 734, the legislative intent was that the deed should be conclusive with respect only to matters not covered by the preceding provision declaring its effect as prima facie evidence.

[2] The appellant attacks the regularity and validity of the assessment itself. Under section 48 the deed is prima facie evidence that "the property was assessed as required by law." The Legislature did not, therefore (assuming that it might have done so without violation of constitutional rights), undertake to make the deed conclusive of the lawful assessment of the property.

[3] It appears that in 1905 a special assessment of $43,000 was authorized by election. The board of directors found it necessary to raise an additional sum of $65,525.55 for interest on bonds. They made a levy of $1 on each $100 of property valuation to meet the special assessment, and of $1.55 per $100 for paying the interest. The assessment roll was made up to show, under the head of "total amount of all taxes," the amount of tax figured at the rate of $2.55 per $100 of valuation. The amounts levied on account of the special assessment and the assessment for interest were not separately computed and carried out. Section 39 of the act (Stats. 1897, p. 267) prescribes the method of levying the assessment for the payment of annual interest on outstanding bonds. It then provides that "the secretary of the board must compute and enter in a separate column of the assessment book the respective sums, in dollars and cents, to be paid as an assessment on the property therein enumerated." Sections 59 and 60 (Stats. 1897, p. 274) deal with special assessments. Section 60 declares how the rate of such assessment shall be ascertained, and provides that "the assessments so levied shall be computed and entered on the assessment roll by the secretary of the board, and collected at the same time and in the same manner as other assessments provided for herein." The requirement of the act is merely that the special assessment shall be computed and entered on the assessment roll by the secretary. It is to be "collected" in the same manner as other assessments, but the statute does not prescribe any particular manner in which it shall be entered on the roll. In the absence of any specific requirement that it shall be separately entered, we see no reason for holding such segregation essential.

[4, 5] The appellant claims, further, that the certificate of sale issued by the collector was irregular in two particulars. The alleged defects are that the certificate is not dated on the day of the sale, and that it does not specify when the purchaser will be entitled to a deed. The facts in these regards are the same as those considered in Bruschi v. Cooper, supra, 30 Cal. App. at pages 693–694, 159 Pac. 728, 734. The court there held that the certificate sufficiently met the substantial requirements of the statute, and with this conclusion we are in accord. Furthermore, it may be pointed out that any irregularity in the certificate is cured by the conclusive evidence clause, since the regularity of the certificate is not one of the matters as to which the deed is made prima facie evidence. The provision for a certificate might have been omitted from the statute altogether without impairing any constitutional right of the property owner. Any irregularity in the form of such certificate may therefore be remedied by a curative clause such as that contained in section 48. Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 Pac. 81; Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 560, 568, 89 Pac. 352; Bank of Lemoore v. Fulgham, 151 Cal. 234, 90 Pac. 936; Imperial Land Co. v. Imperial Irr. Dist., 173 Cal. 660, 663, 161 Pac. 113.

No other points are made.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. v. LEWIS et al. (L. A. 5610.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃164—SETTING ASIDE—SUFFICIENCY OF MOTION.

Court, on setting aside default, properly set aside a judgment entered thereon, although the motion did not ask for such relief.

2. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃161 — SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT—SUFFICIENCY OF APPLICATION—"ACCOMPANIED WITH COPY OF ANSWER."

Where defendant served answer after default entered, and clerk kept it without filing it, a notice of motion stating that it would be based upon "said answer and the affidavits attached hereto," no copy of the answer being served with such notice, was "accompanied with a copy of the answer," within Code Civ. Proc. § 473, as amended by St. 1917, p. 242.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃935(2) — PRESUMPTIONS ON APPEAL—RECORD.

Where the record on appeal from an order setting aside a default was prepared under Code Civ. Proc. § 953a et seq., at the request of plaintiffs, and stipulated as correct by counsel, and settled by the judge, but did not contain a copy of the proposed answer, which accompanied the notice of motion, it must be assumed that the answer was brought to the attention of, and considered by, the court, and that it stated a good defense on the merits.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃957(1) — SETTING ASIDE DEFAULT — REVIEW — DISCRETION OF COURT.

It is only in very plain case of abuse of discretion that appellate court will disturb action of trial court in overruling motion to set aside default, especially where relief was granted and application therefor was made promptly.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by the County of Los Angeles and others against Walter A. Lewis and others. From an order granting the motion of defendant Lewis to set aside a default, entered for his failure to plead, the plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and David R. Faries, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Geo. L. Sanders, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from an order granting the motion of defendant Lewis to set aside his default, entered for his failure to plead within the time allowed therefor by law.

[1] By the same order the court vacated the judgment entered upon the default on the day that notice of the motion was filed, although neither the notice of motion nor the motion itself asked for such relief. We agree with the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, that if the default was properly set aside there no longer existed any basis for the judgment, and the court was warranted in setting aside the same.

The motion was one under section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, and in substance one upon the ground of mistake, inadvertence and excusable neglect. Summons was served in the action on February 1, 1918, and the last day for Lewis to plead was February 11, 1918. The default of Lewis was entered on February 13, 1918. On the last-named day, subsequent to the entry of the default, he served his answer on the plaintiffs and offered the same to the clerk of the court for filing. It was not filed, but the clerk has ever since had it in his custody. No denial as to any of these matters is contained in the counter affidavit filed by plaintiffs on this motion. On February 15th notice of the motion to set aside the default was served and the same, being heard on February 18th, was thereupon granted.

[2] The notice of motion stated that it would be based upon "said answer and the affidavits attached hereto," but no copy of the answer was served with such notice. Section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 242), provides that such an application as was here made "must be accompanied with a copy of the answer, or other pleading proposed to be filed therein, otherwise said application shall not be granted." The principal point made on this appeal is that this application was not "accompanied" by a copy of the answer, within the meaning of this provision, and, therefore, that it was error to grant it. We think that, in view of the facts stated, the application was in substance and effect so accompanied, and that to hold otherwise would be to deny Lewis' right to a hearing on the merits by an unnecessarily strict construction of the provision. The plain object of the provision was simply to require the delinquent party seeking leave to contest on the merits, to show his good faith and readiness to at once file his answer in the event that leave is granted by producing a copy of the proposed answer for the inspection of his adversary and the court. Substantial compliance with the provision of course requires such production in connection with the application for relief. Here admittedly the proposed answer was served (by delivery of copy) on the adverse parties two days before the giving of the notice of motion, and thereupon offered for filing and left in the custody of the clerk. The notice of motion showed that this was the answer that Lewis desired to file and that the motion would be based in part upon the same, and the affidavit of Lewis, a copy of which was served with the notice of motion, showed that the answer desired to be filed was the one served and offered for filing on February 15, 1918, which had ever since that date been in the custody of the clerk. The provision of section 473, Code of Civil Procedure, here involved, like the remainder of the section, must be literally construed with a view to substantial justice, and we are of the opinion that it must be held that, in view of the facts stated, the application for relief was "accompanied" with a copy of the answer proposed to be filed.

[3] The record on appeal, prepared under section 953a et seq., at the request of the plaintiffs, and stipulated as correct by counsel, and settled by the trial judge, does not contain a copy of the proposed answer. There is nothing, however, in the order granting the motion, or in such record, excluding the idea that the proposed answer, which admittedly had been served and offered for filing and was in the custody of the clerk, was brought to the attention of and considered by the court, as the notice of motion indicated it would be, and we think that in support of the action of the court it must be so assumed. We think, likewise, that in support of the action of the court it must here be assumed that such answer stated a good defense on the merits.

[4] We have considered plaintiff's contention that the matters shown in support of the claim that Lewis should be relieved from his default did not make a sufficient case for relief to warrant the action of the court, and have concluded that it may not fairly be held that the learned judge of the superior court was guilty of an abuse of the discretion committed to him in determining that a sufficient case was made to authorize the relief sought. It is only in a very plain case of abuse of discretion that this court will disturb the action of the trial court in a matter of this character, especially where the relief is granted and the application therefor is made as promptly as it was in this case.

In view of what has been said, no other point made requires notice.

The order is affirmed.

SLAKER v. McCORMICK-SAELTZER CO.

(Sac. 2706.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1918.)

1. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃176—FAILURE TO RECORD—RIGHTS OF SUBSEQUENT PURCHASER.

Civ. Code, § 1214, does not benefit a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer who took with actual notice of a prior unrecorded mortgage, in view of section 1217.

2. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃562 — RES ADJUDICATA—MERITS.

To operate as a bar, a judgment in a former action must have been on the merits.

3. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃956(5) — RES ADJUDICATA—EVIDENCE.

To determine whether a former judgment is res adjudicata, the entire record of such former action should be examined.

4. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃590(1) — RES ADJUDICATA—MATTERS NOT ADJUDICATED.

Where in a foreclosure suit against the owner and one who had purchased at an execution sale, there was a decree against the mortgagor, which stated that court had no jurisdiction to settle priority of claims of mortgagee, and purchaser that "plaintiff have and recover nothing of or from" the purchaser, mortgagee was not estopped to bring action against the purchaser to establish the priority of his mortgage.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; James G. Estop, Judge.

Action by George W. Slaker against the McCormick-Saeltzer Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for appellant.

Braynard & Kimball, of Redding, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. In May, 1912, Nannie R. Frick executed and delivered to plaintiff, Slaker, a mortgage of real property to secure her promissory note for $1,000. The mortgage was not recorded until January 4, 1916. In the meanwhile, the appellant, the McCormick-Saeltzer Company, commenced an action against Nannie R. Frick and her husband, and levied an attachment on the mortgaged property. It recovered judgment in the action. Execution was issued, and the appellant purchased the property at the execution sale. A certificate of sale was issued to appellant on November 10, 1915, and was recorded prior to the recording of plaintiff's mortgage.

Thereafter plaintiff commenced an action to foreclose his mortgage, making the Fricks and the McCormick-Saeltzer Company parties defendant. The latter appeared, filing an answer and a cross-complaint. The court gave a decree of foreclosure against the Fricks. The decree adjudged "that this court has no jurisdiction to determine in this case the legal question involved as to the priority of the respective liens or claims of the plaintiff and said defendant the McCormick-Saeltzer Company, a corporation, in, upon, and to the premises described in said mortgage," and followed this clause with an adjudication that plaintiff recover nothing from the McCormick-Saeltzer Company, and that the latter recover nothing from plaintiff. Following the trial of the foreclosure suit, this action was brought by plaintiff to establish the priority of its mortgage over the claims of the appellant. Judgment went in plaintiff's favor, and the McCormick-Saeltzer Company appeals.

[1] Passing, for the moment, the questions arising from the prosecution of the foreclosure suit, it is clear that plaintiff's rights were properly held superior to those of the appellant. If appellant had had no notice of plaintiff's unrecorded mortgage prior to its purchase on execution, its certificate, being first duly recorded, would have prevailed. Civ. Code, § 1214; Cady v. Purser, 131 Cal. 552, 63 Pac. 844, 82 Am. St. Rep. 391. But the benefits of the recording statute are not available to a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer who takes with actual notice of a prior, though unrecorded, instrument. Civ. Code, § 1217; Bell v. Pleasant, 145 Cal. 410, 78 Pac. 957, 104 Am. St. Rep. 61; Robinson v. Muir, 151 Cal. 118, 90 Pac. 521. Here the court found, on sufficient evidence, that the appellant had actual knowledge of plaintiff's mortgage, and of the nonpayment of the note, before it took judgment in its action against the Fricks.

Presenting the point in various forms, the appellant insists that the judgment in the foreclosure suit is a bar to any recovery by the plaintiff in this action. The foreclosure suit was pending when the complaint herein was filed. It had gone to judgment, and the judgment had become final before the trial of this action.

[2-4] The issue of priority as between plaintiff's mortgage and the appellant's certificate was presented in the foreclosure suit. But to operate as a bar or estoppel, the judgment in a former action must have been on the merits. 15 R. C. L. 955; 23 Cyc. 1131; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266; Hughes v. U. S., 4 Wall. 232, 18 L. Ed. 303; Swift v. McPherson, 232 U. S. 51, 34 Sup. Ct. 239, 58 L. Ed. 499. To determine the character and scope of an adjudication, the entire record of the prior action is to be examined. Watson v. Lawson, 166 Cal. 235, 241, 135 Pac. 961; Smith v. Auld, 31 Kan. 262, 266, 1 Pac. 626. Looking merely to the judgment in the foreclosure suit, it is very plain that the court did not therein undertake to pass upon the merits of the controversy between Slaker and the McCormick-Saeltzer Company. What it did was to decline to determine that controversy for the reason that it was without jurisdiction, in that action, so to do. Whether the holding that it had no jurisdiction was sound or erroneous is not a question for consideration here. The essential point is that there was no adjudication of the merits. Having reached the conclusion that it lacked jurisdiction, the court might more appropriately, perhaps, have ordered a dismissal as to the McCormick-Saeltzer Company, instead of adjudging that the plaintiff "have and recover nothing of or from" said defendant. But the mere form of words found in this part of the judgment is not controlling (Dixon v. Sinclear, 4 Vt. 354, 24 Am. Dec. 610), since, upon a reading of the entire decree, it is apparent that the court had no thought of deciding the question now in dispute (see Smith v. Auld, supra). In effect, the former judgment amounted to a dismissal as to the McCormick-Saeltzer Company.

The appellant's claim was that it held a right superior to the plaintiff's mortgage lien. Upon its own theory, the court should have dismissed it from the foreclosure suit. Beronio v. Ventura Lumber Co., 129 Cal. 232, 237, 61 Pac. 958, 79 Am. St. Rep. 118. This, as we have seen, is precisely what was done, and there is therefore no force in the claim that the present controversy should have been litigated in the former action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

Ex parte FRITZ. (Cr. 2209.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 16, 1918.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1206(3)—VALIDITY OF SENTENCE—INDETERMINATE SENTENCE.

An indeterminate sentence and a judgment based thereon, where imposed for an offense committed before the Indeterminate Sentence Law took effect, were void.

2. HABEAS CORPUS ⟸22(1)—SENTENCE.

Where prisoner was returned to court after having served 10 months under a void indeterminate sentence, and a sentence of one year imposed, the prisoner was not entitled to release on habeas corpus after two months' imprisonment, the second judgment being the only valid judgment, and the term of imprisonment not commencing to run until delivery of the prisoner at the place of imprisonment under Pen. Code, § 670.

In Bank.

In the matter of the application of Henry Fritz for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Henry Fritz, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. The petitioner aplied for a writ of habeas corpus asking for his release from the state prison. Upon the hearing thereon the following facts were made to appear: The crime for which the petitioner was convicted was committed on February 12, 1917. On the 2d day of November, 1917, by a judgment of the superior court of the county of San Joaquin, he was sentenced to suffer imprisonment in the said state prison for an indeterminate period of not less than one nor more than ten years, under the Indeterminate Sentence Law, which had gone into effect in the month of July of that year. In the month of March, 1918, this court decided the case of In re Lee, 171 Pac. 958, in which it was held that as to offenses committed prior to the date of the taking effect of the Indeterminate Sentence Law (St. 1917, p. 665) that law would be ex post facto, and hence judgments imposing indeterminate sentences upon offenders whose offenses had been committed before such law went into effect would be void. The court in that case, however, indicated the course to be pursued in such cases, viz., that such offenders would not be entitled to their discharge, but should be returned to the superior court in which they had been convicted, for the imposition of a proper sentence. In conformity with this suggested procedure, the petitioner herein was returned to the superior court of San Joaquin county and was therein and on the 18th day of April, 1918, by the judgment of said court sentenced to a term of imprisonment of one year in the said state prison. Having been confined therein for a period of ten months under the former judgment and sentence of said court and having been confined therein for a period of more than two months under the last judgment and sentence thereof, the petitioner now contends that he has fully served the term of one year's imprisonment imposed by said second judgment and sentence, and hence is entitled to his discharge.

[1, 2] We cannot agree with this contention. In accordance with our ruling in the case of In re Lee, supra, the first judgment and sentence under which he was confined was void, and he was therefore entitled at any time to have obtained his release therefrom by a writ of habeas corpus. That judgment and sentence being void, the petitioner was properly returned under the ruling of In re Lee, supra, to the court in which he was convicted for the imposition of a proper judgment and sentence. This judgment and sentence was not an amendment of the former void judgment and sentence, but was an original and the only legal judgment and sentence in his case. In its pronouncement the trial court was entitled to consider and take into account the history of the case from its inception, the nature and enormity of the defendant's crime, the mitigating circumstances, if any, attending or succeeding its commission, the period of time the defendant had already been confined in the county jail or in any other place of incarceration. The court was also entitled to take into consideration the fact that by its former void judgment it had sentenced the defendant to a term in the state prison the minimum of which was one year and the maximum of which was ten years, during the whole of which maximum the defendant might have been required to serve under said first judgment and sentence had the same been legal. The fact that the second judgment and sentence of the court was for the minimum term of one year would seem to argue strongly that the trial court in imposing the same did take these facts into consideration; but, be that as it may, we can see no reason for holding that the second and only valid judgment and sentence in the case of the petitioner should not speak from the date of its rendition and that the term of imprisonment fixed thereunder should not commence to run upon the actual delivery of the defendant at the place of imprisonment under the express terms of section 670 of the Penal Code.

The petitioner has directed our attention to the cases of In re Silva, 175 Pac. 481, and In re Bouchard, 176 Pac. 692, recently decided by the District Court of Appeal for the First District. It is sufficient to say that we disapprove of the reasoning and conclusion in each of those cases.

The writ is discharged, and the petitioner remanded.

LUTZ v. MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK OF SAN DIEGO (McKEE, Intervener).

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1032(1)—BRIEFS ON APPEAL—BURDEN OF SHOWING ERROR.

Under the alternative method of appeal requiring appellant by Code Civ. Proc. § 953c, to present in his brief such portions of the record to be considered, and since the passage of the constitutional amendment providing for a vacation of judgment for errors in procedure only where there has been a miscarriage of justice, an appellant must show that the error complained of resulted in a miscarriage of justice to entitle him to a reversal, even in the absence of any brief or appearance by respondent.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜757(1) — BRIEF ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY.

Error in placing the burden of proof on appellant, as against an intervener, in a claim and delivery suit, cannot be considered on appeal, where appellant's brief does not contain any portion of the record showing that the burden was so placed.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1056(5)—HARMLESS ERROR — EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE — EFFECT OF FINDING.

Where the trial court found in an action of claim and delivery for stock, that the stock belonged to intervener, exclusion of evidence that intervener had disposed of purchase-money notes for the stock was not prejudicial, in view of the assumption that the finding of court was justified by the evidence.

4. PARTIES ⊜84(1)—REPLEVIN ⊜22—JOINDER.

In claim and delivery for corporate stock, which had been sold by intervener, it was not error, in the absence of a request, to fail to bring in the holders of notes for the purchase money, although such parties could have been properly joined.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜1010(1)—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT — PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

Where there is substantial evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court, its decision will control on appeal, regardless of where the preponderance of the evidence lies.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜757(1)—REVIEW—PRESUMPTIONS OF CORRECTNESS.

Where the portions of the record printed in appellant's brief do not show that the findings below require a different judgment, the judgment will not be reversed, since it will be assumed to have been correct.

7. REPLEVIN ⊜52—CLAIM BY THIRD PERSON —DEFENSE.

That intervener in claim and delivery obtained possession of goods replevied by subterfuge would not prevent judgment for intervener on finding that he was in fact the owner.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action in claim and delivery by E. May Lutz against the Merchants' National Bank of San Diego, wherein C. W. McKee intervened. From a judgment against plaintiff and in favor of the intervener, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. C. Mouser, J. De La Motte, and Andrews & Wright, all of San Diego, for appellant.

E. E. Kirk, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. On this appeal from the judgment against the plaintiff and in favor of the intervener, no brief is filed and no oral argument made on behalf of the intervener. The appellant moved for a judgment upon the ground that no brief had been filed, which motion was denied. The case was regularly set for hearing in this court. No appearance was made on behalf of the intervener. The matter is now submitted for decision upon the brief of the appellant and the typewritten transcript, prepared under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant seeks a reversal upon the merits, without an examination of the record, upon the authority of Richter v. Fresno Canal Co., 101 Cal. 582, 36 Pac. 96, and subsequent cases following the rule therein announced; Davis v. Hart, 103 Cal. 530, 37 Pac. 486; Kelly v. Bradbury, 104 Cal. 237, 37 Pac. 872; Bullock v. Bullock, 29 Cal. App. 463, 155 Pac. 1009. These cases hold that, where the appellant claims a reversal upon the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, the court will, in the absence of an appearance on behalf of respondent, "assume, without looking into the record, that the point raised by the appellant that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings attacked is well taken." There are several reasons why this rule does not apply. Under the alternative method of appeal no "specification on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support" the findings is required. Under this system of appeal, it is the duty of the parties to "print in their briefs, or in a supplement appended thereto, such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court." Section 953c, Code Civ. Proc. Since the decisions in the above-cited cases, the Constitution has been amended, to provide that—

"No judgment shall be set aside, or new trial granted, in any case, on the ground * * * of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or for any error as to any matter of pleading, or for any error as to any matter of procedure, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Const. art. 6, § 4½.

[1] It is incumbent, therefore, upon the appellant to print in his brief such portions of the record as he deems essential to a correct understanding and determination of the appeal, and, while in the absence of any brief on the part of the respondent the appeal may be determined upon those portions of the record printed in appellant's brief, it is incumbent upon the appellant thereby to show that error resulting in a miscarriage of justice has occurred in order to entitle him to a reversal, even in the absence of any brief or appearance on behalf of the respondent. The typewritten transcript in the case contains over 640 pages, containing about 160,000 words. The quotations from the record contained in appellant's brief contain between 5,000 and 6,000 words, or about one-thirtieth of the volume of the typewritten transcript. Appellant, under the head of "Statement of Facts," has summarized the facts as claimed by her, and has, under the head of "Statement of the Case," incorporated other statements of fact. Neither the pleadings, findings, nor judgment are printed in the brief. The action is one of claim and delivery to recover from the defendant, Merchants' National Bank, possession of two certificates of stock, one for 500 shares in the Palomas Land & Development Company, and the other for 350 shares in the Palomas Valley Canal Company. The bank defaulted and C. W. McKee intervened, claiming that the stock in question belonged to him and was held by the bank in escrow, the stock having been sold by McKee for $50,000, $10,000 having been paid. The plaintiff, in answer to the complaint in intervention, claims that the stock had been placed with her as security to protect her upon a written guaranty for the payment of $10,000 and that respondent had obtained possession of the stock from her by an agreement that he would return the same after voting it at an election, and that said promise was fraudulently made without any intention of fulfillment. It is apparent from the brief of appellant and a cursory examination of the transcript that the transaction involved in this case was a part of a series of transactions by which the stock of the two corporations above mentioned, hereinafter called the "old companies," were to be conveyed to the Palomas Land Company, a newly organized company, hereafter referred to as the "new company."

The foregoing statement sufficiently discloses the involved character of the litigation. A reversal of the judgment is sought upon the following points:

"First. The court erred in placing the burden of proof upon the plaintiff, E. May Lutz, in this case, as between her and the intervening plaintiff McKee.

"Second. The court erred in sustaining the objection of the intervening plaintiff to the offer of the plaintiff, E. May Lutz, to show that the eight notes given by Carson and Crane for $40,000 had been sold and disposed of by McKee, and that he was not the owner and holder of said notes, and had no further interest therein.

"Third. The court erred in not ordering the Palomas Land Company and the owners and holders of the notes sold and transferred by McKee to be impleaded and brought into court.

"Fourth. That the great preponderance of the evidence was against the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the court.

"Fifth. That the conclusions of law are not justified by the findings of fact."

[2] With reference to the first point, it is sufficient to say that nowhere in the appellant's brief is there any portion of the record which shows that the burden of proof was placed upon the plaintiff. If we assume that the court required the appellant to first offer her evidence, there could have been no prejudicial error in the mere order of proof. The case was tried without a jury, and we have no means of ascertaining from the record what view the court took with reference to the burden of proof.

[3] As to the second point, there is nothing in the record which discloses that this ruling was prejudicial. The court found that the plaintiff had no interest in the stock, that it was not deposited with her as security, and that it was the property of the intervener. Assuming these findings to be supported by the evidence, there could be no error in the refusal to allow evidence that the intervener had disposed of these purchase price notes.

[4] With reference to the third point, there is no showing in the brief that at any time the court was asked to bring in any of these parties, or that the matter was submitted to the court in any manner for determination. The question of the ownership of the stock and the right to its possession was litigated between the appellant and intervener. It would no doubt have been proper to have had the Palomas Land Company made a party and to have had the holders of the notes referred to made parties, for the reason that in the organization of the new company and the contracts in relation thereto it was provided that the stock in the old companies was to be transferred to the new company in exchange for 136,000 shares of stock in that company. It is claimed that these shares of stock in the new company were actually issued and placed in the possession of the plaintiff as security for the $10,000 above mentioned. One of the questions involved in the case was, therefore, whether or not the actual ownership of the shares of stock in the old company was thereby vested in the new company. We cannot say, however, that it was error for the trial court to fail to bring in these parties on its own motion.

[5] As to the fourth claim that the great preponderance of the evidence was against the finding of fact and conclusion of law of the court, it is sufficient to say that, if there was any substantial evidence to sustain the findings of the court, that decision must control in this court, whatever our view may be concerning the preponderance of the evidence.

As to the fifth point, it may be said that neither the conclusions of law nor the findings of fact are set out in the appellant's brief. Plaintiff sets out in her brief the testimony of a number of witnesses which it is claimed justified the trial court in finding that the stock in both the old and new companies was deposited with her as security for the obligation of $10,000, which she guaranteed and afterwards paid on behalf of the new company. But appellant does not claim that this is all the evidence. After stating the evidence favorable to her position, it is said:

"There was no contradiction of the same save by McKee himself, but his own testimony, his letters, and telegrams, all point to the conclusion that McKee gave the stock to appellant for the purpose of inducing her to put up the $10,000 for the company, as collateral security and to make her absolutely secure after she had refused all the other offers."

It appears by the transcript that the intervener flatly denied that the stock was placed in the hands of the plaintiff as security. He was asked the following question and gave the following answer:

"Q. Did you not say to Mrs. Lutz that you would also at that time place in her hands as security to her for this obligation which she was to assume your certificates of stock in the old companies and that she could hold it as security or a pledge amounting to that, for the payment of any obligation that you would incur? A. Absolutely no."

[6, 7] It is apparent, then, that appellant's contention is, as she states it, that the preponderance of the evidence, although contradicted, was in her favor. This is not a ground for reversal. Appellant also claims that two of the findings are sufficient to entitle her to recover in the action. One is to the effect that the stock in the old companies was placed by respondent with her on an agreement that he would transfer said stock for 136,000 shares of stock in the new company, the transfer to be made when the new company had completed the payment of an option to purchase the other two-thirds interest in the old companies, and on the further agreement that respondent would give E. May Lutz a proxy to vote said stock, and the other finding that the possession of the stock had been fraudulently obtained from appellant by respondent; that is to say, upon the agreement to return the same, without any intention so to do. To an understanding of these findings it should be stated that the stock in controversy here represented a one-third interest in the old companies, and that the 136,000 shares of stock in the new company, to be issued in exchange therefor, represented a one-third of the stock of the new company; that the other two-thirds of the stock of the old companies were not owned by the respondent, but that the new company held an option originally given to respondent and transferred by him to the company to purchase the other two-thirds of the stock of the old companies for $50,000. The record printed in appellant's brief does not make it manifest that these findings required a different judgment. There may have been other facts shown in the evidence by the respondent which would make the judgment in favor of respondent a correct one. We are bound to assume, in the absence of satisfactory showing to the contrary, that the judgment of the trial court was correct. Nor does the securing of possession of the certificates of stock by the promise to return the same without the intention so to do justify a reversal of the case, for if, as found by the court, the stock was actually owned by McKee, he was entitled to possession thereof. In that event, the fact that he secured the same by subterfuge would not entitle the plaintiff to the recovery thereof. The fact that appellant in her concluding argument contends that she was entitled to the possession of the stock in one or the other of three different capacities shows the difficulty of correctly understanding the case on the meager portion of the record set out in appellant's brief. The appellant contends that—

"The judgment of the court, as it now stands, results in this: McKee has sold to the Palomas Land Company the option agreement for the two-thirds interest of Turner and O'Neill for $55,000, upon which $30,000 has been paid; he has had issued to him 136,000 shares of stock of the Palomas Land Company for which he gave the secretary the two certificates of stock of the old companies, representing the other one-third interest; that he obtained possession of that stock so pledged, by a species of deceit; that he has again sold that one-third interest evidenced by the two certificates, for the sum of $50,000 to Crane and Carson, receiving $10,000 in cash and eight promissory notes for the sum of $5,000 each, which notes he has sold and received payment therefor, and said notes are in the hands of third parties without any security of any sort, and now the court's holding will, if Carson and Crane refuse to pay those notes, give the two certificates of stock back to McKee to again sell and dispose of to other parties for perhaps $50,000 more."

If it is true that McKee has once hypothecated and twice sold the stock and received the full value thereof at the time of each sale, and $10,000 at the time of the hypothecation, and that the effect of the judgment is to restore to him the stock for sale a third time, there is no doubt that there has been a miscarriage of justice, and the case should be reversed. But we cannot accept the statement of the appellant in her brief unless substantiated by the record therein contained, and this the record fails to do. From an examination of that record we are unable to see that the trial court committed any error.

The judgment is affirmed.

BANGHAM v. MICHAEL et al. (Sac. 2729.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 11, 1918. Rehearing Denied Jan. 9, 1919.)

1. MORTGAGES ⟸594(5)—REDEMPTION—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTES.

Holder of a junior lien upon mortgaged property, who, upon last day of redemption period, tendered full sum of money required for redemption, being a redemption by virtue of Code Civ. Proc. § 701, subd. 2, could not redeem, where he failed to comply with provisions of section 705.

2. MORTGAGES ⟸591(1)—REDEMPTION—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

The right of the holder of a junior lien to redeem property sold under a decree of foreclosure of a prior mortgage thereon is purely statutory, and, in the absence of a compliance therewith, a tender of the money required to redeem is wholly ineffectual.

3. MORTGAGES ⟸591(1)—REDEMPTION—PROCEDURE.

Act of commissioner, who made sale, in accepting from holder of junior lien money required to redeem, was ineffectual, where holder did not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 705, as to furnishing officer making sale, with note of record, etc.

4. MORTGAGES ⟸608 — REDEMPTION — STATUTES APPLICABLE.

Until holder of junior lien upon mortgaged property complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 705, commissioner who made sale was under no obligation to accept money required to redeem, and consequently sections of Civil Code, as to extinguishment of contractual obligations or those arising by operation of law, would have no application, although commissioner accepted the money.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by R. E. Bangham against M. Michael and others. From judgment denying status of the American National Bank of San Francisco, a corporation, as a redemptioner, it appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Edgar C. Chapman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wilson & Haines, O. C. Wilson, and Martin L. Haines, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This action grew out of the following facts: As commissioner appointed by the court therefor, R. E. Bangham, plaintiff herein, sold certain real estate as directed by the decree made in a suit brought by M. Michael against one J. Noble Jones, to foreclose a mortgage thereon. At this sale, made June 16, 1915, Michael, mortgagee, became the purchaser of the property. As holder of a junior lien thereon, the American National Bank was made a defendant in the foreclosure suit, and hence was a redemptioner as defined in section 701, Code of Civil Procedure. Early in the forenoon on the last day for redemption, to wit, June 16, 1916, an agent of Michael called upon the commissioner and demanded that he execute a deed conveying the property to Michael as the purchaser thereof, with which demand the commissioner complied. Thereafter, on the same day, and before the expiration of the time within which said bank was entitled to redeem the property, it, as such redemptioner, tendered the full sum of money required for redemption, which the commissioner received and gave a receipt therefor, but, upon the ground that he had theretofore executed and delivered a deed to Michael, refused to execute a deed to the bank as such redemptioner. Michael claiming to have purchased the property, and, the bank likewise claiming that it was entitled to a deed as redemptioner, the money was left in the hands of the commissioner, who, depositing the money in court, brought this action as provided in section 386, Code of Civil Procedure, praying that Michael and the bank be required to litigate their respective rights growing out of his acts.

The court found that by reason of the bank's failure to comply with section 705, Code of Civil Procedure, its acts were ineffectual to constitute it a redemptioner of the property sold, and adjudged that the money so paid to the commissioner be delivered to the bank by the depositary thereof.

From this judgment denying appellant's status as a redemptioner of the property, the bank has appealed upon the judgment roll.

[1] Appellant, being the holder of a junior lien upon the mortgaged property, is, by subdivision 2, section 701, Code of Civil Procedure, declared to be a redemptioner, and it was entitled to redeem the property on the day it tendered the full sum of money required therefor, upon complying with the provisions of section 705, Code of Civil Procedure, which provide:

"A redemptioner must produce to the officer or person from whom he seeks to redeem and serve with his notice to the sheriff making the sale, or his successor in office:

"1. A copy of the docket of the judgment under which he claims the right to redeem, certified by the clerk of the court, or of the county where the judgment is docketed; or, if he redeem upon a mortgage or other lien, a note of the record thereof, certified by the recorder;

"2. A copy of any assignment necessary to establish his claim, verified by the affidavit of himself, or of a subscribing witness thereto;

"3. An affidavit by himself or his agent, showing the amount then actually due on the lien."

As found by the court, the bank did not comply with any of these provisions.

[2] The right of the holder of a junior lien to redeem property sold under a decree of foreclosure of a prior mortgage thereon is purely statutory, and, in the absence of a compliance therewith, a tender of the money required to redeem is wholly ineffectual for the purpose.

[3] The power of the sheriff or that of a commissioner acting in the matter is altogether statutory, and his acts are nugatory unless the provisions of the statute are pursued. Wilcoxson v. Miller, 49 Cal. 193; Haskell v. Manlove, 14 Cal. 54; Robertson v. Van Cleave, 129 Ind. 228, 26 N. E. 899, 29 N. E. 781, 15 L. R. A. 68.

[4] Sections of the Civil Code invoked by appellant as to the extinguishment of contractual obligations, or those arising by operation of law, have no application to the question at issue, for the reason that until appellant complied with the provisions imposed by the statute the commissioner was under no obligation to act in the matter any more than he would have been in the absence of a tender of the amount of money required to effect the redemption. Kofoed v. Gordon, 122 Cal. 314, 54 Pac. 1115, upon which appellant relies, involved no question of statutory redemption by a junior lienholder as distinguished from the mortgagor in a foreclosure suit.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte GARNER. (Cr. 2211.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 13, 1918.)

1. COURTS ⟸92—OPINIONS—DICTA.

That the validity and binding force of a statute has been long acquiesced in and recognized by dicta in judicial decisions furnish an almost irresistible reason for not overturning it.

2. COURTS ⟸78—CONSTITUTIONAL COURTS—INHERENT POWER—JURISDICTION AND PROCEDURE.

In the absence of statute or where the statute is inadequate, a constitutional court, by virtue of its inherent power, may itself prescribe appropriate provision for acquiring jurisdiction and adopt the procedure to be followed.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸52—LEGISLATIVE POWER—PUNISHMENT FOR CONTEMPT.

The Legislature may prescribe the measure of punishment for constructive contempt of a constitutional court, provided such penalty be sufficient to enable the court to vindicate its authority and maintain the dignity and respect due it.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸52 — POWER OF LEGISLATURE — PUNISHMENT — IMPAIRMENT OF COURT'S POWER.

The Legislature may not, whether by procedural rules or the inadequacy of the penalty fixed, substantially impair or destroy the implied power of a constitutional court to punish for contempt.

5. CONTEMPT ⟸71—PUNISHMENT—VALIDITY OF STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1218, imposing a maximum punishment of $500 fine and imprisonment for five days, or both, for constructive contempt of court, is not invalid as providing such an insignificant punishment as to impair the court's power to vindicate itself and to protect its dignity.

6. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1213—CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

The constitutional prohibition against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment relates to the character of the punishment only.

7. CONTEMPT ⟸72—CRUEL AND UNUSUAL PUNISHMENT.

Imprisonment as a punishment for contempt of court is neither cruel nor unusual.

In Bank.

Application by Guy S. Garner for a writ of habeas corpus, directed against John C. Cline, Sheriff of Los Angeles County. Petitioner discharged.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Edgar W. Camp and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Petitioner, in that he was found guilty of unlawfully interfering with the process of the court, was adjudged guilty of contempt, and as punishment therefor he was sentenced to pay a fine of $500 and be confined in the county jail for a period of 90 days. Upon payment of the fine and after 5 days' imprisonment in the county jail, a writ of habeas corpus was issued, the return to which shows that petitioner was found guilty of acts similar to those involved in Ex parte Buckley, 69 Cal. 26, 10 Pac. 69. That such acts constituted contempt must be, and is for the purposes of this case, conceded.

Section 1218, Code of Civil Procedure, provides:

"Upon the answer and evidence taken, the court or judge must determine whether the person proceeded against is guilty of the contempt charged, and if it be adjudged that he is guilty of the contempt, a fine may be imposed on him not exceeding five hundred dollars, or he may be imprisoned not exceeding five days, or both."

The sole question presented is as to the validity and binding force of this provision of the statute; it being the claim of respondent that the Legislature has no power to enact a law, however reasonable, limiting the power of a constitutional court in imposing punishment for contempt. This contention is based upon the fact that since the court, without restrictions as to its power to impose punishment for contempt, is created by the Constitution, it, as to such an offense, and subject to the provisions of the Constitution (article 1, § 6) that forbids the imposition of excessive fines and the inflicting of cruel and unusual punishment, possesses all the powers of a court of justice as it existed at common law, among which in such matters was the exercise of unlimited power.

Except as amended in 1871, when the word "must" was substituted for the word "shall," the statute is identical with the act of the Legislature adopted in 1851 designated as section 488 of the Practice Act. Until now, due to the fact that the courts of the state have accepted it as the law pertaining to the subject, no occasion has arisen for questioning the validity of this provision, which by reason of a venerableness rarely attained by a statute of this state should have rendered it immune from the attack made.

Beginning at an early date, we find this court, in cases where the point was not directly involved, and hence subject to the criticism that what was said was dicta, giving expression to language which clearly recognized that the power of courts to impose punishment for constructive or "out-of-doors" contempt was restricted as provided by statute. In the case of Ex parte Cohen, 6 Cal. 318, decided in 1855, where the alleged contempt consisted in the refusal of petitioner to comply with an order, the court said:

"Under our statutes, the power of a court to punish for a contempt is limited to a fine of $500 and imprisonment for five days, except (as provided in section 1219, Code Civ. Proc.) when the contempt consists in the omission to perform an act which is yet in the power of a person to perform, in which case he may be imprisoned till he have performed it."

In Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 176, in discussing the power of the court to impose punishment, the court said:

"But the exercise of this power is regulated by the statute."

In Galland v. Galland, 44 Cal. 475, 13 Am. Rep. 167, petitioner had been adjudged guilty of contempt in the failure to obey an order of court requiring him to pay alimony, and this court, in the course of the opinion filed therein, said:

"In this state the power of courts to punish for contempt has been regulated by statute. It is provided that when one is adjudged guilty of contempt he may be punished by a fine of not exceeding $500 and by imprisonment for not exceeding five days, except when the contempt consists in the omission to perform an act which is yet in his power to perform. * * * This is a limitation upon the power formerly exercised by courts to punish for contempt."

In the Matter of Tyler, 64 Cal. 434, 1 Pac. 884, where a fine was imposed as punishment for the adjudged contempt, the court, speaking on the question as to the power of the court to enforce payment thereof by imprisonment, said:

"It [the court] had jurisdiction to punish by fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding five days, or by both."

In Ex parte Abbott, 94 Cal. 333, 29 Pac. 622, Chief Justice Beatty, in passing upon a like question, used language as follows:

"The limit of punishment there [section 1218] prescribed is a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding five days, or both."

To like effect is the language of the same learned judge in the concurring opinion in the case of Ex parte Todd, 119 Cal. 58, 50 Pac. 1071.

[1] While it may be conceded that these quoted expressions were dicta, nevertheless such recognition of the validity and binding force of the statute, together with long acquiescence therein, furnish, as said in People v. Richards, 1 Cal. App. 566, 82 Pac. 691, "an almost irresistible reason for not overturning it."

No doubt exists as to the inherent power of a constitutional court, in the absence of statutory provision therefor, to impose punishment for a contempt. Its very existence depends upon the exercise of such power. Hence it may be conceded that a statute without constitutional authority therefor which takes from the courts all power to punish for contempt, or fixes a penalty wholly inadequate for the purpose, would not be countenanced by the courts. Nevertheless, and while in such cases conceding the existence of such power vested in the courts, we are not prepared to adopt respondent's theory that our constitutional courts possess inherent power to the full extent as did the courts of England, which in some cases we find imposed enormous fines and imprisonment for years. To do so would not only be inconsistent with the spirit and genius of our institutions, but likewise would be tantamount to a denial of legislative power to regulate the practice and procedure by which our courts are governed, a power which, without constitutional authority, is universally recognized in all states where the code system of pleading and practice prevails. The validity of such regulations has been repeatedly upheld in this state. Thus in Ex parte Harker, 49 Cal. 465, where it is said:

"The mere procedure by which jurisdiction is to be exercised may be prescribed by the Legislature, unless, indeed, such regulations should be found to substantially impair the constitutional powers of the courts, or practically defeat their exercise."

To like effect are the cases of In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594; Smith v. Westerfield, 88 Cal. 374, 26 Pac. 206, and United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 151 Pac. 129, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199.

[2] Likewise it is held that in proceedings for contempt the court, in order to acquire jurisdiction over persons against whom the proceeding is had, must comply with the regulations adopted by the Legislature therefor. In the absence of a provision covering the particular case, or where it is inadequate, no doubt but such constitutional court, by virtue of its inherent power, may itself prescribe appropriate provision for acquiring jurisdiction and adopt the procedure to be followed. Notwithstanding this recognized right of invasion upon the inherent powers of the court as to rules of practice and procedure which counsel for respondent must concede, they deny to the legislative body the right to restrict the action of the court in imposing penalty.

[3] If, however, the legislative power may go to the extent of prescribing adequate rules of procedure by which the courts are controlled, we perceive no reason why they should not likewise be controlled as to the measure of punishment to be inflicted in "out-of-doors" contempt proceedings, provided the penalty so fixed be sufficient to enable the courts to vindicate their authority and maintain the dignity and respect due to them.

[4] The Legislature may not, whether by procedural rules or the inadequacy of the penalty fixed, substantially impair or destroy the implied power of the court to punish for contempt; yet it may provide rules of procedure and fix the maximum penalty which, if adequate for the purpose designed, must be deemed operative in controlling the action of the court.

[5] That the maximum punishment of $500 fine and imprisonment for five days, or both, as prescribed by section 1218 for the contempt involved in the instant case, which was a representation that for $50 paid to him petitioner could and would corruptly influence the judge of the court to render a wrongful decision, was not so small and insignificant as to impair the power of the court in vindicating itself and protecting its dignity, is shown by the fact that since its admission as a state the courts thereof, during periods of storm and stress such as few commonwealths have experienced, have found the penalty adequate for their protection. In addition to this fact it appears that in the severity thereof the penalty so fixed is more drastic than that contained in like statutes adopted in 14 states of the Union, the Constitutions of which, like our own, are silent upon the subject, and in 14 other states having courts created by their Constitutions, wherein no authority for the adoption of restrictive rules as to the power of the court in this respect is given, the statutes fix a maximum punishment of less severity than the penalty imposed herein by the lower court. It is worthy of note that in only three states—Georgia, Louisiana, and Virginia—does the organic law contain provisions of express grant of such power to the Legislature, and yet, in so far as we are advised, the courts, with two or three exceptions, have not expressly held such statutes inoperative.

No good purpose can be served in reviewing the great number of authorities cited in the able and exhaustive briefs filed by counsel. Suffice it to say that many of them involve powers of legislative as distinguished from constitutional courts, while others relate to the power of the Legislature to enact regulations governing procedure and trial in contempt cases. In 13 Corpus Juris. 93, it is said:

"When the duration of the imprisonment or the amount of the fine is limited by statute, the punishment may conform to such limitation, but cannot exceed it."

Many cases in support of this proposition are cited by the author, some of which are pertinent to the precise question involved and many of them having no bearing thereon. Perhaps no court has given more careful consideration to the exact question under discussion than that of Missouri, where a like statute, adopted in the absence of constitutional authority, was in State v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 234, 76 S. W. 79, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, declared invalid and of no binding force upon the constitutional courts. Later this decision was followed by a majority opinion in the case of Railway v. Gildersleeve, 219 Mo. 170, 118 S. W. 86, 16 Ann. Cas. 749, where Mr. Justice Lamm, whose judicial labors in that court constitute a monument to his industry and learning, filed an able and exhaustive dissenting opinion, concurred in by two of the justices, wherein he reviewed a great number of cases and upheld the validity of the statute. In the subsequent case of Ex parte Creasy, 243 Mo. 680, 148 S. W. 914, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 478, the validity of the statute as a limitation upon the power of the court to inflict a penalty for contempt in excess of that provided was attacked, and the court adopted the views thereon enunciated by Justice Lamm in his dissenting opinion in the Gildersleeve Case.

Judges are but human, and as said by Lord Camden in the trial of Hindson and Kersey, found in 8 Howell's State Trials, 58:

"The discretion of a judge is the law of tyrants; it is always unknown; it is different in different men; it is casual, and depends upon constitution, temper, passion. In the best it is oftentimes caprice; in the worst it is every vice, folly, and passion to which human nature is liable."

And hence, as said by Judge Taft in City of Detroit v. Detroit City Ry. Co. (C. C.) 54 Fed. 1, where "influences of a personal nature are present, we must presume a human weakness in all judges to prevent injustice from the frailty of a few." Recognizing this human frailty, a judge, since as we hold it is not necessary in vindicating his authority nor in maintaining the dignity of the high and exalted office which he occupies, should not have unbridled power to summarily commit a citizen to prison for a term of years, however long, for a constructive contempt.

[6, 7] It is no answer to this, as suggested by respondent, to say, in the language of Chief Justice John Marshall, that "all delegated power is liable to be abused," nor that the Constitution affords protection in that it prohibits the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments, since this inhibition relates to the character of the punishment, and imprisonment is neither cruel nor unusual. State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429.

Nor is there any merit in the suggestion based upon Ex parte Karlson, 160 Cal. 378, 117 Pac. 447, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1334, that contempt is a matter of price, since a poverty-stricken contemnor fined $500 and committed to prison until the fine is paid must, on account of his financial inability, suffer imprisonment, whereas a man of means subjected to a like fine and conditional penalty may escape imprisonment by paying the fine at once. Like arguments would apply in every criminal case wherein a man is subjected to a fine and committed to prison until it is paid.

Petitioner having paid the fine of $500 imposed, and served five days' imprisonment in jail, it is ordered that he be discharged from custody.

In re DARGIE'S ESTATE.

Appeal of CHAPMAN et al.

(S. F. 8710.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 17, 1918.)

1. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸273(1)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

During lifetime of husband he is owner and entitled to possession of all community property; surviving wife only becoming entitled to one-half of community property, under Civ. Code, § 1402, as survivor of the marital community.

2. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸248½—SEPARATE PROPERTY—OWNERSHIP.

All the property owned by a husband at the time of his marriage, with all the rents, issues, and profits, continue to be his separate property, under Civ. Code, § 163.

3. WILLS ⟸577—CONSTRUCTION—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

A will devising to a wife one-half of all the property "possessed" by testator, "being the same portion to which she would be entitled in the event of all of my property being community property," showed an intent that the wife was to have not only one-half of the separate property, but one-half of the community property.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. S. Wells, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of William E. Dargie, deceased. From a partial decree of distribution, M. C. Chapman and others, as executors, trustees, and residuary legatees, appeal. Reversed.

Fitzgerald, Abbott & Beardsley, and Eugene E. Trefethen, all of Oakland, for appellants.

M. C. Chapman, John F. Conners, and J. Clem Arnold, all of Oakland, for appellants executors and trustees.

Edgar D. Peixotto, of San Francisco, for appellant Dargie.

A. A. Moore and Stanley Moore, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal by the executors and trustees and by the residuary legatees from a partial decree of distribution, whereby three-fourths of the estate of the deceased was distributed to his surviving wife, one-half as community property, and one-half under the terms of the will. The correctness of the decree depends upon whether or not, by the provisions of the third division of the will, the deceased intended to deal with the entire community property, or only with that portion thereof (one-half) over which he had the power of testamentary disposition. Section 1402, C. C. The provision in question reads as follows (italics ours):

"I hereby certify and declare that at the time of my marriage with my wife Erminia Peralta Dargie, I owned and possessed in my own right, property of the then value of about one hundred thousand dollars, and which said property is still owned and possessed by me, and is a part and portion of my estate, but that for the purpose of this my said will, all of the property of which I am now possessed may be considered as community property, and I do hereby give, bequeath, devise and confirm unto my said wife Erminia Peralta Dargie, one-half of all the property, real, personal or mixed, of which I may die seized or possessed, being the same portion thereof to which she would be entitled in the event of all of my said property being community property."

[1] It will be observed that the decree stated that certain property was "owned and possessed" by him at the time of his marriage, and was still "owned and possessed" by him, but directs that such property, and all other property "possessed" by him be considered as community property. He then bequeaths and devises and confirms to his wife one-half of all property "possessed" by him at the time of his death. He evidently considered that the entire community was "possessed" by him, as it was, in fact, and deals with it as a whole. The deceased does not bequeath one-half of "my property," or of "my interest in the community property," or of the "property over which I have testamentary power," but one-half of all the property "possessed" by him. To make assurance doubly sure, he adds, "being the same portion to which she would be entitled in the event of all of my property being community property"—not, be it observed, the same portion she would receive in the event that deceased left no will (three-fourths, there being no father or mother or brothers or sisters, sections 1402, 1386, subd. 2, C. C.), but the portion of the community property she is "entitled to" as of right, namely, one-half (section 1402, C. C.). During the lifetime of the husband, he is the owner and entitled to the possession of all the community property. Upon his death the surviving wife becomes entitled to one-half of the community property as the survivor of the marital community, regardless of the existence of other heirs or of a will, but the other half passes by will, or, in case of intestacy, by the laws of succession, to his heirs, including the surviving wife in certain cases. Dargie v. Patterson, 169 Pac. 360. One-half, then, is the "portion" of the community property, to which the widow is entitled, by virtue of its community character. That the testator was referring to this half of the property to which she is entitled of right, is also further indicated by the use of the word "confirm" in the following clause:

"I do hereby give, bequeath, devise and confirm unto my said wife Erminia Peralta Dargie one-half of all the property * * * of which I may die seized or possessed."

It is true that the additional words, "I do hereby give, bequeath and devise * * * unto my said wife," etc., import more than a mere recognition of the right over which the testator had no control. But the words are appropriate to the purpose of the testator, which was to "give, devise and bequeath" to his wife one-half of all of his separate property, which, for convenience, he directed to be considered as a part of the community property. While it is true that the direction that the separate property should be treated as a part of the community property was, by implication, a devise and bequest to his wife of a one-half interest therein, it was more appropriate that this should be done, as it was, by express bequest and devise.

[2, 3] In the argument, counsel treat the will as, in effect, stating that decedent's separate property consisted of $100,000. If, however, at the time of his marriage, the deceased owned a hundred thousand dollars' worth of property, that property, with all the rents, issues and profits thereof, continued to be his separate property. Civ. Code, § 163. The marriage occurred December 15, 1881. The will was drawn 29 years thereafter (1910). The deceased died in 1911, at which time his estate was appraised at $933,900. It might be exceedingly difficult to determine what portion of the property left by him was derived from his separate property, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof, and what portion, if any, constituted community property. It is quite conceivable that, if the source of all the property left by the deceased could have been ascertained, it would have been discovered that it was largely separate property. It is, therefore, evident from the will that the deceased intended to prevent the difficulty of ascertaining what portion of his property was community, and what portion separate property, and that he desired his wife to have one-half, and no more, of all the property left by him, whether community or separate property. The will is not susceptible of the construction that the testator was therein dealing with only his separate property and the one-half of the community property over which he had testamentary control, for he expressly provides to the contrary. The court was in error in allowing the surviving wife three-fourths of the property of the deceased. She is entitled to one-half of the separate property of the deceased, and to one-half of the community property.

We concur: SHAW, J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; LORIGAN, J.

SLOSS, J. I concur in the judgment. The question is one of interpretation, simply, and I agree with Justice Wilbur's conclusion that a reading of all the provisions of the will discloses the testator's intent that the entire estate possessed by him in his lifetime should be regarded as community property, and that the widow should receive only one-half of that entire estate. In other words, the testator in speaking of "the property, real, personal, or mixed of which I may die seized or possessed," had in mind the whole of the community property, and not merely the part of it which was subject to his power of testamentary disposition.

It should, perhaps, be added that no member of the court, as I understand, is disposed to depart in the slightest degree from the familiar and well-settled rules governing the construction of wills made by married men possessed of community property. This court has consistently ruled that such a testator is presumed to know that his power of disposition by will does not extend to the surviving wife's half interest in the community property, and that the will is ordinarily to be read as covering, by its dispositions, only the property which the testator had the right to devise or bequeath, i. e., his separate property and an undivided half of the community property. The gift to the widow of "half of my estate" would, therefore, in the absence of words indicating a contrary intent, carry to her one-half of the estate subject to testamentary disposition, and she would take, in addition, one-half of the community property as survivor. A few citations will suffice: Beard v. Knox, 5 Cal. 252, 63 Am. Dec. 125; Est. of Silvey, 42 Cal. 210; Est. of Smith, 108 Cal. 115, 40 Pac. 1037; Est. of Vogt, 154 Cal. 508, 98 Pac. 265; Est. of Prager, 166 Cal. 450, 137 Pac. 37. In the present case, however, the wording of the will is such that the presumptions referred to cannot be applied without doing violence to the testator's declared intention.

I concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.

CRESCENT INV. CO. v. LAKE COUNTY INV. CO. et al. (Civ. 2552.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 12, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 9, 1919.)

1. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃415(1)—ACTION FOR FORECLOSURE—DEFENSE.

In action by plaintiff corporation as bona fide mortgagee, having advanced the money secured by the mortgage, the allegation, by way of a separate defense, of certain alleged acts of fraud on the part of one of plaintiff's directors and stockholders, was immaterial.

2. PLEADING ⊂⊃214(8)—DEMURRER—ADMISSION.

Admission by demurrer is for purpose of testing question of law, and is binding only in so far as a ruling upon the demurrer is concerned.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lake County; M. S. Sayre, Judge.

Action by the Crescent Investment Company, a corporation, against the Lake County Investment Company, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Judgment affirmed.

E. A. Freeman and F. J. Gordon, both of Oakland, for appellants.

Beverly L. Hodghead, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff. The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone.

[1] The complaint asked for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon certain real property owned by the defendants. Defendants in their answer denied the execution of the note and mortgage and substantially all the material allegations of the complaint, and set up by way of separate defense certain alleged acts of fraud on the part of one of the directors and stockholders of the plaintiff company. The plaintiff demurred to this separate defense, and the demurrer was sustained. Certainly, if the plaintiff was a bona fide mortgagee, and had advanced the money secured by the mortgage, the matters alleged in the separate defense would be immaterial in this foreclosure suit, and the demurrer was properly sustained. The questions of the execution of the mortgage and the consideration therefor were tried under the issues raised by the complaint and the denials thereof, and the trial court found in favor of the plaintiff.

[2] The appellants raise just one point upon their appeal, and we agree with the attorney for respondent that the law applicable to that question would seem to require no ruling by an appellate court. Appellants contend that, by demurring to the separate defense of the defendant, plaintiff thereby admitted all the alleged acts of fraud contained therein, and, having so admitted such acts, it stands self-convicted of conduct which should bar it from any relief in a court of equity. Of course, the admission made by a demurrer is merely an admission for the purpose of testing a question of law, and is only binding upon the demurrant in so far as a ruling upon the demurrer is concerned.

FRANCIS v. SHRADER et al. (Civ. 1669.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 9, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 7, 1919.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜189—TITLE OF VENDOR—ESTOPPEL TO DENY.

Vendee in possession under contract for sale of land cannot deny title of vendor in an action in ejectment.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜191—DEFAULT OF VENDEE—RIGHT OF POSSESSION.

Vendee under contract for purchase of building cannot continue to hold possession after making default in payments, regardless of whether vendor has title.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜339 — RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS—RIGHTS OF VENDEE.

Vendee under contract for purchase of realty is not entitled to return of purchase money paid while he continues to hold possession.

4. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜334(3) — RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS—RIGHTS OF VENDEE.

Vendee, after making default in payments, cannot recover payments made, except where there has been mutual rescission.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜334(1) — RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS—RIGHTS OF VENDEE.

Vendor, not in default, held entitled to retain moneys paid to her as part of purchase price, although there was no express covenant in contract for purchase to that effect.

6. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊜334(4) — RESCISSION BY VENDOR—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Vendor's notice of forfeiture of contract of purchase of realty, because of failure to make payments, held not to constitute an abandonment or rescission, so that vendee's assignee was entitled to recover payments made.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by Mary F. Francis against John Shrader and others, as trustees in liquidation of the West Virginia Oil Company, and D. L. Peters and another, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George E. Whitaker, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

HART, J. The action is in ejectment. The complaint alleged that on the 1st day of June, 1911, plaintiff "was the owner of, except as against the paramount title of the United States of America," certain oil-bearing lands in the county of Kern, describing them; that, on July 29, 1911, plaintiff and one E. S. Good entered into a contract by the terms of which plaintiff agreed to sell and convey, and said Good agreed to buy, said lands for the sum of $70,000, payable in installments. Said contract contained the following clause:

"In the event of a failure to comply with the terms hereof, by the said party of the second part [Good], the said party of the first part [Francis] shall be released from all obligation in law or equity to convey said property, and the said party of the second part shall forfeit all right thereto."

It is next alleged that in the month of September, 1911, the West Virginia Oil Company "went into possession under plaintiff" of said lands, and that on January 9, 1912, said Good in writing assigned all his interest under said contract to said corporation; that on January 29, 1912, plaintiff entered into a contract with said West Virginia Oil Company extending the time of payments, and it was agreed that as part consideration for the extension of said payments the oil company would not remove any of the pipe or casings in any wells drilled on said land, nor any of the derricks erected thereon, and that the company would pay for all labor and materials furnished on said lands and pay off all legal claims or liens filed thereon. Time was made of the essence of the contract. Plaintiff received as payment on account of the sale of said lands, from Good and from the oil company, $15,000 as principal and $600 as interest, and it is alleged that a payment of $5,000, due on April 29, 1912, was not paid. On October 1, 1912, plaintiff served on the oil company a notice of forfeiture of contract for failure to make payments, in which it was stated:

"You are hereby notified that your right and title under said agreement have been forfeited and surrendered."

Demand for the possession of the premises was alleged. It was also alleged that the West Virginia Oil Company, on November 30, 1912, forfeited its charter and right to do business by failure to pay its corporation license tax, and that the defendants Shrader, Lathrop, Green, Fredenall, Soale, and Meredith at that time were the members of the board of directors of said corporation and are now its trustees in liquidation.

The answer of the defendants admits as true all the allegations of the complaint with respect to the agreements referred to therein, the default of defendants in the payments on the purchase price, and the giving of notice of forfeiture by plaintiff, but denies plaintiff's ownership of said lands; denies the allegation in the complaint that on the 1st day of June, 1911, "plaintiff was in the quiet, peaceable, and exclusive possession of all or any of the described premises until the possession thereof was taken by defendants on or about the month of September, 1911, or at any other time"; admits the demand made on defendants by plaintiff for the return to her of the possession of said lands, but alleges that, at the time of the demand so made, the plaintiff failed, neglected, and refused to pay or to offer to pay or return either to the West Virginia Oil Company or the trustees in liquidation of said company the moneys received by plaintiff for and on account of the purchase price of said lands, and has ever since failed, refused, and neglected to repay or return the moneys so received by her; denies that said defendants, ever since the 29th day of April, 1912, have withheld, unlawfully, the possession of said lands from plaintiff, or have unlawfully excluded, or unlawfully now exclude, plaintiff from the possession of said lands, or any part thereof; denies that defendants have not any right, or at any time never had any right, to the possession of said lands, but, "on the contrary, these defendants allege" that at all times since the month of September, 1911, they have had the right to such possession, and still have the right to such possession, and will continue to have such right "until the plaintiff shall pay to them, as trustees of said West Virginia Oil Company, the sum of $15,600 so paid to and received by plaintiff from the said West Virginia Oil Company for and on account of the purchase price of said lands."

The defendants also filed a cross-complaint by which they seek to recover the said sum of $15,600 paid by the said company to the plaintiff on account of the purchase price of said lands. Said cross-complaint sets up the several agreements referred to in plaintiff's complaint, the notice of forfeiture and demand of plaintiff for the restitution of the premises, alleges that the plaintiff failed and refused, and now still fails and refuses, to refund to the defendants the moneys paid by the oil company on the purchase price of the lands, and that the defendants as trustees, etc., are entitled to hold the possession of said lands until said moneys are paid over by the plaintiff to the defendants.

The plaintiff demurred to the answer and to the cross-complaint, and moved to strike from the answer the allegations denying plaintiff's ownership of and right to the possession of the land, that on June 1, 1911, or at any other time, the plaintiff was in the quiet, etc., possession of the lands, and until defendants took possession thereof in September, 1911, that defendants, ever since April 25, 1912, have unlawfully withheld possession of said lands from plaintiff, and have unlawfully excluded, and now unlawfully exclude, plaintiff from the possession thereof, that defendants have no right to the possession of said lands, and that defendants are entitled to the possession thereof until the plaintiff repays to them as trustees, etc., all moneys received by her from the said oil company as part of the purchase price of said lands.

The court overruled the demurrer to the answer, sustained the demurrer to the cross-complaint, without leave to amend, and granted the motion to strike from the answer the averments above specified as those to which said motion was addressed, and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. From said judgment the defendants prosecute this appeal.

[1] The motion to strike from the answer the denial that the plaintiff was the owner of the lands, and that she was, by reason of such ownership, on the 1st day of June, 1911, in the quiet, peaceable, and exclusive possession of said lands, was properly granted upon the ground that the vendee in possession under a contract for the sale of land cannot deny the title of the vendor in an action in ejectment. 39 Cyc. p. 1614; Tyler on Ejectment, p. 558; Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 533, 91 Pac. 498; Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 107, 108, 103 Pac. 332.

The other portions stricken out involved mere legal conclusions, and also the allegations with respect to the failure and refusal of the plaintiff to pay back the moneys she had received from the oil company on the purchase price of the lands, and the right of the defendants to retain such possession until such moneys were returned to the vendee, or its trustees in liquidation, the defendants herein. The order striking from the answer the latter allegations and the order sustaining the demurrer to the cross-complaint involve and present the principal point made by the appellants, viz.: That appellants, as is their contention, have the right, under the contract for the sale of the lands, "to recover the payments made on it [said contract]; that the contract does not warrant the plaintiff retaining the payments when she forfeited the defendants' rights under the contract, and that before the plaintiff can maintain the action she must return the payments made."

It is to be noted that nowhere in the answer or in the cross-complaint is there any allegation showing or tending to show that the plaintiff was guilty of any default under the contract, nor is there any statement or allegation in either of those pleadings of the defendants denying or pretending to deny that the oil company was not in default in its payments according to the terms of the contract. To the contrary, the defendants in their pleadings expressly and directly admit that the oil company was in default in its said payments, and had been so for a long period of time and offer no excuse for such default. The defendants stand upon the bald proposition that, the contract of sale not being completed or consummated, though through no fault of the plaintiff, and the latter having received a large sum of money on the purchase price, said money ought to be returned to them before they are required to give up possession of the property, notwithstanding that the oil company, vendee in possession, refused to go on with the fulfillment of the terms of the agreement. They undertake to support this position by the statement that all that the contract provided for in the way of a forfeiture was that, in case of default by the oil company in the payments on the purchase price, it was to forfeit all right in the property and that the casings and derricks, used in the production of oil from the lands, were to revert to the plaintiff; "that the contract is entirely silent as to the payments—there was nowhere in it any stipulation that they [the moneys paid] should be forfeited to the plaintiff." It is asserted that the "notice of forfeiture given by the plaintiff bears out this contention."

While all that the defendants say as to the language of the forfeiture clause of the contract, and that of the notice declaring the contract at an end and the oil company's forfeiture of its right to proceed with the consummation of the contract, is true, we are in no doubt as to the soundness of the respondent's position that the defendants have not shown that they are entitled to the return of the moneys paid to the plaintiff under the contract as a condition precedent to the return to the plaintiff of the possession of the lands or at all.

[2-4] Counsel for the plaintiff, in their brief, well and succinctly state the law in this state respecting the rights of the parties to contracts such as the one involved herein as follows:

"It is now the settled law of this state that a vendee under a contract for the purchase of real property cannot continue to hold the possession thereof after making default in the payments as therein provided, regardless of whether the vendor has title or not, and that the vendee cannot refrain from making payments as by the contract provided, and also continue to hold possession of the land; nor can the vendee under any circumstances be entitled to the return of the money by him theretofore paid thereunder while he continues to hold possession of the land; nor can the vendee after making default in his payments without legal excuse ever recover the return of any of the money he may have paid thereon when the vendor was not in default of anything on his part to be kept and performed, except when there has been mutual rescission" (citing Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 10 et seq., 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 419, 60 Pac. 1032; Brushi v. Quail Mining, etc., Co., 147 Cal. 120, 123, 81 Pac. 404; Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, 531, 91 Pac. 498; Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 745, 93 Pac. 1007; Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 103, 108, 103 Pac. 329; List v. Moore, 20 Cal. App. 616, 129 Pac. 962; Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, 162 Cal. 539, 123 Pac. 363; Champion Min. Co. v. Champion Mines, 164 Cal. 205, 213, 128 Pac. 315).

There is not shown in this case, nor is it in any way pretended, that there was a repudiation or abandonment of the contract by plaintiff or a consent to a rescission thereof by her. The notice of forfeiture and demand of possession clearly shows that she stood squarely upon the terms of the contract.

[5] The contention that the plaintiff is not entitled to retain the moneys paid to her as part of the purchase price, for the reason that there is no express covenant in the contract that she may do so upon the forfeiture for breach of the contract of the vendee's right to consummate the purchase, and notice thereof and demand for restitution of the premises by the vendor, is answered by the cases above named, and notably by the case of Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, where the principles governing such contracts as the one here are elaborately considered and ably expounded. The following is what the court in that case, among other things, said:

"When an equitable showing is not made to excuse the breach, the vendor has the right in equity, as he always has at law, to retain the moneys paid by the vendee. Therefore we have said that it matters not in such contracts that the parties have declared that the vendor may retain the moneys paid as stipulated damages. The name which the parties thus give does not alter the fact nor change the vendor's rights. If it be said that the clause for stipulated damages is void, still the vendor is entitled to retain the money. Thus, in Hansbrough v. Peck, 5 Wall. 497 [18 L. Ed. 520], the Supreme Court of the United States, having under consideration this identical question, says: 'No rule in respect to the contract is better settled than this: That the party who has advanced money or done an act in part performance of the agreement, and then stops short and refuses to proceed to its ultimate conclusion, the other party being ready and willing to proceed and fulfill all his stipulations according to the contract, will not be permitted to recover back what has thus been advanced or done.'

"In precise illustration of the proposition may be quoted the language of the learned Chancellor Walworth, in Egerton v. Peckham, 11 Paige 352: 'The contract, it is true, contains a general provision that if default be made in either of the payments Strobeck shall forfeit all the previous payments and give up possession of the premises. This, however, is but the legal effect of the contract without such a provision. (Italics ours.) For, if no such provision had been contained in the agreement, the defendant might have brought an action of ejectment to recover the possession of the premises, which ejectment suit this court would not have restrained, except upon the terms of paying the balance of the purchase money and the costs of suit. Nor could the payments already made pursuant to the terms of the contract have been recovered back if the vendee had refused to complete his purchase even if this clause of forfeiture had not been inserted in the contract.'" (Italics ours.)

In a concurring opinion by Mr. Justice Harrison in the Glock Case and concurred in by Garoutte and Van Fleet, JJ., it is said:

"The provision that in case of default by the plaintiff to comply with his agreement he should forfeit his right to whatever moneys he might theretofore have paid, and that the defendant should be released from all obligation to convey the property, was but a declaration in express terms of what would have been the legal rights of the parties without such provision. The plaintiff had agreed to pay the money to the defendant as a condition precedent to his right to demand a conveyance of the land, and as the consideration for the defendant's agreement to make the conveyance, and he could not by his mere default become entitled to repossess himself of the money which he had paid under this express agreement."

In List v. Moore, 20 Cal. App. 623, 129 Pac. 964, it is said, referring to the cases cited by the attorneys therein:

"It is declared also that the right of the vendor to retain the part of the purchase price paid after the default of the vendee is independent of any express clause in the contract for forfeiture of rights or for retention of the purchase money as liquidated damages, that such clauses are merely declarations in express terms of the legal rights of the parties under such a contract, without them, and that the validity of such express clauses is immaterial. It is furthermore held that in such case it is only where the vendor, after default of the vendee, agrees to a mutual abandonment and rescission that the vendee is entitled to receive the purchase money paid."

[6] We have said that the notice of the forfeiture and demand for the return to plaintiff of the possession of the lands did not constitute an abandonment and rescission of the contract. In Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 745, 93 Pac. 1007, the notice of forfeiture is very much like the one in this case, and it was in that case held that the notice or the act of giving it did not involve or constitute a rescission. The court said:

"Plaintiffs had the right without abandoning or rescinding the contract to insist that by the terms thereof defendants, by reason of their default, had no further right thereunder. * * * Their notice of forfeiture and demand for possession of the mining property were strictly in line with this claim and were in no sense a repudiation or abandonment of the contract or a consent to a rescission thereof. * * * There being no rescission or abandonment of the contract by the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs at all times having insisted on the contract and stood on its terms, and being in no respect in default, the vendees in default were not entitled to recover either the moneys paid by them to plaintiffs or the moneys expended in developing the property."

See, also, Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., supra, and cases therein cited, on what does and does not constitute in such a case as this a rescission of the contract.

There is no occasion for the entertainment of the remotest doubt that the case here comes within the doctrines of the Glock and other cases above cited, and that the judgment appealed from should, therefore, be affirmed.

It is so ordered.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSUR. CORPORATION, LIMITED, OF LONDON, ENG., et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2491; L. A. 5422.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 22, 1918. On Rehearing by Supreme Court in Bank, May 21, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=375(1) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—"COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT."

A street flushing motor truck operator, who fell from truck in effort to pick up wrench from footboard while manipulating water discharge lever, was injured in "course of employment," though at time of injury one not an employé was running the truck by his permission.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

for compensation, opposed by Tryon & Brain, copartners, employers, and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, of London, England, insurer. Award by the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California, and the employer and insurer make application for writ of review. Affirmed.

George H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, and Warren H. Pillsbury, of Oakland, for respondents.

WORKS, Judge pro tem. The petitioners Tryon & Brain, copartners, were engaged in the operation of certain street flushing motor vehicles in the city of Los Angeles, and Earl A. Booth was the driver of one of them. He was forbidden by his employers to permit any person to ride on the vehicle with him while he was in the discharge of his duty. Nevertheless, upon the occasion which is of interest in this proceeding, he had in company with him one Schilling, while he was engaged in his work. The truck operated by Booth had a seat across the front capable of accommodating two persons. Immediately in front of the right side of the seat was the steering wheel by means of which the truck was guided, the vehicle being what is known as a right-drive machine. It was on the right side of the seat, therefore, that Booth was accustomed to sit when the truck was in service in his charge. On the occasion now in question, however, Schilling, who was an experienced motor driver, occupied the right side of the seat and operated the car. Booth was at his left and, while the truck was moving forward under the guidance and operation of Schilling, was engaged in the manipulation of a lever which controlled the discharge of water upon the street. While so engaged, Booth observed a wrench lying on the footboard of the truck. He feared it was about to fall into the street and reached over to pick it up. In his attempt to do so he pitched to the ground and suffered severe injuries from the fall. At the time, the truck was moving over a smoothly paved street, and there was no jar nor shock to which Booth's fall could be attributed.

Because of the injuries suffered by him, Booth made application to the respondent Accident Commission for compensation, and it was awarded him. In this proceeding the petitioners seek to have the award annulled.

Petitioners' first point is that Booth's injury did not occur in the course of his employment, for the reason that when he surrendered the running of the truck to Schilling he stepped aside from his employment and took upon himself an added risk not within the course of the employment. Counsel cite several decided cases to the general point that compensation may not be awarded an employé where he departs from the performance of his regular work and takes up the discharge of another task for his employer, which latter is different from the ordinary work which the employé was engaged to perform. One of these cases, taking it as a sample of them all, is Robert Sherer & Co. v. Ind. Acc. Com'n, 185 Cal. 615, 166 Pac. 318. In that case the employé was a night watchman on a locomotive, but he was injured when he was away from the locomotive altogether and while performing work entirely distinct from his duty in connection with it. He had left the engine and had temporarily taken the post of a night watchman on a steam shovel owned by the same person who owned the locomotive, the steam shovel being some distance from the locomotive. While the employé was on the steam shovel he lost his life, and the Supreme Court held that he was not entitled to compensation, because he was outside the course of his employment at the time. That case and the others like it do not aid us now. The employé of Tryon & Brain did not abdicate either the place or the character of his employment. He gave up a part of his work to another, it is true, as he permitted Schilling to run the truck, but it was strictly within the line of his duty to operate and care for the levers which controlled the flow of water from the tank of the truck to the street. The same may be said of his attempt to prevent the wrench from falling from the footboard. He was not outside the course of his employment merely because he allowed a stranger to perform a part of his task while he was engaged in the performance of the remainder of it. It is a part of petitioners' contention on this point that Booth took upon himself a risk outside of his employment in permitting Schilling to run the truck; but that does not appear to be the case. In fact, the contrary appears. The accident, so far as any connection of Schilling with it as a causative factor is concerned, happened in no manner different from the following imaginary case: We will suppose the truck to be standing still for some proper reason, let us say, while the truck tank is being filled from a fire plug at the curb. As the truck stands, let us also suppose Booth to be occupying the left side of the seat, either because the fire plug is on that side and he will soon be called upon to turn off the water, or for any other reason. He discovers the wrench on the footboard and, in reaching for it, falls from the car, either because he becomes overbalanced, or his foot slips, or his hand misses its hold upon some handle or projection he has attempted to seize as he leans forward. In such a case he would undoubtedly be entitled to compensation, and the record here discloses no different state of facts, so far as legal effect is concerned.

The petitioners contend that Booth was intoxicated, and that his injury resulted from his being in that condition. They insist that a finding of the respondent commission that he was not intoxicated is not sustained by the evidence. They do not contend that there was not evidence before the commission on both sides of this question, but they insist that the testimony to the effect that Booth was not intoxicated was "intrinsically unbelievable." We do not so regard it. The commission was within its province, under all the evidence, in determining that Booth was not intoxicated at the time of the accident.

The petitioners insist that there should be an annulment of the award to the extent that it allows the amount of a certain bill for hospital charges and for the services of physicians. They say that no evidence was taken upon the question, and that the only showing of record in support of the allowance of the bill is a statement of charges at a hospital, filed seven days after the case was submitted to the commission for decision. This bill was filed pursuant to a stipulation entered into at the hearing, within the terms of which it appears properly to come, both as to its subject-matter and as to the time of its filing.

The award is affirmed.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, denying rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition to have the above-entitled cause heard and determined by this court after judgment in the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District is denied.

MELVIN, J. (dissenting). I dissent from this court's refusal to transfer the case to the Supreme Court.

The man to whom the Industrial Accident Commission awarded compensation was the driver of a street-flushing motor vehicle. His duty was to operate and guide the machine and, incidentally, to manipulate the lever by which water was discharged upon the street. The only place from which he could perform these services was the right side of the seat. He was forbidden to allow any one to ride with him, but in violation of orders had permitted another man to take the steering gear while he moved to the left-hand side of the seat. While seated there he endeavored to pick up a wrench from the footboard on that side of the truck, and in so doing lost his balance, fell and was injured.

It is clear that if the driver had been in the place where his obligation to his employers required him to be, he would not have met with this accident. The fact that he was using the lever for the release of the water—a part of the work intrusted to him—is a false quantity in the problem. His was not a divided duty. He was not required to steer the car part of the time from the right-hand side of the seat and to work the lever a part of the time from the other side. His place of duty was at the steering wheel. This place he had abandoned in disobedience to orders, and if he had done the work for which he was hired and paid, he would not have met with this accident. If the man had left his machine; had gone to Casey's saloon for a drink; and while there had been hit by a hardwood bung starter wielded by a strong-armed bartender, no one would pretend that his employer was bound to compensate him. Yet his position on the left-hand side of that seat was logically as flagrant a departure from his post of duty as would have been his presence at Casey's bar. The case of Sherer & Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 185 Cal. 615, 166 Pac. 318, is absolutely in point, and is utterly opposed to the conclusion reached by the Industrial Accident Commission, the District Court of Appeal and the majority of the Justices of this court.

SIMONS v. BUNNELL, Police Judge.
(Civ. 2702.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 7, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜612(3)—ALTERNATIVE METHOD OF APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT.

Transcript, if considered as one prepared under alternative method of appeal, described in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 953a–953c, is not a duly certified transcript (except as to judgment roll, accompanied with clerk's certificate thereto), where it was not transcribed by court reporter, and truth and correctness thereof was not certified by trial judge.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜641—ALTERNATIVE METHOD OF APPEAL—TRANSCRIPT.

Where merits of grounds of reversal relied upon cannot be ascertained without referring to contents of police court record, and where transcript showing such record as evidence received in superior court has not been settled by the judge thereof, no grounds for reversal appear and judgment will be affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County: Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Proceedings by Max Simons against F. W. Bunnell, Police Judge of the City of Bakersfield. From a judgment denying plaintiff's application for a peremptory writ of mandate, he appeals. Affirmed.

E. A. Klein, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Walter Osborn and Leon French, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

⊜For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

CONREY, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment denying plaintiff's application for a peremptory writ of mandate. There is no printed transcript. The appellant has not printed with his brief any part of the contents of the transcript. The transcript is described on its title page as "Clerk's Transcript Prepared under Sec. 953a, C. C. P." Pages 1 to 28 contain the judgment roll, together with the clerk's certificate thereto. Page 29 purports to be a copy of the notice of appeal, and pages 30 to 118 purport to contain a statement of testimony received in the trial of a criminal action before the police court of the city of Bakersfield, in which court respondent Bunnell, as police judge, presided, together with certain instructions to a jury and a copy of docket entries and of the complaint in said action in the police court. Page 119 is a certificate by the clerk of the superior court covering both the judgment roll and said subsequent documents, all of which the clerk certifies were prepared in accordance with the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] Considering the transcript as one which the appellant attempted to have prepared under the alternative method of appeal described in sections 953a, 953b, and 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is not (except as to the judgment roll) a duly certified transcript, since it was not transcribed by the court reporter, and the truth and correctness thereof does not appear to have been certified by the judge of the superior court.

[2] The brief for appellant shows that he is relying upon claimed grounds for reversal the merits of which could not be ascertained without referring to the contents of said purported record made in the police court. As pointed out above, the transcript showing that record as evidence received in the superior court has not been settled by the judge who tried the case in which this appeal is taken, and for that reason alone, if for no other, no grounds for reversal appear.

PEOPLE v. KAWANO. (Cr. 621.)

1. False Pretenses ⟸39—Intent to Defraud Bank—Evidence.

Evidence that defendant presented to first bank check on another, knowing he had not sufficient funds for its payment, and that payment was refused until he secured an indorser, when at his request he was paid the sum named in the check, warranted the inference that defendant intended to defraud the first bank, and it was immaterial that it subsequently recovered from the indorse

2. Criminal Law ⟸400(8) — Evidence of Bank Account.

The testimony of the bank's credit remittance man that the defendant had only the one account, which was introduced in evidence, and had no credit with the bank at the time he drew the check, was within the exception to the hearsay rule that results of voluminous facts or of the examination of many books and papers, which could not be conveniently made in court, may be proved by the person who made the examination, as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1855, subd. 5.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

M. Kawano was convicted under Pen. Code, § 476a, and from the judgment and an order denying a new trial he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

M. R. Van Wormer, of San Luis, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction under section 476a of the Penal Code, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

Defendant was charged by information with having made, drawn, uttered, and delivered to the Commercial Bank of San Luis Obispo a certain check for the sum of $15 on the First National Bank of Los Angeles, with intent to defraud said Commercial Bank, knowing that he did not have sufficient funds or credit with said First National Bank to meet the same. The evidence showed that on March 5, 1918, the defendant presented to the Commercial Bank a blank check of the First National Bank and "wanted to get $15." The teller thereupon filled in the check for that amount to the order of his bank, and the defendant signed it. The teller refused to cash the check without the signature of an indorser thereon, and defendant took it away and secured the indorsement of one Kurokawa thereon, after which, on the same day, he brought it back to the Commercial Bank, delivered it, and received the cash on it. The check was returned unpaid and was never paid by the First National Bank, but the amount thereof was later paid to the Commercial Bank by the indorser, Kurokawa.

[1] Two points are made upon the appeal:

(1) "That there was no evidence that defendant intended to defraud the Commercial Bank of San Luis Obispo."

Appellant urges, in this connection, that it is apparent from the evidence that, if defendant intended to defraud any one, it must have been the indorser, Kurokawa, who was financially responsible and who did in fact eventually pay the check. It is urged by the respondent that the offense was complete when the defendant first signed and presented the check to the Commercial Bank, without Kurokawa's indorsement thereon, under the terms of the statute, which provides that the making or drawing or uttering or delivering, under the conditions specified, shall constitute the offense. Whether this be correct or not, it seems sufficient to say that when the defendant, upon the second occasion, presented the indorsed check to the Commercial Bank for the purpose of getting the money thereon and did thereby obtain the money, these facts, shown by the uncontradicted evidence, warranted the inference by the jury of the further fact that he intended then and thereby to defraud said bank of the money so obtained, if the other elements of the offense were then existing. The circumstance that the Commercial Bank might be able to, and did thereafter in fact, succeed in transferring the burden of its loss to the shoulders of the indorser, in no way militates against the reasonableness of this inference.

[2] This brings us to the second point urged by appellant, namely:

"That there was no evidence that defendant had no funds or credit with the First National Bank of Los Angeles at the time he made the check, or that he knew he had no funds or credit there."

The credit remittance man of the First National Bank, who was charged with the handling of all business with outside California banks, testified that he had made a personal inspection of the books of the bank, in company with the auditor thereof, with reference to the particular account of M. Kawano, the name of defendant, and the name signed to the check, and that there was no account on the books of the bank in that name other than the one introduced in evidence, and that defendant had no credit with said bank at the time he drew the check or at any time subsequent to October 30, 1912. The account introduced in evidence was in the name of M. Kawano and was opened on October 22, 1912, and closed on October 30, 1912. Appellant urges that the books of the bank were the best evidence to prove these facts, and that the testimony of the witness was therefore hearsay and incompetent. The burden upon the prosecution in this respect was to prove a negative, namely, that the books of the bank did "not" show a certain thing. If appellant's contention were correct, it would have been incumbent upon the prosecution in this case to bring into court all the books of customers' accounts with the First National Bank of Los Angeles covering a considerable period of time. This brings this case within the well-established exception to the hearsay rule, which is stated as follows:

"When it is necessary to prove the results of voluminous facts, or of the examination of many books and papers, and the examination cannot be conveniently made in court, the results may be proved by the person who made the examination." San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 86, 53 Pac. 410, 413.

This rule is codified in section 1855, Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 5, as follows:

"There can be no evidence of the contents of a writing, other than the writing itself, except in the following cases: * * * (5) When the original consists of numerous accounts or other documents, which cannot be examined in court without great loss of time, and the evidence sought from them is only the general result of the whole."

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1918. On Rehearing, Dec. 7, 1918.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸119(2) — SURFACE WATER—RIGHTS OF UPPER PROPRIETOR.

The upper proprietor has no right to divert by artificial means the surface water standing upon his own land to the land of the lower proprietor to the prejudice of the latter.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸119(2)— SURFACE WATER—NATURAL DRAINAGE.

The easement of the upper proprietor to have the water flow on the land of the lower proprietor is limited to the disposition of the water through natural channels, and he cannot accelerate it by artificial ditches, or increase the drainage to the injury of the lower owner.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸119(2)— DRAINAGE OF SURFACE WATER—RIGHTS OF UPPER PROPRIETOR—DIVERTING FROM NATURAL COURSE.

That the surface water from only a portion of upper proprietor's land flowed in its natural course to the land of his neighbor did not justi-fy him in so draining, by means of ditches, the residue of his land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by the Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior University against J. Ellis Rodley. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Judgment reversed.

Wilson & Wilson, of San Francisco, and McCoy & Gans, of Red Bluff, for appellant.
Guy R. Kennedy, of Chico, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Plaintiff and defendant owned adjoining tracts of land, the land of the latter being higher than that of the former. It is alleged in the complaint that defendant dug a ditch upon the defendant's said tract of land over and along nearly the entire length of said land and up to the point where it adjoins plaintiff's land, for the purpose of draining defendant's said tract of land, and caused all rain and surface waters thereon to run to and upon said plaintiff's land, and said ditch since its construction has so drained defendant's tract of land, and "has carried all of said surplus rainwater contrary to their natural course, to the end of said ditch at the said point of the boundary line of the said two tracts of land." It is further alleged that these surface waters have "flowed to and upon and over and across the plaintiff's said tract of land and have caused large bodies of water to form upon the plaintiff's said tract of land, and have thereby made a large portion of plaintiff's said tract of land unfit for cultivation or use, and have thereby caused great and irreparable damage and injury to plaintiff and to plaintiff's said tract of land." There is also an allegation that it is the purpose of defendant to continue the maintenance of said ditch and to so perpetuate the overflow of plaintiff's land. The prayer was, therefore, for damages and an injunction to prevent any further injury to plaintiff's property. The findings and judgment, however, were in favor of defendant, and from said judgment the appeal has been taken.

There is, really, no substantial conflict in the evidence upon any material point. There are various minor differences, but the witnesses are in somewhat unusual accord on all important matters. A careful reading of the record discloses these facts as stated substantially by appellant: (1) Defendant's land is nearly level and has but little natural runoff or drainage. (2) The surface is somewhat lower toward the center of the tract than on the east and west sides thereof. (3) Through the tract from east to west are three elevations or ridges, and these have formed three separate and distinct depressions or "potholes" of considerable extent for holding water. (4) During the winter the rains cause these "potholes" to become filled with water which varies in depth from a few inches to a foot or more. (5) It was only during excessive and unusual floods that these potholes overflowed and the water ran off of defendant's land by natural course. (6) Before the construction of the ditch hereinafter mentioned, these depressions held the water on defendant's land as late as the month of May, and many of defendant's fruit trees were killed by the standing water, and he was also prevented from cultivating the soil and raising crops thereon. (7) For a short distance of a few hundred feet from the southeast corner of defendant's land there was a swale, or water course which would conduct water finding its way therein onto the plaintiff's land. (8) For the purpose of conducting the surface and surplus waters from his said land onto and through the said swale onto plaintiff's said land and thereby draining his own land, especially the portions covered by said potholes, defendant in the fall of 1914 caused to be constructed a ditch throughout almost the entire length of his said land and so as to connect with said swale, and, also, caused said swale to be cleaned out and deepened. (9) The result of the construction of said ditch and of the change made in the swale was that said land of defendant, especially said depressions or potholes, were drained and the waters caused to flow to and upon said land of plaintiff. (10) This result greatly increased the amount of water flowing from said defendant's said land to and upon plaintiff's and caused material damage to plaintiff and to its said land. (11) It was and is the intention of defendant, by means of said ditch, to continue to so conduct said surplus water onto the land of plaintiff, and he will do so unless restrained and enjoined by the court.

[1-3] What are the legal principles applicable to the situation created by the foregoing facts? As to the question there can be no doubt in this state, as the law of and pertaining to surface waters is clearly settled. The upper proprietor has no right to divert by artificial means the surface waters standing upon his own land to the land of the lower proprietor to the prejudice of the latter. He must allow it to pursue its natural course by its accustomed channel. He has an easement to have the water flow on the land of the lower proprietor, but it is limited to the disposition of the water through the chosen channels of nature. The owner of the upper land cannot accelerate by means of artificial ditches or increase the drainage of his own land to the injury of the lower owner. It would, of course, follow that, if the surface water from only a portion of his land flowed in its natural course to the land of his neighbor, this would not justify him in so draining by means of ditches the residue of his land. The principle does not apply to a gradual increase in drainage that may be caused by the cultivation of the soil according to the usual method. We are, however, not dealing with that condition, but we are clearly confronted with the fact that by artificial means the defendant has caused a considerable portion of his land to be drained and the water precipitated onto the land of plaintiff, whereas, according to the course of nature said water would not reach said land.

Among the many decisions in this state bearing upon the situation it is sufficient to refer to some of the later ones. In Rudel v. Los Angeles County, 118 Cal. 281, 50 Pac. 400, some of the earlier cases are reviewed, and it was held that the upper proprietor could not gather and concentrate surface water from a large area in a single channel and precipitate it in volume upon the servient tenement, but only that he was entitled to have it flow in its wonted manner without obstruction.

In Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 80 Pac. 92, it was said:

"Appellants' principal contention is that, under the statutes of this state (Stats. 1850, p. 219) and under section 4468 of the Political Code, as the common law of England is made the rule of decision in this state where not repugnant to or inconsistent with our Constitution or laws, the defendants' acts in ridding themselves of this stormwater were entirely consistent with their rights, and if plaintiff suffered damage therefrom it was damnum absque injuria. Such, indeed, was the rule at common law, but, by a long course of decisions in this state consistently adhered to, the rule of the civil law has been adopted and has become our rule of property." (Citing a large number of cases.) "It follows, therefore, that the owner of higher lands has no right, for his own relief, either to divert surface or stormwaters from his lands onto the lands of another, over which they would not naturally have flowed, nor has he the right by accumulating the surface waters upon his own lands, in ditches, or other like artificial channels, to precipitate them upon his neighbor's land in larger quantities or in different form from that which they would have had or taken in the course of nature."

In Galbreath v. Hopkins, 159 Cal. 297, 113 Pac. 174, it is said:

"It is, of course, clear under the law that, unless the defendants have acquired a right by prescription to discharge the water from the pond by artificial means upon the land of plaintiff, they have no right to do so at all. While the owner of upper land has the right to have the waters from his land flow in their natural course down upon the lands below, he has no right, by the construction of ditches or other artificial means, to turn waters which have naturally accumulated in ponds or depressions on his land upon the land of his neighbor lower down; * * * and, where water is thereby caused to flow upon the land of another which would not naturally flow thereon, this is an invasion and injury to his right of property and a nuisance per se, the continuance or maintenance of which he has the right to have enjoined."

Heier v. Krull, 160 Cal. 441, 117 Pac. 530, is to the same effect. Therein it is declared:

"The gist of the threatened injury alleged in the complaint is the making of the new ditch and the alteration of the slough in such a manner that the water falling on the land north of the alleged ridge, and which did not before reach plaintiff's lands, will be carried to and upon said lands through said proposed ditch across the ridge. Every landowner must bear the burden of receiving upon his land the surface water naturally falling upon land above it and naturally flowing to it therefrom, and he has the corresponding right to have the surface water naturally falling upon his land or naturally coming upon it, flow freely therefrom upon the lower land adjoining, as it would flow under natural conditions. From these rights and burdens the principle follows that he has a lawful right to complain of others, who, by interference with natural conditions, cause such surface water to be discharged in greater quantity or in a different manner upon his land, than would occur under natural conditions. This is the settled law of this state."

The record before us brings this case within the doctrine of these decisions. It may be admitted that the surface waters from a large portion of the defendant's land is accustomed to flow in accordance with the topography and slope of the country onto the land of plaintiff, but the case is entirely different in reference to the waters that are accumulated in said potholes. Indeed, the testimony of the defendant himself shows very clearly that the purpose of the construction of the ditch was to drain these depressions so as to save his orchard. If said waters had been accustomed to flow off in a natural way, there would have been obviously no necessity for the construction of the ditch. Defendant seems to have proceeded upon the theory that the rule of the common law as to surface waters prevails in this state, and the court below apparently took that view of the case. Counsel for respondent also argues from the same standpoint, and he cites from other jurisdictions well-considered decisions upholding his contention; but they do not state the rule applicable in California.

It is to be regretted that the accumulated surface waters on defendant's land have been to him the occasion of such injury, but in morals as well as in law he is not justified in shifting this burden to his neighbor. Of course, he must use his own property so as not to willfully injure another, or, as the Latins have it, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas."

If it had been shown that by percolation, seepage, or other natural method, said waters were accustomed to flow over plaintiff's land, and that the burden of the servitude had not been appreciably increased by the construction of the ditch, we would, of course, have a different case. We find no such condition, however.

We have not considered other matters, as we deem the foregoing decisive so far as this appeal is concerned.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. We have carefully examined the interesting petition of respondent for a rehearing, but we do not think the evidence is sufficient to take the case out of the rule as to surface waters which was enunciated in our opinion filed herein. It is possible that such evidence may be supplied on another trial. There are a few general observations by some of the witnesses that might be construed as having some tendency to support respondent's position, but we think the evidence is too uncertain and indefinite to justify the finding that all the surface waters from defendant's land "flow by their natural course into natural channels" upon the plaintiff's said tract of land.

Of course if plaintiff has no further interest in the litigation, as suggested by respondent, this fact can be shown on the retrial; but there is nothing in the record to justify us in taking cognizance of that fact.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

GLENN et al. v. CALIFORNIA TRONA CO. et al. (Civ. 2381.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 9, 1918.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟸460(2) — VALIDITY—PLEADING.

A complaint characterizing a judgment as a "purported" judgment, alleged to be "claimed" by certain parties, is insufficient to impeach its validity.

2. CORPORATIONS ⟸175 — ASSESSMENT OF STOCK—PURPOSES.

Under Civ. Code, § 331, the directors of a corporation had power to assess the stock for payment of expenses, conducting the business, or paying debts, and a complaint to annul an assessment, not alleging that it was not levied for any of such purposes, but showing a large judgment debt, is subject to demurrer.

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸189(12)—ASSESSMENTS—VALIDITY—ACTION TO ANNUL—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden is upon the party attacking an assessment of corporate stock to show its invalidity.

4. CORPORATIONS ⟸189(11)—ASSESSMENT OF STOCK — ACTION TO ANNUL — PLEADING—COMPLAINT.

In an action to annul an assessment of corporation stock, a complaint, alleging that the purpose of the assessment was to "freeze out" the plaintiffs, is insufficient to show that the assessment is invalid.

5. CORPORATIONS ⟸189(2) — ASSESSMENT OF STOCK—ACTION TO ANNUL ASSESSMENT.

In an action to set aside the sale and recover stock sold for delinquent assessments, invalid for irregularity or defect in the sale, the plaintiff must pay or tender to the corporation or party holding the stock the sum for which the same was sold in view of Civ. Code, § 347.

6. CORPORATIONS ⟸189(11)—ACTION TO ANNUL ASSESSMENT—PLEADING.

In an action to annul assessments and recover stock sold under delinquent assessment, plaintiff failed to state a cause of action by merely alleging a previous tender of the assessments, without offering in his complaint to do equity by paying the assessments.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸948 — DISCRETION OF COURT — PRESUMPTION — AMENDMENT OF PLEADING.

Where plaintiff has been permitted to amend a complaint three times and still fails to state a cause of action, it cannot be presumed the superior court abused its discretion in refusing leave to further amend.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Waste, Judge.

Action by Effie C. Glenn and others against the California Trona Company and others. From a judgment sustaining the demurrers to the third amended complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. H. Countryman, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Charles W. Slack and Chauncey S. Goodrich, both of San Francisco, for respondents Foreign Mines Development Co. and others.

Perry Evans, of San Francisco, for respondents California Trona Co. and others.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an action brought to annul an assessment on the corporate stock of the California Trona Company and to vacate the sale of delinquent stock belonging to the plaintiffs. The action was begun in May, 1912. A third amended complaint was filed on May 3, 1915. Demurrers by the defendants to this third amended complaint were sustained on April 21, 1916, and judgment was entered on April 25, 1916. The appeal is taken from that judgment.

[1] One of the attacks upon the assessment made in the third amended complaint was based upon the allegation that the board of directors which levied the assessment were not the legal board of directors of the company. Between the time of the filing of the third amended complaint and the decision on demurrer, the Supreme Court, in the case of Dolbear v. Wilkinson, 172 Cal. 366, 156 Pac. 488, Ann. Cas. 1917E, 1001, decided that this board of directors was the legally elected and constituted board of directors of the corporation. That point is therefore not insisted upon by the appellants; but they do insist that the assessment is void for other reasons arising out of the following facts: It is alleged that the assessment was levied for the purpose of "freezing out" the plaintiffs by having their stock sold thereunder. It is further alleged that certain of the individual defendants, namely, E. J. Boyes, Guy Wilkinson, Lucien Simon, Goodrich, and Hanus, are the directors of the California Trona Company, and that the other individual defendants are stockholders of that company. It is further alleged that these stockholders and directors are mere dummies for the Foreign Mines Development Company, another corporation, organized in Great Britain. There is a further allegation that, by a judgment of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco entered previous to the sale of plaintiffs' stock, the defendants were enjoined from using a certain judgment of said court existing in their favor to settle any assessment upon any of the stock of the California Trona Company. This latter judgment is characterized as a "purported" judgment, which it is alleged is "claimed" by Simon and his wife. There is no allegation in this third amended complaint sufficient to impeach the validity of that judgment. Indeed, from the allegations of the complaint it must be held to appear upon the face thereof that this judgment is a valid judgment, for it is presumed to be valid in the absence of allegations showing its invalidity, and this is especially true upon a collateral attack such as that made upon it in this action. It is further alleged that Simon and his wife and the other defendants did use this judgment in violation of the injunction for the settlement of the assessments upon certain stock of the defendants; and it is also alleged that the sale of the stock was not made at public auction but behind closed and locked doors, in a room to which no person was admitted except upon permission of the individual defendants in this action. It is also averred that Phillips, one of the plaintiffs, who held 20 shares of the stock of the California Trona Company, evidenced by a single certificate, tendered immediately before the sale to a person who claimed at that time to be the secretary of the corporation, but who is not alleged to have been actually such secretary, sufficient money to cover the assessment on six of his shares and the costs incurred by the corporation up to that time in preparing for the sale.

[2-6] These allegations are not sufficient to show an invalid assessment. The directors of the corporation had power under section 331 of the Civil Code to assess the stock of the corporation for the purpose of paying expenses, conducting business, or paying debts of the corporation. It is not alleged in this complaint that this assessment was not levied for the purpose of paying the expenses of the corporation or of conducting its business, and it is not only not alleged that the company was free from debt, or that this assessment was not levied for the purpose of paying its debts, but it appears upon the face of the complaint itself, construing it according to the familiar rule for the construction of pleadings upon demurrer, that there was a valid judgment for $40,000 existing in favor of Simon and his wife against the corporation at the time this assessment was levied. The burden is upon the party attacking an assessment to show its invalidity, and no facts appear in this complaint sufficient to show that this is other than a valid assessment; not even the allegation that the purpose of the assessment was to "freeze out" the plaintiffs is sufficient to invalidate it. Von Horst v. American Hop & Barley Co. (C. C.) 177 Fed. 976. In that case United States District Judge Van Fleet, in passing upon this question raised in the same way by a demurrer to a complaint, said:

"It is not alleged in any specific way that the assessment was not levied for a proper purpose, but simply that it was not levied 'in good faith, but for the purpose of freezing out this complainant.' Since fraud will not be presumed, but must be made to appear, this averment is not sufficient to negative the presumption that the assessment was levied for a proper purpose."

This is but the application of the general rule that where the act done is not illegal the motive which prompts it is immaterial. Clopton v. Chandler, 27 Cal. App. 595, 150 Pac. 1012. The circumstances surrounding the levying and enforcement of this assessment may have been suspicious, even reprehensible and perhaps fraudulent; but, if so, counsel for plaintiff should have been able to set them forth specifically and clearly, and, as he has not been able to do so after four attempts, the trial court, compelled to either find a sufficient cause of action stated in the complaint or to sustain the demurrer, was right in taking the latter course, so far as the attack upon the assessment for fraud is concerned.

Assuming, but not deciding, that the sale was invalid, still plaintiffs have not stated a cause of action in their complaint to set aside the sale, for under section 347 of the Civil Code no action must be sustained to recover stock sold for delinquent assessments upon the ground of irregularity or defect in the sale, unless the party seeking to maintain such action first pays or tenders to the corporation, or the party holding the stock sold, the sum for which the same was sold. It is not alleged in the complaint that any of the plaintiffs except Phillips tendered the sum for which any of the stock was sold under this assessment at any time. Phillips is averred to have tendered the assessment on six shares, as above stated, to a person who claimed to be, but is not averred to have been, the secretary of the corporation, and it is averred that the directors of the corporation refused to receive the money, but proceeded in spite of this tender to sell the six shares of stock. As to all the plaintiffs except Phillips, under the foregoing section 347 of the Civil Code, the complaint is insufficient because of the failure to aver any tender whatever. We think Phillips also has failed to state a cause of action in not going further than his allegations, and offering in his complaint to do equity by paying the assessment, for it was held in Buena Vista, etc., Co. v. Tuohy, 107 Cal. 243, 40 Pac. 386, that a plaintiff seeking equity must do equity, and that a complaint in equity which does not offer to do equity is demurrable. The foregoing section of the Code is no more than declaratory of this maxim of equity jurisprudence, and the general rule of equity pleading above referred to must be applied to it.

There are other objections to this complaint of equal importance, but the objections noticed were fatal to it as a pleading, and the order sustaining the demurrer was therefore correct.

[7] The plaintiffs object to that part of the order which refused them permission to further amend; but it cannot be presumed, where a party has filed a complaint and has been permitted to amend it three times, and still fails to state a cause of action, that the superior court abused its discretion in refusing leave to further amend.

The judgment is affirmed.

WELLS v. ALLEN et al. (Civ. 2550.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 8, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 7, 1919.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1012(1)—SCOPE OF REVIEW.

An appellate court may not disturb a finding made by the trial court, unless it appears that there is no evidence to support it, or that the evidence so clearly preponderates against the finding as to amount in legal effect to a want of substantial evidence.

2. MARRIAGE ⟸50(5) — COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to establish validity of common-law marriage between plaintiff and deceased, so as to entitle plaintiff to have his title to community property quieted.

3. MARRIAGE ⟸50(5)—EVIDENCE—COMMON-LAW MARRIAGE.

The fact that a man who, at common law, married a prostitute consented to her continuing as such after the alleged marriage is not conclusive against the fact of marriage, but merely raises an inference that the marriage did not take place.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸262(1)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption that property acquired by either husband or wife during coverture is community property is unchanged by the amendments to Civ. Code, § 163.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸264—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

The presumption that property acquired, by either husband or wife, during coverture, is community property, can be overcome only by clear and convincing evidence.

6. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸254—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

Fact that title to property was taken in wife's maiden name and the property was later mortgaged by her under that name was of no effect if it was purchased with community funds, since it became community property regardless of the name in which it stood.

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸264—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Disputable presumption, under Civ. Code, § 164, as amended by St. 1897, p. 63, that wife was entitled to one-half undivided interest in land deeded to herself and husband as her separate property, is overcome by court's finding that the consideration consisted of community funds.

8. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸254—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—RIGHTS OF WIFE.

Where property was purchased with community funds and title taken in the wife's name, her conveyance thereof to a title company, with subsequent reconveyance to herself and husband jointly, did not enlarge her interest.

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸262(1)—COMMUNITY PROPERTY—PRESUMPTIONS.

Conclusive presumption, under Civ. Code, § 164, as amended by St. 1897, p. 63, that a deed to the wife vests title in her as her separate property is available only to an innocent purchaser, and does not bar the husband's action to quiet title against the wife's kin on the ground that the land was community property.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Action by Frank Wells against Emma Allen, administratrix of the estate of Refugia Wells, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Lovett K. Fraser and Ornbaun & Fraser, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal on behalf of certain defendants from a judgment rendered for the plaintiff in the above-entitled action, quieting his title to certain real property in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendants, Theodore Verdusco, Michael Verdusco, Muria Castro and Pablo Castro, her husband, Dolores Bryan and James Bryan, her husband, have appealed pursuant to section 941B, Code of Civil Procedure. The facts, in brief, are as follows:

The plaintiff, Frank Wells, filed suit to quiet title to certain real property situated in the city and county of San Francisco and particularly described in the complaint filed herein. Emma Allen, as administratrix of the estate of Refugia Wells, deceased, was made a party defendant, as were also the above-named appealing defendants. The complaint set out that all the defendants claimed some right, title, or interest in and to the said property, but that said claims were without right, and asked that the plaintiff's title be quieted against them.

The defendant Emma Allen, as administratrix, etc., answered and alleged that the property in controversy was the property of Refugia Wells, deceased, and that she was entitled to the same as administratrix of the estate of said decedent.

The other defendants answered and claimed the whole of said property as the heirs at law of Refugia Wells, deceased.

The trial court found, in effect: That Refugia Wells, sometimes known as Refugia Verdusco, died intestate; that at the time of her death she was the wife of the plaintiff, Frank Wells; that the property in dispute was community property; that none of the defendants are entitled to any interest in said property; and concluded, as a matter of law, that Frank Wells was the owner in fee simple and entitled to the possession of said property.

[1, 2] The appellants contend that the evidence does not support the findings in certain important particulars. The first objection made by appellants is that the evidence does not support the finding that the plaintiff and the deceased were husband and wife. The court found all the facts necessary to support a common-law marriage, which was a valid marriage in this state at the time these parties assumed that relation, and an appellate court may not disturb a finding made by the trial court, unless it appears that there is no evidence to support it, or that the evidence is so clearly preponderating against the finding as to amount in legal effect to a want of substantial evidence. Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 Pac. 1. While there is some conflicting evidence in the record, we think that the testimony amply supports the findings in this regard. The evidence is uncontradicted that these people lived together openly and notoriously and continuously as husband and wife for nearly 30 years; there is evidence that the woman was known to every child on the street where she and plaintiff lived, and to all the neighbors and tradespeople, as Mrs. Wells; that the plaintiff paid her bills and spoke of her as his wife and introduced her as such, and that the deceased called the plaintiff her husband. The defendants emphasize the fact that the evidence shows that the deceased, before her marriage to Wells and for several years thereafter, was a prostitute, and that the plaintiff admits that after their marriage she continued this course of life and earned money thereby. Counsel for appellants seem to think that this evidence should negative all other evidence in the record in support of the marriage, and raise in effect an absolute presumption against any such finding. They cite the case of Grigsby v. Reib (Tex. Civ. App.) 139 S. W. 1027, and quote language therefrom to the effect that such conduct on the part of a woman is absolutely inconsistent with the idea of marriage. We have carefully read that case, and find that the court, upon reviewing the finding of the trial court that there was no marriage, discussed the weight of the evidence, and justified the finding by referring to evidence of prostitution after the alleged marriage, and known to the alleged husband. The court there said that the social and financial position of the alleged husband, as shown by the record, was such as to make it improbable that he would have married a woman and allowed her to openly continue such a course of conduct, and that in the light of this and other evidence, the findings of the trial court were justified. The facts of that case, we think, were somewhat different from the facts in the case under consideration.

[3] In the present case, the record contains no testimony as to the social and financial standing of the plaintiff. From what appears in the record, he was of the same social standing as his wife and her associates. While it is true that there is a presumption that every man will observe the ordinary standards of conduct shared by self-respecting people, and that such an acquiescence on plaintiff's part in his wife's conduct was certainly violative of these, yet we assume that the trial court took this matter into consideration and duly weighed this evidence as against the other evidence offered in arriving at its findings. The fact of the husband's acquiescence in the wife's subsequent misconduct could only be evidence against the probability of the marriage; it would merely establish an inference that a marriage had not taken place in the absence of direct evidence to the contrary.

In the case of Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 23, 16 Pac. 358, the court said:

"Where the holding out to the world of the relation is evidence of a prior contract, such evidence does not necessarily depend for its effect upon amenity of manners, or upon the degree to which parties extend to each other the affectionate respect which should attend the intercourse of husband and wife in well-ordered households. The statute does not make the validity of a marriage by consent depend upon the full performance of their mutual duty; the failure to perform certain important obligations is made ground for divorce."

We think that under the decisions the facts found in regard to this marriage fully complied with the requirements of section 55, Civil Code, prior to the amendment of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 121) and that the findings of such facts were justified by the evidence.

[4, 5] Appellants also contend that the finding that the property in dispute was purchased with the community funds of plaintiff and deceased is unsupported by the evidence. Here again we are met with a situation where the evidence is conflicting, and the only question before this court is: Was there any evidence to warrant the finding and to prevent an appellate court from interfering therewith? The plaintiff testified that immediately after the alleged marriage he gave his wife $550 in cash; that during the entire period of the marriage (29 years) he worked regularly, except for one month, when he was looking for work; that he handed over all of his wages to his wife; that his wages averaged from $120 to $150 per month. The marriage took place early in the year 1886, and the property in question was purchased in October, 1887. The cost of the lot was $2,500. The building upon the property was not put up until a year later, and at least a part of the money used for that purpose was obtained by mortgaging the property. The plaintiff erected the building himself.

It is true there is some testimony by the relatives of deceased that she seemed to have plenty of money before and after her alleged marriage; but the testimony is also to the effect that she spent this money freely, and that she was generous with her entire family, giving them thousands of dollars. There is no testimony as to the amount of money she had on hand at any time; all the testimony in regard to her money is vague and uncertain. Most of the testimony of the brothers and sisters of deceased, and of her friend, Mrs. Soledada Garcia, as to the earnings of Refugia Wells, had reference to a time after the alleged marriage, and such earnings would, of course, be community property. Mrs. Garcia also testified that deceased showed her some money tied up in a quilt about three years before her alleged marriage. There is no evidence as to the amount of this money, and there is evidence that after that time she sent money to her relatives in Mexico and brought them all up here, and that she sent her mother $500 for spending money. Added to this evidence was the legal presumption (unchanged by the amendments to section 163, Civ. Code, as of the date of the acquisition of this property) that property acquired by either husband or wife during coverture is community property, which presumption must be overcome by clear and convincing evidence. Dimmick v. Dimmick, 95 Cal. 323, 30 Pac. 547; Meyer v. Kinzer, 12 Cal. 247, 73 Am. Dec. 538; Ramsdell v. Fuller et al., 28 Cal. 38, 87 Am. Dec. 103.

[6] The fact that the property was taken in the maiden name of deceased, and later mortgaged by her under that name, would be immaterial, in view of the above findings. For if the parties were married and if the property was purchased with community funds, it would be community property regardless of the name in which it stood. Osborn v. Mills et al., 20 Cal. App. 346, 128 Pac. 1009.

[7, 8] The last contention made by appellants is that, even under the findings, the plaintiff is barred, by section 164 of the Civil Code as amended in 1897 (St. 1897, p. 63), from claiming this property as community property because in 1912 the deceased deeded the property to the San Francisco Land & Title Company for the purpose of procuring a McEnerney title to the property, and that said company held the title until such purpose was accomplished, and then deeded the property to Frank Wells and Refugia Wells in accordance with the request of the latter.

Under the provisions of section 164 of the Civil Code, where property is conveyed to a married woman and her husband, two presumptions arise from the terms of the conveyance: First, a disputable presumption that title to an undivided one-half interest, as tenant in common, in the property described in the deed vested in the wife "as her separate property"; second, a conclusive presumption of such fact in favor of a purchaser in good faith and for a valuable consideration. Kuns v. Dias, 32 Cal. App. 651, 163 Pac. 1052; Pabst v. Shearer, 172 Cal. 239, 156 Pac. 466.

Conceding that a disputable presumption that the deceased was entitled to an undivided one-half interest in the property by reason of the terms of the deed to herself and her husband by the title company would arise in favor of the appellants, such a presumption can be overcome by positive evidence to the contrary, and we think the fact, as found by this court, that the property was purchased with community funds, dispels the presumption. The court having found that the property was in fact community property, it was impressed with that character as it passed from one grantee to another, and the plaintiff might show the facts against any but innocent purchasers for value. Certainly, since the trial court has found that Refugia Wells had only a community interest in the property, she could not enlarge that interest by transferring the property to another without consideration and having that other retransfer to herself and her husband jointly.

[9] As to the point raised by the appellant that under section 164, Civil Code, as amended in 1897, the plaintiff is barred from maintaining an action to establish the community nature of this property from and after 1 year from the taking effect of said amendment, it has been decided by the case of Osborn v. Mills, supra, that such amendment was added for the sole purpose of protecting innocent purchasers for value, and is applicable only in such a case.

The judgment is affirmed.

HUFFAKER v. GRAY. (Civ. 2558.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Nov. 11, 1918.)

1. PLEADING ⟸214(1) — DEMURRER—ADMISSIONS.

In rulings on demurrer to complaint, allegations of complaint will be taken as true.

2. JUDGMENT ⟸443(3)—VACATION—FRAUD—PERJURED TESTIMONY.

That plaintiff obtained judgment by theft of documents from defendant and by the denial of existence of such documents is no ground for vacation on ground of fraud; the theft and suppression being an incident merely of plaintiff's perjured testimony denying their existence, and it having been incumbent upon defendant to meet perjured testimony at trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Everett J. Brown, Judge.

Action by E. Huffaker against John Gray. From judgment for defendant upon demurrer to complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Rodolph Hatfield and E. Huffaker, both of Oakland, for appellant.

John L. McVey, of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a final judgment rendered upon a demurrer by the superior court of the county of Alameda.

[1] A bill in equity was filed to vacate and set aside a judgment in the case of John Gray v. E. Huffaker, rendered by the same court on January 30, 1915. The allegations of the bill are that the judgment sought to be vacated was procured by fraud on the part of the plaintiff in that action for the reason that said plaintiff stole from defendant certain papers enumerated and described in said bill, which papers were necessary for a proper defense to said action; that, on account of being deprived of such written evidence, defendant was unable by his own testimony to sustain his defense; that defendant did not discover the fact that the said papers had been stolen by plaintiff until 30 days before bringing the present action. A demurrer to the bill was sustained. The question upon this appeal is as to the correctness of the ruling on demurrer. The issue being raised by demurrer, we assume, for a decision of the question involved, that all the allegations of the complaint are true.

It seems that the facts in this case bring it squarely within the reasoning of the case of Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159. The discussion in that case fairly answers all the arguments of appellant here. The court there points out that it has been settled beyond all controversy that a decree will not be vacated merely because it was obtained by forged documents or perjured testimony, giving as a reason for the rule that there must be an end of litigation; and that, when parties have once submitted a matter, or have had an opportunity of submitting it, for investigation and determination, and when they have exhausted every means for reviewing such determination in the same proceeding, it must be regarded as final and conclusive unless it can be shown that the jurisdiction of the court has been imposed upon, or that the prevailing party, by some extrinsic or collateral fraud, has prevented a fair submission of the controversy. The court then proceeds to an explanation of the meaning of the term "extrinsic or collateral fraud," and enumerates such instances as: Keeping the unsuccessful party away from the court by false promise of a compromise, or purposely keeping him in ignorance of the suit; or where an attorney fraudulently pretends to represent a party and connives at his defeat, or, being regularly employed, corruptly sells out his client's interest. The court then proceeds with the analysis and says:

"In all such instances, the unsuccessful party is really prevented, by the fraudulent contrivance of his adversary, from having a trial; but, when he has a trial, he must be prepared to meet and expose perjury then and there. He knows that a false claim or defense can be supported in no other way; that the very object of the trial is, if possible, to ascertain the truth from the conflict of the evidence; and that, necessarily, the truth or falsity of the testimony must be determined in deciding the issue. The trial is his opportunity for making the truth appear. If, unfortunately, he fails, being overborne by perjured testimony, and if he likewise fails to show the injustice that has been done him on motion for a new trial, and the judgment is affirmed on appeal, he is without remedy. * * *

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

"But counsel for appellant seek to distinguish this case from those in which it has been held that a judgment will not be set aside by reason of its being based upon forged documents or perjured testimony. They say that the fraud committed by Cohn was the bribing of Johnson; that this was collateral and extrinsic; that it was not and could not have been the subject of investigation at the trial of the original action. We do not think this distinction can be maintained. The fraud that Cohn committed was the production of perjured evidence in support of his defense. The means by which he induced the witness to swear falsely was but an incident."

[2] We think in the present case that the fraud by which plaintiff obtained his judgment was by means of his own perjured testimony, because it is alleged that the plaintiff, knowing of the existence of the stolen documents, suppressed them and denied their existence. The theft and suppression of the documents were merely incidents and means of strengthening his perjured testimony. Of course, it may be said, if the theft had been proven at the trial, the testimony of the plaintiff would have been discredited; but it is equally true that in the case of Pico v. Cohn, above cited, if the bribery had been proven, the testimony of the witness would have been of no effect.

Appellant has not cited, and we are unable to find, any case in this state overruling or modifying the doctrine as expressed in the case herein discussed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

HOOKER v. EAST RIVERSIDE IRR. DIST. et al. (Civ. 2602.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 12, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 9, 1919.)

1. Waters and Water Courses ⟸230(2)—Irrigation Districts—Bonds—"Issued."

In the Wright Act (St. 1887, p. 29), relating to the issue of irrigation district bonds, and in the text of a judgment thereunder, the word "issued" held used in the sense of "authorized," rather than in the sense of "executed."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Issue.]

2. Judgment ⟸517—Collateral Attack—Matters Not Presented.

A judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the persons and subject-matter cannot be collaterally attacked by merely showing that some of the evidence which might have been produced by plaintiff in support of the issues as framed was not so produced.

3. Judgment ⟸820(3) — Conclusiveness—Assignee of Bonds.

Plaintiff, owner of bonds, is bound and estopped by a federal judgment declaring them invalid, to which his predecessor in interest was a party; there being no claim that plaintiff was without notice of the steps or proceedings in the federal court (Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, subd. 2).

4. Limitation of Actions ⟸96(2)—Mutual Mistake—Pleading—Complaint.

An action for reformation of bonds on the ground of mutual mistake comes under the three-year statute of limitations, and is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery of facts constituting the mistake (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4).

5. Limitation of Actions ⟸96(2) — Reformation of Bonds for Mutual Mistake.

Where the owner of bonds discovered the facts constituting an alleged mistake for which action was brought more than three years prior to beginning of action, recovery was barred, the running of the statute not being interrupted by transfer of the bonds to his assignee (his former assignor).

6. Limitation of Actions ⟸28(1) — Implied Contracts.

An action to compel a municipal corporation to return or pay for property received rests either upon an obligation created by law, or upon an implied contract, and in either case falls within the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 339, subd. 1, and whether the right of action accrued upon the delivery, in payment of bonds void upon their face, or upon a subsequent judgment of their invalidity in 1905, such action begun in 1909 is barred.

7. Pleading ⟸8(11), 24—Assignment of Obligation—Right of Action.

An allegation that, when the holder transferred bonds warranting their value, he did not transfer his right to recover against the municipal district issuing them, alleges a conclusion of law, negatived by the rule that the right of action passes to an assignee as an incident of ownership.

8. Limitation of Actions ⟸1—Right of Action.

Except in case of certain statutory exceptions, a statute of limitations runs against the right of action, and not against the holder of the right.

9. Limitation of Actions ⟸105(2)—Statutes of Limitation—Suspension.

A state statute of limitation applying to an action for mutual mistake of parties as to validity of bonds was not suspended during litigation in the federal courts in which the bonds were declared void.

10. Limitation of Actions ⟸48(4)—Contracts—Payment in Bonds.

If the bonds of an irrigation district were accepted by contractor merely as evidence of obligation for the purpose of extending the time of payment thereof, the time of payment would be extended only until a default was made in the payment of the bonds.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by Marian O. Hooker, as executrix of the will of John D. Hooker, deceased, substituted in his stead, against the East Riverside Irrigation District, a corporation, and others. From a judgment entered upon an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's amended and supplemental complaint without leave to amend, the plaintiff appeals. Judgment affirmed.

Lent & Humphrey, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Henry C. Goodcell and Goodcell & Goodcell, all of San Bernardino, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment of the superior court entered upon an order sustaining defendants' demurrer to her amended and supplemental complaint (hereinafter referred to as "the complaint") without leave to amend. The demurrer is both general and special, the latter presenting numerous grounds of which we deem it necessary to consider here only those which plead the statute of limitations. All of the special statutes of limitation which may be appropriate thereto are pleaded by the demurrer to any and every cause of action alleged in the complaint.

[1] From the allegations of the complaint the following facts appear: The defendant and respondent East Riverside irrigation district is a municipal corporation duly organized and existing under the provisions of the "Wright Act" (St. 1887, p. 29), and in 1890 had duly taken all of the steps necessary under the act for the creation of a bonded indebtedness in the sum of $250,000. Thereupon its board of directors instituted in the superior court of San Bernardino county, wherein it was situate, an action in rem pursuant to an amendment to said act, wherein, in December, 1891, a decree was entered confirming the proceedings theretofore taken in the organization of the district and authorization of said bond issue, and adjudging that the district "at the date of said decree was a duly and legally organized irrigation district, possessing full power and authority to issue and sell from time to time the bonds of said district in the sum of $250,000, and that the bonds of said district theretofore issued in said sum were legal and valid." (It is manifest that the word "issued" as used in said decree, as well as in said act, is used in the sense of "authorized," rather than in the sense of "executed." Wright v. East Riverside Irrigation Dist., 138 Fed. 313, 323, 70 C. C. A. 603. The bonds here in question were not executed until more than a year thereafter.)

Thereafter, in January, 1892, the district entered into a contract with appellant's testator, J. D. Hooker, whereby Hooker agreed to furnish and deliver a completed and constructed pipe line, 4,000 feet in length, more or less, to be connected and laid in trenches and to form a part of the irrigation works and system, at the agreed price of $2.50 per lineal foot, payable one-half in cash and one-half in such bonds at their par value. Hooker duly performed this contract, and there became due thereon the sum of $20,642.94, instead of the $10,000 originally contemplated. Whereupon, at the request of the district, Hooker agreed to accept $5,000 in cash in lieu of one-half cash, and also agreed to accept, "as a medium of payment" of the balance, bonds at par value. These bonds were then executed and delivered to Hooker and the $5,000 paid to him on January 27, 1892, pursuant to a resolution of the board of directors. The bonds as then issued bore the signature of W. R. McCully, who was then secretary of said district, whereas the interest coupons thereto attached bore the engraved signature of J. A. Van Arsdale as secretary, Van Arsdale having been secretary at the time the bonds were authorized and at the time the bonds and attached coupons were engraved, at which time his engraved signature was appended to the coupons pursuant to a resolution of the board.

In the latter part of 1892 Hooker sold and delivered the bonds for a valuable consideration to C. G. Hooker, warranting them good and valid and agreeing to take them back if they should prove otherwise. Thereafter, prior to June 29, 1901, C. G. Hooker sold and transferred them for a valuable consideration to C. O. Hooker and Robert G. Hooker, and C. O. Hooker and Robert G. Hooker then sold and delivered them for a valuable consideration to R. Percy Wright; all of these sales being under the same warranty.

The interest coupons were duly paid at maturity, up to and including January 1, 1897, since which time no further payments have been made thereon, or upon the principal, which was payable in installments. Wright presented for payment the interest coupons then due, and payment was refused. Thereafter, and on June 29, 1901, Wright (a citizen of the British empire) commenced an action at law in the United States Circuit Court in and for the Southern District of California, against said East Riverside irrigation district to recover judgment for the amount then due and unpaid upon said coupons. Said defendant appeared and filed its answer, alleging that said bonds and the coupons attached thereto were null and void, specifying, among other defects, the following: That on June 27, 1892, Van Arsdale, whose name appears upon the coupons, was not the secretary of said district, and that McCully, whose name appeared upon the bonds themselves, was not the secretary at the date appearing upon the bonds, to wit, December 30, 1890. Thereafter, on May 16, 1904, judgment was entered in said action, adjudging each and all of said bonds invalid and void for the reason above specified. Thereafter the plaintiff, Wright, was allowed a writ of error from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, which resulted, May 29, 1905, in a decision by the latter court affirming the judgment. Thereafter a petition for a writ of certiorari to review said decision was presented to the United States Supreme Court and denied on January 29, 1906.

Pursuant to the covenants of warranty, the bonds were retransferred by mesne assignments from Wright back to J. D. Hooker, who again became the owner thereof on or about June 15, 1909. He then again demanded payment of the interest and principal installments then due, which was refused; whereupon he demanded payment of the sum of $15,642.94, the amount remaining unpaid under the original contract, or the return of said pipe line, which demand was also refused. Thereupon he demanded that the directors of the district cause the property therein to be assessed for taxes to provide funds for the payment of the amounts due, which was refused; whereupon he commenced this action June 29, 1909.

The complaint presents several different aspects which are illustrated by the prayer, which is as follows: First. That the bonds be adjudged valid and the plaintiff have judgment for the amount due thereon. Second. In the event they be held not valid, that they be reformed so as to become enforceable obligations and that plaintiff have judgment for the amount due thereon as so reformed. Third. In the event they be held invalid and not susceptible of reformation so as to render them valid, that they be held valid and enforceable promissory notes or obligations of defendant district, and that plaintiff have judgment for the amounts due thereon. Fourth. In the event that the three former prayers be denied, that the obligation of the original pipe line contract be held to have been suspended by the issuance of the bonds as conditional payment thereof, and that plaintiff have judgment for the amount due under said original contract, with interest. Fifth. That any judgment awarded be decreed to be a lien upon the real property within the district.

Much is said in the briefs concerning the "ethics" and "natural justice" of plaintiff's claim. It is obvious, we think, that the question presented to this court for determination is whether or not, under the facts alleged in the complaint, plaintiff is entitled in this action to the relief sought, or to any relief, with reference, not to the principles of ethics or natural justice, but rather to the established rules of law and equity jurisprudence.

Considering the complaint in the aspect first presented, that of an action upon the bonds as valid obligations, it does not state a cause of action, in that it appears therefrom that the plaintiff is conclusively estopped by the judgment of the federal court holding them void. Plaintiff attempts to escape from this situation by alleging in her complaint that in the action in the federal court the question of an estoppel arising by reason of the payment of the first interest coupons was not raised or considered; nor was the decree validating said bonds set up; nor was the question of the adoption of the lithographed signature of Van Arsdale, as the signature of the then secretary, set up.

[2, 3] It is manifest, we think, that a judgment duly rendered by a court having jurisdiction, both of the persons and the subject-matter, cannot be collaterally attacked merely by a showing that some of the evidence which might have been produced by the plaintiff in support of the issues as framed was not so produced. Conceding for the moment, but not deciding, that the question of the conclusive effect of the judgment of the superior court holding the bonds valid in the action in rem is not concluded by the judgment of the federal court because that judgment was not pleaded therein, it is apparent that such judgment could not determine the validity of the manner and mode of the attempted execution of the bonds, which was not attempted until a year and a half subsequent thereto.

Appellant also contends that she is not concluded by the judgment of the federal court because J. D. Hooker was not a party thereto. There is no merit in this contention. Hooker brought this action as the successor in interest of Wright, who, as the then owner of these bonds, was plaintiff in the federal action. The claim is nowhere made that Hooker was without notice of any of the steps or proceedings in the federal court. Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, subd. 2.

Considering the complaint in its second aspect, counsel for respondents argue with much force that plaintiff is not entitled in any event to a reformation of the bonds because the original contract pursuant to which they were issued was invalid. Their contention is that this was a contract for the construction of a pipe line, rather than a contract for a sale and purchase of property, and that therefore the district had no authority under the law to issue bonds in payment therefor, as held in Hughson v. Crane, 115 Cal. 404, 47 Pac. 120, and later cases. Their contention finds much support in the facts alleged in the complaint, but it is not necessary to decide that question here.

[4, 5] The action in this aspect is for a reformation of the bonds on the ground of mutual mistake of the parties, it being alleged that both parties to the contract believed and understood at the time of their delivery that they were valid. This cause of action comes under the three-year statute of limitations and is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the facts constituting the mistake. Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 4. There is no direct allegation in the complaint of the discovery of the facts alleged to constitute the mistake at any time within three years of the commencement of the action, and the demurrer might well be rested on that ground alone. The federal court held, as alleged here, that the invalidity of the bonds was apparent on their face. The district refused payment of interest upon the ground of such invalidity at some time prior to June 29, 1901. The federal Circuit Court adjudged the bonds invalid May 16, 1904, which judgment was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals May 29, 1905. This latter decision was final, there being no federal question involved in that case. Taking the view most favorable to the appellant, it must be held that then, at the latest, the then owner of the bonds "discovered" the facts constituting the alleged mistake. His action for relief on the ground of mistake having accrued, at least as early as May 29, 1905, the running of the statute could not be interrupted by the transfer of the bonds to his assignee (his former assignor). This action was not commenced until June 29, 1909, more than four years thereafter.

[6] In the third aspect of the complaint, plaintiff appeals to the rule of law that, where a municipal corporation has obtained property which it had the power and right to acquire and has given in exchange therefor bonds or other securities which are void, the duty then arises to return the property or pay the reasonable value thereof (which is alleged in this case to be the same as the face value of the bonds). This rule is recognized in the case of Higgins v. San Diego Water Co., 118 Cal. 525, 555, 45 Pac. 824, 50 Pac. 670.

[7-9] Whether such duty be regarded as resting upon an implied contract or upon an obligation created by law, in either case it falls within the provisions of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure, subdivision 1; and whether it be held that this right of action accrued at the time the bonds were delivered, which were void upon their face, or that it did not accrue until final judgment of the Circuit Court of Appeals, the result is the same in either case and the action is barred. Appellant seeks in various ways to escape this result. It is alleged that when Hooker sold the bonds he did not transfer his right or claim to recover value in case the bonds were not paid, and that this right of action always remained in him. This is an allegation of a conclusion of law and is negatived by the rule of law that in such case such right of action passes to an assignee of the bonds as an incident to their ownership. Parkersburg v. Brown, 106 U. S. 487, 503, 1 Sup. Ct. 442, 27 L. Ed. 238; Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 422, 129 Pac. 462. And even if this were not the case, it could scarcely be held that the holder of a right of action could suspend the running of the statute by splitting his right of action and transferring a portion thereof to another. Except in the case of certain statutory exceptions, a statute of limitations runs against the right of action, not against the holder thereof. It is also argued that the running of the statute was suspended during the litigation in the federal courts. There is no merit in this contention, and the cases cited in support of it are not in point here.

The complaint in its fourth aspect proceeds upon the theory that the bonds were not taken in payment, but were accepted only as a "medium of payment," and therefore operated only to suspend the time of payment until the maturity of the bonds. It might well be said that this contention is negatived by the allegations of the complaint, from which the following facts appear: The contract itself provided for payment in bonds; the resolution of the board of directors, which was the only authority for the issuance of the bonds, provided for their issuance in payment of the obligation. Plaintiff brings this action as the owner and holder of the bonds, alleging them to be valid obligations, after having made an absolute sale of them and afterwards received them back under the warranty. Furthermore, the district, under the Wright Act, had no power or authority to issue the bonds except in payment for property purchased.

[10] But if it be assumed that the bonds were not accepted by Hooker as a payment, but merely as evidence of the obligation for the purpose of extending the time of payment thereof, the result would be to extend such time of payment only until a default be made in the payment of the bonds. Griffith v. Grogan, 12 Cal. 317, 322; Crawford v. Roberts, 50 Cal. 235; Crary v. Bowers, 20 Cal. 85, 89; Gnarini v. Bank, 162 Cal. 181, 184, 121 Pac. 726. Just when default was first made does not definitely appear, but in any event it was prior to June 29, 1901, so that the action, in this respect, is clearly barred.

No claim is here made that plaintiff could, consistently with the facts, have stated any better cause of action if the lower court had granted leave to amend. Other contentions which have been argued in appellant's brief and are not here discussed have been considered and are deemed to be without merit.

For the reasons above set forth, the judgment is affirmed.

HORTON v. MOORE. (Civ. 2613.)

1. QUIETING TITLE ⟸44(4)—COLOR OF TITLE—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title, evidence held to show that defendant had acquired paper title sufficient to establish color of title to portions of the tract in question.

2. QUIETING TITLE ⟸13 — CONSTRUCTIVE POSSESSION OF PART OF PREMISES.

Where actual possession is taken of only a part of the land described in a conveyance, the grantee is constructively deemed to be in possession of the whole, and it is immaterial that the grantor had neither title nor possession.

3. QUIETING TITLE ⟸13 — POSSESSION BY DEFENDANT—POSSESSION BY LESSEE.

In an action to quiet title, where defendant's tenant occupied the premises for several years, knew their boundaries, and excluded other persons therefrom, such possession was not disturbed by the lease renewal at a mere nominal rate; the only change in use being the pasturage of a lesser number of cattle.

4. QUIETING TITLE ⟸12(7)—ACTUAL POSSESSION.

Where defendant had actual possession of land with color of title to a part thereof, when plaintiff and his attorney intruded thereon, built a fence around it, and immediately brought action to quiet title without other right thereto, plaintiff's occupancy was not that intended by Civ. Code, § 1006.

5. QUIETING TITLE ⟸44(5)—POSSESSION—EVIDENCE.

In an action to quiet title, evidence held to show that defendant was in actual possession of the land, within the meaning of the law, when plaintiff interrupted such possession by constructing a fence and beginning the action.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by John A. Horton against William M. Moore. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Wright & Winnek, of San Diego, for appellant.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This appeal is taken from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff, quieting title as against defendant in a certain tract of land in the county of San Diego. There is also an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1] It appears from the record that the land which is made the subject of this controversy, consisting of about 75 acres, is hilly in contour and suitable generally for grazing purposes. The sole ground upon which plaintiff based his claim was that of possession acquired immediately before the commencement of this action and evidenced by the building of a wire fence about the tract. We gather from the transcript that counsel for the plaintiff was the chief mover in the enterprise to acquire a title to this property, for said counsel in his testimony admitted that he had never seen the plaintiff; that he had a contingent interest in the outcome of the suit, and had no claim of title other than that depending for its validity upon bare possession. He testified as follows:

"The possession was taken with the expectation of commencing suit as in the case of Davis v. Crump [162 Cal. 513, 123 Pac. 294] under section 1006 of the Civil Code, and, when occupancy was taken, claim of title was made contemporaneously with the taking of the possession. From that time and ever since plaintiff has claimed that land as against everybody who cannot show title by the means stated in that section 1006."

This action was commenced on the 5th day of June, 1914. Several days prior to that time, the nominal plaintiff, acting through Kelly, the attorney, put a force of men at work building a fence around the land. On the 3d day of June (two days before the action was commenced), defendant Moore caused the fence, which did not completely surround the land at that time, to be torn down. Immediately thereafter respondent's attorney had his men rebuild the fence, and on the 5th of June, at about noontime, it was nearly completed. The attorney, who was on the ground, left for his office, instructing his foreman that as soon as the ground had been completely surrounded by the fence to notify him by telephone. The foreman, acting under these instructions, telephoned the attorney at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon of June 5th that the fence had been completed, and the complaint in this action was immediately placed on file in the county clerk's office. Within the next day or two Moore again took down the fence. This comprised the whole showing of right in the plaintiff, as the evidence discloses it. The trial court determined that the plaintiff had possession of the property and that the defendant had neither title nor possession. Appellant contends that there was evidence that the defendant had possession of the whole tract claimed, and possession under color of title at least as to a portion thereof; and, secondly, that under the evidence the court was not justified in making the finding of possession in favor of the plaintiff for the reason that plaintiff's occupancy was not such as is intended to be described in section 1006, Civil Code; that under the terms of that section a mere "scrambling" possession is not sufficient to give rise to a presumption of title. The section mentioned has been amended since the controversy herein involved arose. It provided, prior to 1915, as follows:

"Occupancy for any period confers a title sufficient against all except the state and those who have title by prescription, accession, transfer, will, or succession."

It must, of course, first be conceded that, if defendant had possession of the tract of land at the time plaintiff or his attorney intruded thereon, no cause of action such as this would arise in plaintiff's favor. We may then examine the evidence to determine whether at the time the action was commenced the defendant was in possession of the land in dispute. There was no controversy as to the facts regarding the alleged possession by the defendant. Defendant testified that two or three years prior to 1913 he had leased the whole tract to one Allen, who had used it for grazing purposes and had paid rental therefor; that in 1913 Allen had not so many cattle to pasture, and therefore not great need for the land, and that he (the defendant) had leased the property at the nominal rental of one dollar per year, the year under the nominal rental charge commencing in November, 1913, and not having expired at the time of the building of the fence by plaintiff in June, 1914. The defendant testified, in part, as follows:

"I asked him (Allen), after he gave up his butchering business, to take charge of it and be nominally in possession and pay me a nominal sum of $1.00 per year so as to hold him in possession of the property at that time. * * * The city had stopped him from butchering in his place and he didn't require it. He had just his own cattle over it—15 or 20 head of cattle."

Like testimony was given by the lessee, Allen, with the further statement that he knew the boundaries of the property; that during the early years of his leasing he herded at times as many as 200 head of cattle over that property and other property which he leased for the same purposes; that he excluded other cattle from the ground leased, also sheep, and, in brief, maintained possession of it. Referring to the last year, when the nominal rental was in effect, he said that he had not herded as many cattle there, adding:

"I haven't got over 20 head of stock there now. They are on this particular Pueblo lot 1182 pretty nearly every day."

[2] Several deeds were introduced on behalf of the defendant, being generally quitclaim in form and reciting that the grantors relinquished all interest in "Pueblo lot 1182," being the tract which included the 75 acres in dispute. Some of these deeds specified, in addition, subdivisions of the larger tract and referred to a certain partition suit which had theretofore been prosecuted in the superior court of San Diego county. Three of these deeds had been recorded at dates long prior to the building of the fence by the plaintiff. Defendant's testimony showed that, guided by a certificate of title issued by an abstract company, he had for several years been endeavoring to buy in the interests of all persons concerned in the title of the land in dispute. The deeds which we have mentioned, however, appear to have covered only portions thereof. We have noted that this land was contained within a larger tract, the larger tract being known as Pueblo lot 1182. While two of the quitclaim deeds purported to transfer to the defendant "all interest in Pueblo lot 1182," they also, as just stated, referred to the property intended to be conveyed as subdivisions thereof. One of these subdivisions contained only 2½ acres, another 10 acres. A third deed was quitclaim in form without specifying any particular portions of the whole tract; this latter deed, as defendant, testified, being intended to cover a certain 44 acres. It does not appear that defendant by the conveyances which he showed in evidence pretended to have acquired paper title to the whole tract. It does appear to us, however, that such paper showing, sufficient to give color of title, was established as to portions of the tract, in so far as that question may be important to be considered. Where actual possession is taken of only a part of land described in a conveyance, the grantee is constructively deemed to be in possession of the whole, and it is immaterial that the grantor had neither title nor possession. Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431.

[3, 4] But aside from any aid which a colorable title might give to defendant's case: The land was occupied by defendant's tenant for at least several years prior to November, 1913, and this tenant knew the general boundaries thereof and excluded other persons from its use, and we see no reason to hold that this possession was disturbed in November, 1913, when the defendant renewed the lease at the nominal rate, for the only difference in the use to which the land was put thereafter, and down to the commencement of the action, was that the lessee pastured thereon a much smaller number of cattle than he had theretofore. If the defendant may be said to have had actual possession of the land at the time the plaintiff and his attorney intruded thereon and built the fence, then it matters not at all that he held under color of title, for, by the admission of his counsel and the utter lack of evidence showing anything to the contrary, the plaintiff had no better title. Smith v. Hicks, 139 Cal. 217, 73 Pac. 144. In such a case the defendant was the occupant and entitled, under section 1006, Civil Code, to maintain his possession against every one except the state or persons who had acquired a better right than he had. It has been uniformly held that in order to establish possession of real property it is not necessary that a fence be built about it and that if a fence is so built it is merely evidence tending to show possession of the person who constructs it. It is also held that the terms "occupation," "possessio pedis," "subjection to the will and control," are synonymous; that property is possessed and occupied when it is put to a use appropriate to its general character. Webber v. Clarke, supra; Lawrence v. Fulton, 19 Cal. 683; United States v. Rogers (D. C.) 23 Fed. 658; Andrus v. Smith, 133 Cal. 78, 65 Pac. 320. As stated at the trial, counsel for the plaintiff maintains that his case satisfies all the requirements presented in Davis v. Crump, 162 Cal. 513, 123 Pac. 294. In that we do not agree at all. An examination of the text of that decision shows that the court found nothing to indicate possession in any one but the defendants at the time of the making of the claim of title, the court saying:

"As we have seen, there is nothing here to compel the conclusion that the possession was taken otherwise than peaceably, or that any portion of the property inclosed was in the actual possession of any other person at the time."

[5] As appellant suggests, the possession of the plaintiff at best was well described, considering the interruption thereof, as "scrambling." However, such possession might have ripened into the right claimed upon the completion of the fence, if there was an absence of showing of possession in any other person at the time. In the view we take of the evidence, the defendant sufficiently established the fact of actual possession within the meaning of the law, against which plaintiff was not entitled to prevail.

The judgment and order are reversed.

SMITH v. SIMPSON. (Civ. 1874.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 6, 1919.)

COMPROMISE AND SETTLEMENT ⊂=23(3)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to recover a balance on a note wherein defendants claimed a settlement for half the amount of the note, a finding for plaintiff on the issue of settlement held not contrary to the great current of the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Wm. M. Finch, Judge.

Action by T. M. Smith against Charles L. Simpson. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Freeman, of Willow, for appellant.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. It is alleged in the complaint that, on January 1, 1907, defendant made, executed, and delivered to plaintiff a promissory note (a copy of which is set forth) for the sum of $5,605.32, payable 12 months after date, with interest at 5½ per cent.; that, on the 5th day of February, 1908, defendant paid upon said note the sum of $2,802.66; and that no other payments have been made.

The answer is that said payment of $2,802.66 was "in full payment of the promissory note; * * * and that the said plaintiff accepted said sum from the defendant in full satisfaction and discharge of the said promissory note; * * * and that thereupon the said plaintiff delivered to the defendant the said promissory note; and that the defendant is now the owner and holder of the same."

The cause was tried before the court, without a jury, and the findings were: That the note in question was executed and the payment of $2,802.66 made thereon as set forth in the complaint; "that said payment was not in full payment of the said promissory note, and plaintiff did not accept, nor agree to accept, said sum in full satisfaction or discharge of the said note; that the defendant is in the possession of, but is not the owner of, the said promissory note; that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of the said note; that at the time of the said payment and in consideration thereof and in payment of the balance due upon said promissory note, to wit, $2,802.66, plaintiff agreed to accept and defendant agreed to make and give his, defendant's, two certain promissory notes, to wit, one to John Curry for $1,000, payable to said John Curry, one to T. M. Smith, plaintiff herein, for $1,802.66, payable to said plaintiff; that defendant failed and refused to make or give said notes, or either of them, in accordance with said agreement or at all; that there is now due and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff on said promissory note as principal the sum of $2,802.66," with interest at the rate of 5½ per cent. from June 11, 1909. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $3,904.74, from which judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The sole contention advanced by the appellant is that the findings are not supported by the evidence, and the case of Field v. Shorb, 99 Cal. 661, 34 Pac. 504, and other cases, are cited to support his position. In the Shorb Case the court said:

"We are adverse to holding that a finding by a jury or trial court on an issue of fact is not warranted by the evidence, whatever we might think as to its preponderance, where there is presented a fair, reasonable ground for a difference of opinion, and where a conclusion either way could not be considered as the necessary result of the exercise of an unsound judgment. But where the great current of the evidence is against the verdict, and we cannot escape the conviction that it is wrong, we should not be deterred from setting it aside by the contention that one or two general statements or assertions of one or two witnesses bring the case within the rule which governs in cases where there is a material 'conflict of evidence.' And in the case at bar we cannot resist the conclusion that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the unsoundness of the mind of the deceased on July 3, 1890."

An examination of the evidence in the present case has not convinced us that it comes within the ruling of the Shorb Case. The "great current of the evidence" does not appear to be against the findings herein, as we shall presently show. The only question which could arise here, in considering the evidence, is whether the testimony from which the findings were evidently educed is entitled to such credit and weight as to justify its acceptance as proof of the ultimate fact, and this question was for the trial court to determine and which it has determined against the defense interposed by the defendant. While we think that it is very clear, so far as a reviewing court is able to judge, that the preponderance of the evidence is in favor of the conclusion reached by the trial court as evidenced by its findings of fact, the least that can be said of the evidence as a whole is that there exists therein a substantial conflict, and that it, therefore, presents "a fair, reasonable ground for a difference of opinion" as to its effect, and that "a conclusion either way could not be considered as the necessary result of the exercise of an unsound judgment."

From the testimony of the plaintiff it appears that the plaintiff was at one time a partner in the sheep business with Mr. Curry, the father of the wife of the defendant, but at the time of the transaction to which we are about to refer the said Curry was not living. It may further be stated that the plaintiff is related in some way to Mrs. Simpson.

In the summer of 1903, Simpson and his wife, desiring to purchase a tract of land adjoining their land, and not having the money with which to make the purchase, called on the plaintiff and requested of him a loan of the necessary amount, which was the sum of $4,500. The plaintiff replied that he could procure the money at the Bank of Chico, in the city of Chico, and the Simpsons said that all they needed at that time was the sum of $1,000. The plaintiff subsequently obtained said sum, and, as directed by the Simpsons, sent the money to a "Mr. Freeman." Plaintiff gave his individual note to the bank for the $1,000. Later in the same year, the plaintiff made the defendant an additional loan, amounting to the sum of $3,500, which sum was also forwarded by the Bank of Chico in the name of the plaintiff to the "Mr. Freeman" above referred to. Thereafter (either in the month of December, 1903, or January, 1904) plaintiff called at the home of the Simpsons, and on that occasion the defendant executed and delivered to plaintiff his promissory note for the sum of $4,500, payable one year after date, with interest at the rate of 5½ per cent. Of the last sum of money loaned to the defendant by the plaintiff, $3,300 was obtained by the latter from W. H. Curry, a brother of Mrs. Simpson, and then a business partner of the plaintiff. The note was made to the plaintiff and said Curry. When the note matured, the defendant made a payment thereon, and gave a new note for the balance. And so the transactions between the plaintiff and the defendant were carried on from year to year—as the existing note matured, a new note was given and the old note surrendered to the defendant—until the fourth note for the sum of $6,300 or $6,400 was made and given to the plaintiff by the defendant. After the execution and delivery of the fourth note, the defendant made a payment thereon of the sum of $1,080, leaving a balance of $5,605, for which a new note, the note in suit, was given. The plaintiff subsequently assigned the note to W. H. Curry, said assignment being in the following language, indorsed on the back of the note:

"I hereby assign this note for value received as security to the amount of $3,770.00 to W. H. Curry. [Signed] T. M. Smith.

It appears that, on the 18th of January, 1908, W. H. Curry sent the note, through the Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. at Sacramento, to the Bank of Willows for collection, and accompanying the note was the following instruction or direction to the Bank of Willows:

"Note, Charles L. Simpson to T. M. Smith, $5,602.32, which please deliver to Smith or Simpson on payment of ½—$2,802.66, if paid on or before Jan. 23, 1908."

The time for the payment of the $2,802.66 by Simpson to the bank was extended to the 3d day of February, 1908. Defendant paid said sum to the bank, the written acknowledgment of payment by the bank being dated February 5, 1908. Upon the said payment being made, the note in suit was delivered by the bank to the defendant.

The plaintiff testified that he never at any time had an understanding or agreement with Simpson, or ever said to the latter's wife that he would surrender the note and call the transaction at an end if the defendant would pay $2,800 on the note. He continued:

"I put that indorsement (the assignment) there about a week or two after the note was made, and I gave it into the possession of Mr. Curry. I didn't get it back afterwards. The note does not belong to Mr. Curry. The payment indorsed on it of $2,802 was paid to Mr. Curry as part of the amount that I owed him. He got part of his money. Mr. Curry sent the note to the Bank of D. O. Mills through the Bank of Willows for collection, and this $2,802 was paid. (The witness probably intended to say that the note was delivered to the D. O. Mills Bank, and by it sent to the Bank of Willows for collection, which was the fact.) He (Curry) sent it at my request. The reason I did this was because he wanted to get his money out of this note. He was going to bring suit against Mr. Simpson if it wasn't paid. The wife of Charles Simpson is a sister of Mr. Curry. They didn't want to pay Mr. Curry, as they had some grievance against him. * * * The instructions to the bank was that the note was to be delivered to Mr. Simpson upon the payment of $2,800. The note was to be delivered to Simpson for him to make over a new note, which he did every year before that, so that whenever the notes became due he would make a new note and pay what he could on the original note. I didn't have any agreement with Simpson and his wife that in case they paid this money to Curry, this $2,800, that was to end the whole transaction. Mr. Curry simply said if they would pay this $2,800 and give him half the face of the note, why he would throw off his interest. In order to induce the Simpsons to pay the $2,800 we threw off the interest due to date, so that we started in with a new principal of $2,800. The other $2,800, the one I am now suing for, was to draw interest and was to be paid either in cash or note. That was the understanding that we had. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson said, 'We will probably pay all of this note, and won't give any more notes.' Mr. Simpson did not give any other note for the $2,800, nor has it been paid. Mr. Simpson retained the note ever since he paid the $2,800 to the Bank of Willows."

Mrs. Simpson, wife of the defendant, testified that the plaintiff agreed to accept the $2,802 in full satisfaction of the note. She further testified that her father's estate had never been probated, and expressed the supposition that a part of the money loaned to her husband by the plaintiff belonged to her father's estate. She appeared to have conceived an intense feeling of bitterness against her brother, W. H. Curry, and expressed to the plaintiff much indignation because he (Smith) had assigned the note to said Curry. She said to the plaintiff that the note never would be paid so long as W. H. Curry had any interest in it.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simpson testified that she heard Smith say to her mother that, if the defendant would pay one-half of what the note called for, he would cancel and deliver up the note to the defendant as fully satisfied.

John Curry, also a brother of Mrs. Simpson, testifying in rebuttal for the plaintiff, stated that a few days after February 21, 1909, he received a letter from Mrs. Simpson, in which she said that they had paid W. H. Curry $2,800 on the note, and that "she would give me $1,000 and also Mr. Smith $1,800, which $2,800 represented the balance of the note" in suit. (It should here be explained that Smith testified that Mrs. Simpson insisted that John Curry was entitled to $1,000 of the $2,800 which remained due on the note after the payment of one-half the note to W. H. Curry.) While the fact, if it was a fact, that the estate of Mrs. Simpson's father was never probated, and that Mrs. Simpson believed that a portion of the money loaned to the defendant by the plaintiff, who, as seen, was a partner of her father during the latter's lifetime, came from her father's estate, is not material to the issues presented by the pleadings, yet it is not improper to state that John Curry, having been asked why he was to receive $1,000 of the $2,800 remaining due on the note, and whether it was because he was led to believe that he was entitled to a part of his father's estate, answered:

"No, sir; I don't know why it was. I was not to get it because I was led to believe that I was entitled to part of my father's estate. I don't know why it was. I never had any conversation or discussion of any kind with Mr. or Mrs. Simpson in regard to my father's estate. I don't know that my father had any estate. I never learned after his death that he had an estate."

There was considerable other testimony given by the witnesses above named, but we have given herein a substantial statement of the important facts to which they testified. There is, as will be noted, no denial by the defendant that the note sued on was executed and delivered by him to the plaintiff for moneys loaned to him by the plaintiff, nor is there any denial that no other payment was made on the note than the sum of approximately $2,800, paid to the Bank of Willows and by the bank to W. H. Curry, as above shown. The plaintiff's story of how the note came to be delivered to Simpson is not an unreasonable one. The written instruction from the Bank of D. O. Mills & Co. to the Bank of Willows was that, upon the payment of the $2,800, or one-half of the note, the note should be delivered either to Simpson or Smith. This instruction was given at the request of Curry, who then held the note as collateral security, and Smith testified that the note was so sent with his consent and by his request. This circumstance goes in corroboration of Smith's testimony that, the transactions between him and the defendant having covered a number of years, during which a number of different notes were from time to time made by the defendant and delivered to the plaintiff for the purpose of taking up and canceling a note previously made, the note in suit, if delivered to the defendant, should not, by reason of that fact, be regarded as satisfied, but should be supplied by the defendant by a new note for the balance due after the payment to Curry of the $2,800. But there is no necessity for an analysis of the evidence to show that the findings are sufficiently supported. The whole controversy hinges upon the solution of the question whether, as Mrs. Simpson and her daughter testified, the plaintiff agreed that he would deliver up the note to the defendant as fully paid upon the payment by the latter of one-half of what the note called for to Curry or to the Bank of Willows for him, and upon this question there is a decided conflict in the testimony; the plaintiff positively testifying that there was no understanding or agreement between him and the defendant or the latter's wife that the obligation of the note would be treated as extinguished upon the payment of one-half of the sum it called for, and Mrs. Simpson and her daughter flatly contradicting that testimony. As above stated, the plaintiff's testimony is not unreasonable upon its face, nor inherently improbable. The conflict thus produced was, of course, for the trial court to determine, and, having determined it against the defendant, we perceive no ground or reason for holding that the trial court's conclusion thereon was or is wrong. Thus it is plainly manifest, as declared in the outset of this opinion, that the case here is not one in which it may with justness be said that, as a matter of law, the "great current of the evidence is against the findings."

The judgment is affirmed.

McPHAIL v. NUNES et al. (Civ. 1863.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1918.)

1. PROCESS ⟸96(4)—PUBLICATION—AFFIDAVIT—SUFFICIENCY.

An affidavit for an order of publication of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 412, as amended by St. 1905, pp. 141, 142, omitting to state that the certificate of residence provided for by Civ. Code, § 1163, has not been filed by defendant, or, if so filed, that defendant cannot be found by the sheriff at the place named therein, is insufficient.

2. PROCESS ⟸85—SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

Service of summons by publication, being in derogation of the common law, must substantially comply with the statute authorizing it.

3. PROCESS ⟸96(4) — SERVICE BY PUBLICATION—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT—"PROVIDED."

That affidavit of publication states that defendant resides outside state or has departed therefrom and cannot be found within state does not obviate necessity of setting out facts as to the certificate provided for by Civ. Code, § 1163, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 412, as amended by St. 1905, pp. 141, 142, authorizing service by publication "provided" it must first appear by affidavit that no certificate of residence has been filed for defendant or, if so filed, that he could not be found by sheriff at place designated therein; the word "provided" meaning on condition (citing Words and Phrases, vol. 6).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Provided.]

4. JUDGMENT ⟸490(3)—VALIDITY—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A judgment rendered on an affidavit of publication insufficient in setting out facts relative to certificate of residence provided for by Civ. Code, § 1163, is void on its face and may be collaterally attacked.

John G. Covert, of Hanford, for respondents.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to quiet title to 160 acres of land in Kings county and to have adjudged void the judgment of the superior court of said county, in a certain action to quiet title, wherein A. F. Nunes, one of the defendants in this action, was plaintiff, and Jennie V. Copper and certain fictitiously named parties were defendants. Judgment in the present action was in favor of defendants, from which and from an order denying him a new trial plaintiff appeals.

The facts as gathered from the pleadings and the findings are: That the land in controversy was purchased by the defendant Nunes on the 26th day of July, 1907, at a tax sale regularly authorized by the state controller and duly conducted by the tax collector of Kings county, said land having been previously sold to the state for delinquent taxes, costs, and penalties; that on the 8th day of January, 1909, said Nunes, as before stated, commenced an action in the superior court of Kings county against Jennie V. Copper and several fictitiously named defendants for the purpose of quieting title to said real property, title to which at the time of the assessment and levy of taxes thereon and the sale thereof to Nunes at the tax sale was in said Jennie V. Copper; that Nunes was awarded judgment in said action quieting his title to said real property; and that subsequently he conveyed certain interests in the land to the defendants Van Valer and Farley.

The defendants in this action denied that plaintiff had title to or any interest in the real property in suit and set up ownership in fee in themselves by prescription, under the tax sale above referred to and also under the judgment in Nunes v. Copper et al., supra. The court found adversely to the defendants on their claim of title by prescription and under the tax sale, but found that the title was in them by virtue of said judgment in Nunes v. Copper et al.

Service of summons in said action of Nunes v. Copper et al. was by publication, and the sole point presented for decision here is whether the affidavit for publication of summons in said action was sufficient to support the order of the court for the publication and the finding in said order that defendant Copper had departed from the state.

The affidavit upon which said order of publication was based was made by A. F. Nunes, and the essential portions thereof are as follows:

"That said Jennie V. Copper cannot after due and diligent search be found within the said county of Kings, or within the state of California, and this affiant in support thereof states the following facts and circumstances:

"That said affiant placed in the hands of the sheriff of the county of Kings, state of California, the summons in the above-entitled action, for the purpose of personal service on said defendants or either of them, and the said sheriff has made his return thereon that he has been unable to find said defendants or either of them within the said county of Kings.

"That this affiant for the purpose of finding said defendants and any or either of them, and to ascertain the place of residence of either or any of said defendants, has made diligent inquiry of various residents and business agents, and has been informed by each and all of such persons inquired from, that they do not know the residence or present whereabouts of either or any of said defendants, and therefore believes that neither of said defendants are residents of the state of California, and that their present places of residence are unknown to this affiant; that affiant has made diligent inquiry to find said defendants but cannot after due diligence find either or any of said defendants within this state.

"That this affiant therefore says that personal service of said summons cannot be made on said defendants or either of them and prays," etc.

Section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by the Legislature of 1905 (Stats. 1905, pp. 141, 142), reads as follows:

"Where the person on whom service is to be made resides out of the state; or has departed from the state; or cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state; or conceals himself to avoid the service of summons; or is a foreign corporation having no managing or business agent, cashier or secretary within the state, and the fact appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court, or a judge thereof; and it also appears by such affidavit, or by the verified complaint on file, that a cause of action exists against the defendant in respect to whom the service is to be made, or that he is a necessary or proper party to the action; or when it appears by such affidavit, or by the complaint on file herein, that it is an action which relates to or the subject of which is real or personal property in this state, in which such person defendant or foreign corporation defendant has or claims a lien or interest, actual or contingent, therein, or in which the relief demanded consists wholly or in part in excluding such person or foreign corporation from any interest therein, such court or judge may make an order that the service be made by the publication of the summons, provided that where service is sought to be made upon a person who cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state it must first appear to the court by the affidavit aforesaid that there has not been filed, on behalf of such person, in the county where such action is pending, the certificate of residence provided for by section one thousand one hundred and sixty-three of the Civil Code in the county in which the action is brought; or that said certificate was so filed and that the defendant cannot be found at the place named in said certificate, which latter fact must be made to appear by the certificate of the sheriff of the county wherein said defendant claims residence in and by said certificate of residence, and which certificate of said sheriff must show that service of said summons was attempted upon said defendant at the place named in said certificate of residence but that said defendant was not to be found thereat."

The amendment of said section by the Legislature of 1905 involves that part thereof beginning with the word "provided," and which, as is to be observed, requires that the affidavit upon which the order for the service of summons by publication is based shall contain a statement that the certificate of residence provided for by section 1163 of the Civil Code has not been filed, or that such certificate was duly filed, but that the defendant cannot be found at the place designated in said certificate where service may be made.

The appellant, as stated above, contends that the affidavit was fatally defective and wholly insufficient to give the court jurisdiction to make the order of publication of summons because: (1) The facts stated therein are mere ultimate facts alleged "solely upon the belief of affiant"; (2) that the affidavit omits to state the facts required to be set forth in an affidavit for the publication of summons with respect to the certificate provided for by the section of the Civil Code above named.

[1] We think it is very clear that, for the second reason above stated, the affidavit was insufficient to justify the making of the order of publication of summons, and therefore we will not be required to consider and determine whether the affidavit was otherwise legally sufficient.

[2] It is thoroughly settled that, inasmuch as the service of summons by publication is in derogation of the common law, to make such constructive service effectual, the statute authorizing it must be substantially complied with and its mandates obeyed. Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 153; Columbia Screw Co. v. Warner Lock Co., 138 Cal. 445, 446, 71 Pac. 498.

It cannot for a moment be doubted that, to have legally authorized the court to make the order for the publication of the summons, it was absolutely necessary that the affidavit should have contained the statement either that no certificate designating the place where the summons might be served on the defendant, Copper, in said action, had been filed, or that, if filed, the defendant could not be found by the sheriff at the place designated in the certificate where summons might be served. The failure to do so rendered the affidavit fatally defective. In other words, by reason of the failure to incorporate that statement in the affidavit, section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not only not substantially complied with, but legally the same as not complied with at all.

[3] The contention that, where the affidavit of publication states that defendant resided out of the state or has departed therefrom, and that such person cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state, it is not necessary to set forth, in addition to such statements, that no certificate of residence has been filed on behalf of the defendant, or, if such certificate has been filed, the sheriff could not find him at the place designated in such certificate, cannot be upheld. Section 412 unqualifiedly makes the statement as to such certificate one of the essentials of the affidavit for the order of publication. Said section, after setting forth other conditions which must be shown to exist to authorize the making of the order of publication, proceeds, "provided that where service is sought to be made upon a person who cannot, after due diligence, be found within the state, it must first appear to the court by the affidavit aforesaid," etc., following which is the provision as to the certificate provided for by section 1163 of the Civil Code. "The word 'provided' means 'on condition.'" Words and Phrases, vol. 6; De Witt v. Kaufman County, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 332, 66 S. W. 224, 226.

In Paschall v. Passmore, 15 Pa. 295, 308, the word is thus explained:

"The word 'provided' is recognized as implying a condition without the addition of any other words; so that if one granted lands to another in fee, 'provided' that the grantee pay to the grantor a specified sum at a certain time, there is a good condition without words of re-entry."

See, also, other cases cited in Words and Phrases, supra.

It is, of course, quite true that the word "provided" in a statute is not always or invariably to be interpreted as introducing a necessary condition. The sense in which the word is used in a statute, or the effect that it was intended by the Legislature to have therein, must be determined from a consideration of the section or statute as a whole. But, as to the meaning of the word as it is used in section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure, there is no possible ground for controversy or doubt. The language of that part of said section beginning with said word is mandatory and plainly says that the "aforesaid affidavit" (meaning, of course, the affidavit for publication) "must" contain a statement that the certificate provided for by section 1163 of the Civil Code has not been filed, or, if filed, the defendant could not be found at the place designated in such certificate where service of summons may be made on such person.

The cases cited and relied upon by the respondents as in support of the position that the affidavit of publication was in all respects legally sufficient to have justified the order for the publication of the summons were decided prior to the amendment of section 412 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the Legislature of 1905. They are therefore not in point here.

[4] An intimation is made that, since jurisdiction will be presumed in courts of superior general jurisdiction, the remedy for the correction of the judgment was by a direct attack thereon by way of appeal. But there is obviously no merit in that suggestion.

The affidavit of publication of summons and the order directing publication of the same are part of the judgment roll, where the service of summons is constructive or by publication. It is, of course, well settled that where the judgment is void upon its face it may be attacked collaterally. In other words, if an inspection of the judgment roll itself discloses that the judgment is for any reason void, the judgment may be so declared and as having no force or effect on a collateral as well as on a direct attack thereon. Of course, the rule is different where the judgment is merely voidable. These propositions are elementary, and authorities supporting the statement thereof need not be cited.

The judgment and the order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

UNION OIL CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. RIDEOUT. (Civ. 1816.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 12, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 9, 1919.)

1. WHARVES ⟸7—DOCKING PRIVILEGES—NATURE—"LICENSE."

The right granted to boat owners by harbor commissioners having jurisdiction over the San Francisco water front to use the piers for docking vessels is a mere privilege or license.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, License.]

2. SHIPPING ⟸80—APPROACH TO BOAT—DUTY TO INSPECT AND REPAIR.

Notwithstanding harbor commissioners have the duty of repairing defects in wharves, a boat owner using a pier must exercise reasonable care to discover and correct such defects, he inviting the public to the pier for the transaction of business.

3. SHIPPING ⟸75—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Under a contract between a boat owner and an oil company, whereby the boat owner guaranteed "proper unloading facilities and access to the dock" to the oil company when delivering oil to his boat, he was bound to furnish unloading facilities which would insure delivery of oil on board with safety and dispatch.

4. SHIPPING ⟸80—APPROACH TO BOAT—DUTY TO INSPECT.

The driver of an oil truck delivering oil to a steamer at a dock, having safely delivered a load about an hour before, was charged with no duty of leaving his truck and investigating as to the safety of the apron leading from the dock to the boat, where it was in the same condition as before, and could assume that defendant would use reasonable care to see that the apron was safe.

5. SHIPPING ⟸86(2)—APPROACH TO BOAT—EVIDENCE—CUSTOM.

In an action for the loss of an oil truck precipitated into the harbor because of an apron leading from the dock to a steamer giving way, evidence held not sufficient to show a custom of the driver to notify the engineer of the steamer before driving on the apron.

6. SHIPPING ⟸86(2)—APPROACH TO BOAT—DEFECTS—RES IPSA LOQUITUR.

In an action for loss of an oil truck precipitated into the harbor by the giving way of an apron leading from the dock to a steamer, the burden was not on plaintiff to show that the defect was produced by defendant or his agents, the doctrine res ipsa loquitur applying.

7. SHIPPING ⟸86(2)—LIABILITY FOR DEFECTS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for loss of an oil truck by the giving way of an apron leading from a dock to a steamer, evidence held sufficient to show that defendant had some control over the situation because of the necessity of adjusting the apron in accordance with the tides.

8. SHIPPING ⟸86(2)—APPROACH TO BOAT—DEFECTS—EVIDENCE.

In an action for loss of an oil truck by giving way of an apron leading from a dock to a steamer, evidence that the driver of the truck had made 25 trips previously, when the apron was in exactly the same position, was sufficient to show that in the ordinary course of things the apron would not give way.

9. SHIPPING ⟸75—CONTRACT—CONDITION OF PREMISES.

Where a boat owner agreed with an oil company to supply proper unloading facilities, the duty still rested on him to discover and correct any defects in an apron leading from the wharf to his steamer, regardless of the influence of the tides.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Union Oil Company of California, a corporation, against E. V. Rideout. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

W. E. Drobisch, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Tum Suden & tum Suden, of San Francisco, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought to recover damages for injuries to personal property. Judgment was in favor of defendant, and the appeal is prosecuted by plaintiff from said judgment.

Respondent was the owner of a certain steamer, known as the Crockett, plying upon the waters of San Francisco Bay and tributary rivers. For purposes of docking, he had rented from the board of state harbor commissioners certain space on one of the piers at San Francisco. At the portion of the pier used by respondent's steamer there was an apron which was lowered from the pier to the boat for the purpose of ingress and egress. It was so arranged as to be raised or lowered according to the tide, and was kept in place by two iron pins, one on each side, which were passed through holes in two suspension bars.

On the 21st of April, 1915, the parties hereto entered into a written agreement by which plaintiff agreed to furnish to defendant oil for fuel to be used in various steamers, among them being the Crockett. There was a clause in the contract to the effect that defendant "guaranteed proper unloading facilities and access to dock."

On January 22, 1916, defendant's bookkeeper ordered oil for delivery the next day, which was Sunday. At about 10:30 o'clock Sunday morning Edward E. Ellis, a motor truck driver in the employ of plaintiff, appeared at the pier with a load of oil for the Crockett. He testified:

"I was present at pier 19 or on the portion occupied by the steamer of Mr. Rideout on the 23d of January, 1916. I was present the first time at about 10:30 o'clock a. m., next at 11:45 a. m. I was there both times with the truck loaded. The first time I went there on that day everything was ready, and I backed out onto the apron and unloaded my load of oil. The apron was down the same as it usually was when the boat was in, so I backed out on the apron and unloaded the load of oil. We never backed both rear wheels on the apron. I only ran one wheel onto the apron; that was the rear left wheel. It was about three or four feet from the edge of the apron. The other wheel was on the solid part of the pier. The rear end of the truck was toward the boat. We unloaded from the rear. After having backed the truck up I put the pipe on and unloaded. I did not adjust the pipe myself. I had one of Mr. Rideout's men help me the first time. They always give us a hand. The position of the apron at that time, with reference to the main floor of the dock, was about level. It took me about 15 or 20 minutes to unload at that time. At the time I left on the first visit there were present men in the employ of Captain Rideout. I had a conversation with one of the men of Mr. Rideout who was there at that time. His name is Mr. Peterson (should be Pierson). He told me to come back as soon as I could and eat lunch on the boat. Mr. Peterson (Pierson) is Mr. Rideout's bookkeeper there, and I think he is the man that takes care of the ordering of the oil; he has something to do with it. I went back to the Union Oil Company station, reloaded, and came right back and backed out into the place; the pipe was already there. The apron was just about the same position. I didn't notice it had been changed a bit. I don't know anything about the manipulation of this apron. That is not up to me. I never had anything to do with that at all. Captain Rideout's boat crew handled that. They had theretofore always put it in place. It takes four or five men to move it; one man can't. I never at any time had anything to do with it. I came back the second time and backed out onto the apron as I had previously done, one wheel on the apron and the other three wheels on the dock. One of the rear wheels on the apron and down the apron went. I tried to get the truck started the other way, and she tipped me out and dumped me into a pile of barrels and the truck disappeared. As it tipped over the wheel that was on the apron pulled over onto the pier, and she righted herself, and went right down, and hit the boat a pretty fair crack, and away she went. She tore the hood and everything off as she went down."

The witness stated that after the accident he examined the apron and found that the pins were "on top of the supports that held them up." He said that he had delivered oil to defendant's steamers not fewer than 25 times with the same truck or trucks of the same type; that he always put his truck in exactly the same position.

On cross-examination the witness testified:

"When I started the oil running it was 10:30 o'clock by my watch. I do not know if the tide was going out or not. The boat was swaying a little bit, I guess; it always sways more or less. I could not say whether the apron and the lip rises with the movement of the tide. I don't know anything about tides. I know that the tide in the bay rises and falls and I naturally infer that when the tide rises the boat rises. I cannot tell you whether or not when the boat rises the apron and lip also rise. I was not gone an hour and quarter between the first and second load. When I came with the first load there was a fireman, I think, to receive the oil. The fireman did not adjust the apron; I do not know who adjusted it. The apron was already adjusted when I landed with the first load. When I got there with the first load I did not get off the truck. I did not report to anybody that I was there with the first load. * * * When I left there was a bunch of men working around there. After I had the truck back in place they helped me put the long pipe on. Then I unloaded my load of oil and took off the pipe. * * * When I got back with the second load there wasn't anybody there. I did not report at the office; I did not report to anybody. I did not get off the truck. I did not ascertain whether there was a change in the tide, or whether the change of the tide or swaying of the boat in any wise disturbed the arrangement of the apron and the bridge. I did not inquire of anybody whether everything was in order; there was nobody there. I did not make any inspection myself. I did not know whether the apron was safe and properly fastened or not. I naturally supposed it was all right. I backed into place as I always had done when the apron was down and the boat was in. There were always men there before that, but this time nobody was there."

The testimony on behalf of defendant was as follows: E. V. Rideout, the defendant, testified that in January, 1916, he had the use of pier 19.

"The space we actually occupied is open to the public. I have not the exclusive occupation of this wharf. The space is not marked off. When we were not in possession any one can come with the permission of the wharfinger on the dock, or they can come in without permission. * * * The wharfinger looks after the dock and takes care of it. He is there constantly. I have not agreed to anything as to keeping anything in order. I was under no obligation to maintain the plank, bridging, piling, or anything of that kind. The harbor commissioners keep the dock in repair. I have nothing to do with the maintenance of the apron. The harbor commissioners or their agents make the repairs if any are needed. * * * The harbor commissioners supplied the ropes, chains, pins, and tackles. * * * I have never directed the Union Oil Company's trucks as to how they should drive or where or when, nor have I ever authorized any of my employés to direct them in the operation of their trucks on the dock. * * * I was not present on the day of the accident. The engineer was in charge of the boat on that day. Mr. Pierson, the bookkeeper, was in charge of the books."

H. H. Pierson, defendant's bookkeeper, testified:

"On the 23d of January, 1916, I was in the inner office doing some work on my books. I have nothing to do with the running of the boat other than just giving instruction when the load is to go and come. * * * I remember the Union Oil tank wagon coming to deliver oil on that Sunday morning."

The witness told of the delivery of the first load of oil, and that he asked the driver to take dinner with them if he returned in time.

"I was there when he came back with the next load. That was about five minutes of 12. When he came on the dock there was a big noise. I ran out of the office. I saw a man standing looking toward the slip. There was no truck there. I just saw that the apron was broken; one of the cables, I think it was on the left-hand side, looking down, was broken. The counterweight had dropped down. The pins were hanging underneath; the two pins on the side of the apron. I laid one on the dock and said, 'That is the trouble.' I said that to Mr. Younger, one of the other employés of the Rideout Company."

F. H. Young, who said he was "general utility man" for the E. V. Rideout Company, was with Mr. Pierson at the time of the accident. He said that he "heard an awful crash outside," and he and Pierson ran out. He testified:

"I observed the condition of the apron at the time. The apron had fallen down. The two slides that had held it up had pulled through, and one of them was broken off and the other was laying down to one side. The two pins that hold those slides in place were both hanging by their chains. One of the counterweights was broken; the fastener where it fastened to the apron was broken; one hinge was broken."

On cross-examination the witness said:

"The pins that hold this rod sustain the outer end to the apron, and also these cables that are used to hoist it up. If these pins are not in there, and any considerable weight comes upon the apron, the apron drops; that is, if the weight is more than these cables will sustain. It takes two men with great effort to operate this outer end of the apron. I have seen two men, one on each side, with great effort lift it, but two men on each side can handle it very nicely. * * * The block and tackles are attached to the outer end of the apron whenever you desire to raise or lower the apron. It takes four men to raise and lower the apron."

C. W. Thom, chief engineer of the steamer Crockett, testified that he was on the boat, with his full crew of three firemen and assistant engineer, on the day of the accident. They were at dinner and heard a slight jar on the boat when the truck hit it. He said:

"I and my crew have nothing to do with the apron. I do not exercise any authority or undertake to direct the trucks of the Union Oil Company when delivering oil. I gave the driver no orders to come back. He said he would be back, but he set no time."

On cross-examination he said:

"When the boat lands at this place the mate or the captain handle the men that handle the cargo. Then the men on the boats unload the cargo over this apron. When the apron is too high they lower it; when it is too low they raise it, and they leave it as it may be necessary for the proper handling of the cargo. The boat's crew regulate it in accordance with the tide. About sixty men constitute the crew. I suppose there were over a dozen on board at the time this accident occurred. Whenever the wagon comes from the Union Oil Company it is the custom first for them to announce their presence and then I send somebody to handle the pipe. I have nothing to do with cables or tackles or anything of that kind whatever, nor have any of my men."

In rebuttal the witness Ellis testified:

"I drove on the wharf in the ordinary manner. I backed up on the apron the same as usual. It was not a place to use any speed. I had to stop and back up. It was simply a short place to back up and you can't back with any excessive speed. When the boat is in and the apron down I do not give notice to the people on the boat of my presence. * * * If the apron was not in position when we went there the boat crew put it in position."

On cross-examination the witness testified:

"The truck and load of oil weighed 22,000 pounds. Q. You have been to school, haven't you? A. I have. Q. How far did you progress in school? A. I went far enough to read and write. Q. You are a grammar school graduate? You know all about the tides? A. I know that the tides come in."

We have thus presented sufficient of the evidence produced by both sides to subserve the purposes of the decision herein.

The findings of the court, in substance, were that defendant was not guilty of negligence in any degree, and that plaintiff's servant Ellis was guilty of negligence in recklessly and carelessly driving upon said apron in the absence of defendant and his employés and without examining said apron or inquiring as to its condition of safety.

The harbor commissioners have full and exclusive general control and jurisdiction over the wharves and piers of the San Francisco water front, and it is undoubtedly their general duty to keep the same in proper condition for the use for which they are intended and to repair them when out of order and not in proper condition for their use with safety by those docking their boats and vessels thereat.

[1] As to the contractual relation existing between the harbor commissioners and those to whom they let the privilege of docking their boats at the piers, while it is to be conceded that, in a strict sense, as counsel for the defendant contend, the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between them (see Morton Bros. v. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 122 Cal. 353, 55 Pac. 1), still it cannot be doubted that, so long as the owners of boats have their vessels in dock at said piers, though not having that exclusive right and privilege, they are nevertheless as much occupants of said piers as they would or could be if they were in the strictest sense tenants of said commissioners. We suppose it is safe to say that the right granted to boat owners by the commissioners to use the piers for the docking of their vessels is a mere privilege or license, all owners of vessels plying the waters ending in the San Francisco bay having, where duly granted them, the same privilege or license. But it does not follow from that situation that it is not the duty of the owner of a boat or vessel, while using said piers for their transportation purposes, to see that, while their vessels are so docked, the necessary facilities or equipments for the loading or discharging of freight or the taking in or discharging of passengers are in safe and proper condition for those purposes. In 29 Cyc. p. 476, it is said that "the occupant of premises, although a mere licensee, is liable for injuries inflicted by reason of his neglect or failure to keep the premises in a safe condition"; and in Thompson v. Tilton Elec. L. & P. Co., 77 N. H. 93, 88 Atl. 216, which was an action for the death of a child, who was killed by the electric current of one of the company's poles while leaning against the pole, which stood in a public highway, the court said:

"In the view most favorable to the defendant, the relation existing between it and the deceased was that which arises between two licensees upon land of a third party. Each must use ordinary care not to injure the other or his property."

[2] Even if there were inherent defects in the apron or any other of the equipments of the pier essential to the loading or unloading properly and with safety of freight on and from the vessels docking thereat, and it was the duty of the harbor commissioners to correct such defects, it was still incumbent on the defendant, while using the pier, to exercise reasonable or such care as might have been necessary to the discovery of such defects and the correction thereof either by himself or the commissioners. This requirement of the defendant follows from the proposition that, when using the dock for the purposes of the transportation business in which he is engaged, the defendant, like the man who conducts a merchandise business of any character, invites the public to the dock and to use the pier for the purpose of transacting business with him, and, again like the merchant, he is required to maintain in safe and proper condition the means of ingress and egress whereby his customers go in upon and out of his boat, and the means whereby freight is transferred from the boat to the wharf or from the wharf to the boat.

[3] As a matter of fact, as to the plaintiff in this case, the defendant, in his written contract, guaranteed to the former, when delivering oil to his boats, "proper unloading facilities and access to the dock." By this covenant the defendant agreed to provide the plaintiff with safe means whereby he could deliver the oil upon the boats, and thus he expressly bound himself, as the law itself had already bound him, to provide the plaintiff with such unloading facilities as would insure the delivery of the oil on board the boats with safety and dispatch.

[4] As the evidence above quoted herein shows, Ellis, who was in charge of the truck on the day of the accident, had on some 25 or more previous occasions delivered oil to the defendant's boats at said pier, in the same manner in which he attempted to do so when the apron gave way and the truck thus precipitated into the bay. On that very day, just a short time before—not much over an hour prior to the accident—he delivered a quantity of oil to the defendant's steamer Crockett at said pier, and in doing so drove or backed the truck, as he attempted to do when the accident occurred, onto the apron. It was necessary for him thus to move the truck upon the apron to make the delivery. On his return with the second load of oil, the driver observed that the apron was apparently in the same condition that it was in when he had previously used it. He had the right to assume that it was in the same condition, or that, being in position for its customary or usual use, there were no defects in it which would render it unsafe to use it as he had always used it. He had a right to assume that the defendant, when in use of the pier, would exercise reasonable care to see that the apron and its essential equipments were maintained in a condition to be used with safety. Particularly was he justified in so assuming, in view of the fact that he knew that the defendant's engineer and others connected with the boat knew that he would return and expected him to return to the boat that day, shortly after the first load was delivered, with another load of oil to be delivered to the boat. He was not, therefore, charged with the duty of leaving his truck and himself making an investigation to assure himself of the safety of the apron.

In Earl v. San Francisco Bridge Co., 31 Cal. App. 339, 160 Pac. 570, an action for damages for personal injuries to an employé who was injured from a powerful electric current while manipulating a part of the electrical apparatus, which had gotten out of repair without the knowledge of the plaintiff, and which defect was the cause of the injuries received by him, this court said, at

"It was not negligence on the part of respondent to assume that conditions were as before, and that the switch would disconnect the current. Having the right to assume that the appliance was in the same condition, he was excusable for his failure to make an examination or inspection whereby he might have ascertained what had been done; nor was the difference in the appearance of the equipment so palpable and obtrusive as to compel the conclusion that, while hastening to perform his duty, if he had exercised ordinary care he would have discovered the change."

As above stated, the evidence shows that there was absolutely no difference in the appearance of the apron at the time of the accident from its appearance when he delivered the first load of oil that day or at any other previous delivery of oil by the same driver.

[5] But it is asserted by the respondent that there existed a custom, of which the driver of the truck had knowledge, that whenever said driver took a load of oil to the boat, to be emptied from the truck into a tank maintained for that purpose on the boat, he was to notify the engineer or some other person connected with the vessel of his presence with the oil before attempting to drive the truck on the apron. But we have found no such testimony in the record as it is presented here. What the engineer did testify to was this: "Whenever the wagon from the Union Oil Company comes it is the custom first for them to announce their presence and then I send somebody to handle the pipe. I directed where the oil should go. That is the ordinary method of doing it. When the pipe is put in I am notified of it in order to direct where the flow should go." Again, the engineer testified: "Before the oil is taken aboard they always notify us, because we have got to know, otherwise we would flood the tank." This is far from saying that it was the custom for the driver to notify the engineer of his presence at the pier for the purpose of giving the engineer or some other person connected with the boat an opportunity to inspect the apron to see whether it was safe to drive the truck upon it.

It is not known, or at least it was not shown, how the apron became defective or in a condition not to be used with safety, nor is it necessary to this decision that that fact should be known, since there is no claim that the driver of the truck caused the unsafe condition thereof. An investigation after the accident, however, disclosed that the two pins which held in place the slides which supported the apron were out of their proper places and were "hanging down by their chains." In other words, it was evident that by some means or in some way, wholly unexplained by the record, the pins were removed from their proper places, and therefore afforded no support for the slides. It may be that the action of the tide had so swayed the apron as to cause the pins to become loose and so become useless for the purposes for which they were designed. However that may be, it is contended by the respondent that the burden was upon the plaintiff affirmatively to show either that the pins were removed by the defendant or his servants or that the defect in the apron was produced by some other act of theirs.

[6] We do not agree to that proposition, but, on the contrary, we think that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applies. That rule is stated as follows by Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 60:

"Where a thing which causes injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care."

See Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 556, 40 Pac. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146.

In Bergen v. Tulare County Power Co., 173 Cal. 720, 721, 161 Pac. 269, 273, which was an action for damages for death caused by the negligent installation of an electrical apparatus, the court said:

"It is the rule in this state that where electricity is furnished to a system installed and operated exclusively by the owner of the premises, the doctrine res ipsa loquitur has no application. * * * But where the defendant in such a case had some control over the situation (italics ours), either by reason of its construction or its operation of plaintiff's plant, a showing of accident without plaintiff's fault shifts the burden of proof."

[7] We have already shown that the pier and its equipments necessary for the loading and discharging of freight, during the times the vessels of the defendant occupied the pier, were under the latter's exclusive control and management. The chief engineer of the defendant's boat, which was at the pier when the accident happened, testified:

"When the boat lands at this place (the pier), the mate or the captain handle the men that handle the cargo. Then the men on the boats unload the cargo over this apron. When the apron is too high, they lower it; when it is too low, they raise it, and they leave it as may be necessary for the proper handling of the cargo. The boat's crew regulate it in accordance with the tide, and they use it wherever there is a necessity."

That evidence is sufficient, if there were no other in the record, to show that the defendant had "some control over the situation" by reason of the necessity of regulating the apron in accordance with the action of the tide and of keeping it in proper condition for using it for the boat's purposes with safety.

[8] As before shown, it also further appears from the evidence that Ellis, the plaintiff's truck driver, during the preceding two years during which the plaintiff had been supplying the defendant with oil, had delivered the oil to the latter's boats, and had no less than 25 different times put his truck, preparatory to emptying the oil into the tanks of the boats, in exactly the same position on the apron as he put it when the accident happened, and that never before the occasion on which this accident happened had any trouble or damage occurred by reason of that act. This experience was sufficient to show that in the ordinary course of things such accidents did not happen. Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Cap Co., 139 Cal. 344, 73 Pac. 164.

If it be said that the only reasonable theory of how the apron became defective was, as above suggested, that it was the result of the action of the tide, an agency not subject to human control—the act of God—still, under the rule above stated, "the explanation should come from the party charged with the special duty of protection." Cooley on Torts, § 799; Judson v. Giant Powder Co., supra.

[9] Moreover, if the condition of the apron is influenced by the tides, it is still the duty of the defendant to see that any defect therein so occasioned is discovered and corrected. We may assume that a professional navigator is thoroughly familiar with the action of the tides and the effect thereof on navigation and all the essentials of shipping.

We can perceive no escape from the conclusion that the evidence, as to which there is no dispute so far as are concerned the vital considerations upon which the case must be decided, does not support the findings necessary to the support of the judgment.

The judgment is accordingly reversed and the cause remanded.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY ASSUR. CORPORATION, LIMITED, OF LONDON, ENGLAND, v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. ÆTNA LIFE INS. CO. v. SAME. OCEAN ACCIDENT & GUARANTEE CORPORATION, Limited, v. SAME. (L. A. 5732, 5739, 5740.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸346—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—BURDEN—POLICY OF LAW.

It is the policy of the law to place the burden arising from personal injuries upon the business or industry in which an injured employé is engaged, by placing the responsibility for indemnity upon the employer.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸347—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION — STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION—"EMPLOYER"—EMPLOYÉ."

In defining the terms "employer" and "employé" in any statute passed in pursuance of Const. art. 20, § 21, authorizing the Workmen's Compensation Law, no definition therein contained can enlarge the scope of the constitutional authority.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Employé; Employer.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸361—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—RELATION OF PARTIES.

In determining whether or not the relationship of employer and employé existed under the Workmen's Compensation Law, the general law as well as the terms of the statute itself must be considered.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸361—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—PERSONS WITHIN STATUTE —"EMPLOYER"—"EMPLOYÉ."

The definitions of "employer" and "employé," in Workmen's Compensation Law, §§ 13, 14, are broad enough to include both the general and special employer.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸361—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—JOINT EMPLOYERS.

Where a partnership furnished men and a foreman to a cement company, who were to be paid by the partnership with funds furnished by the cement company, the partnership retaining the power to hire and discharge, the men were under the joint control of the partnership and the company, who were jointly associated in carrying out the work.

6. INSURANCE ⟸144(1) — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—ACCIDENT INSURANCE—AMENDMENT OF POLICY.

Where a policy protecting an employer under the Workmen's Compensation Law fails because of mutual mistake to express the intent of the parties, it may by mutual consent be corrected, even after the happening of an accident covered thereby, in the absence of estoppel, and if not done so as to defeat an employé's right to compensation.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸404—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—ACCIDENT ARISING OUT OF EMPLOYMENT—EVIDENCE.

Under the express provisions of Workmen's Compensation Law, § 77a, as amended by St. 1915, p. 1102, § 28, the hearsay declarations of decedent are admissible to find that his death arose out of the employment, within the Act.

In Bank.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Law by Ellen R. Coulter, claimant, to recover for the death of J. A. Coulter, employé, opposed by the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, of London, England, the Ætna Life Insurance Company, a corporation, and the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited. An award was made in claimant's favor by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the insurance carriers petition separately for writs of review. Award against Ætna Life Insurance Company and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, of London, England, affirmed, and award against the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, annulled.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation, Limited, of London, England.

Henshaw, Black & Goldberg, of San Francisco, for petitioner Ætna Life Ins. Co.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, J. These proceedings were instituted by the petitioners to review an award against them by the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of Ellen R. Coulter for the death of her husband, J. A. Coulter, alleged to have been caused by an accident of employment on November 16, 1917, at the plant of the Riverside Portland Cement Company, near Riverside, Cal. The Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation were insurance carriers for the Wellman-Lewis Company, a copartnership, while the Ætna Life Insurance Company was the insurance carrier for the Riverside Portland Cement Company. These insurance carriers each claim exemption from liability upon the ground that the partnership or corporation insured by them, respectively, was not the employer of the deceased at the time of his death. They also claim that the award was improper for the reason that the evidence was insufficient to establish the fact that the death of the decedent resulted from injuries arising out of or received in the course of his employment. The Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation also claims that the award against it is improper for the reason that both parties admitted that, by mutual mistake, the contract covered the accident in question, while the real contract was intended to cover work then being carried on at Hemet only, and that before the hearing the policy had been amended by mutual consent.

The Riverside Portland Cement Company, which will hereafter be referred to as the "Cement Company," was engaged in manufacturing cement. It became necessary to install new machinery and to rearrange the plant. The plans and specifications for such work were made by the engineers of the Cement Company. The Wellman-Lewis Company, hereafter called the "partnership," was engaged in the business of installing and handling large machinery, and had a number of employés experienced in that line of work. The Cement Company desired to secure the services of the partnership. An arrangement was made by which the partnership furnished to the Cement Company its employés, under a foreman also employed by the partnership. The commission, upon sufficient evidence, found the facts to be as follows:

"(7) That at the time of said injury the employé was performing service upon the premises of defendant Riverside Portland Cement Company and for its benefit; that prior to his employment an arrangement had been entered into between defendant Riverside Portland Cement Company and defendant Wellman-Lewis Company whereby the latter was to secure and furnish employés, including a foreman, to perform service on the premises of and for the benefit of the Riverside Portland Cement Company, for and in consideration of the payment to said Wellman-Lewis Company of 10 per cent. of the pay roll of the employés and foreman thus furnished; that the Riverside Portland Cement Company was to furnish all materials and was to, and did in fact, give and exercise direction and control over such employés, including said foreman; that no plans and specifications were entered into for doing such work, nor was the nature and extent of the work to be done closely defined to the said Wellman-Lewis Company nor any specific sum of money agreed upon other than as stated above; that account of the time of all such employés was kept by the Riverside Portland Cement Company, such men being required to use the time clock of the said company, and a check for the wages of such employés, plus 10 per cent., and less incidental deductions, was sent to Wellman-Lewis Company, who, in turn, paid such employés their wages; that no time was agreed upon for the completion of said work, and that the Riverside Portland Cement Company reserved the right to require the furnishing of such additional employés as it should deem necessary and to cause the discharge of any employés whom it might regard as undesirable; that said agreement between Wellman-Lewis Company and the Riverside Portland Cement Company was substantially an agreement to furnish labor, skilled and experienced only; that the deceased was engaged by the representatives of Wellman-Lewis Company specifically for the work in question, and had not been a regular employé of Wellman-Lewis Company prior to his being put to work at the plant of the Riverside Portland Cement Company; that the contract of hire by which the employé was engaged was entered into between himself and defendant Wellman-Lewis Company; that the employé looked to and received his pay from Wellman-Lewis Company; that Wellman-Lewis Company had the immediate power of hiring and discharging him, and that the employé was obliged to obey any instructions given him by the foreman furnished by Wellman-Lewis Company; that Wellman-Lewis Company was in fact participating in the performance of the labor upon which the employé was engaged and by virtue of the contract existing between it and defendant Riverside Portland Cement Company; that at the time of said injury the deceased employé was employed jointly by defendants Wellman-Lewis Company and Riverside Portland Cement Company, who were jointly associated in the carrying on of said work."

The rules of law by which it is determined whether the position of the partnership was that of an independent contractor, and, if not, whether the Cement Company was a special employer of the deceased, are well settled. In the analysis of the cases bearing upon this subject, and in the discussion of cases analogous in their facts, it should be borne in mind that the reviewing courts are, in most instances, bound by the decision of the triers of fact.

[1] If the partnership in the instant case was an independent contractor, the award against the Cement Company was void. If, however, the relation of the partnership to the deceased was that of general employer, and that of the Cement Company was that of special employer, the responsibility is more difficult to determine, for the reason that the rules of law concerning the general and the special employer, fixing the status of the special employer, are largely the product of the effort to fix the responsibility of such special employer to third persons, under the doctrine respondeat superior, and that under this doctrine the question of extent of the control exercised by the person sought to be held responsible is largely decisive of the question, as obviously it should be. But the question of liability of the employer to the employé under the Workmen's Compensation Law is quite a different matter. Under that law we are fixing a liability which it is the policy of the law to place upon the business, or industry, in which the employé is engaged, by placing the responsibility for indemnity upon the employer. Rheinwald v. Builders' Brick & Supply Co., 168 App. Div. 425, 153 N. Y. S. 598; Rongo v. Waddington, 87 N. J. Law, 395, 94 Atl. 408; Kirkpatrick v. Ind. Acc. Ins. Comm., 31 Cal. App. 668, 161 Pac. 274. In the instant case the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation claims "that the physical control and management of the employé is the determining factor as to who was the employer." The Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation contends that "the determining factor is, for whom were the individuals performing services, not what particular position they occupied." The Ætna Life Insurance Company claims that the Wellman-Lewis Company was an independent contractor, and therefore responsible for the death of the decedent, but also contends that, if the Cement Company be considered as an employer of the decedent, it was a special employer only, and that the decedent was in the general employment of the partnership, and that under the law of this state a special employer would not be liable for compensation. If the question were altogether new, it might be said that the person who enters into the contract of employment, express or implied with the employé, is at all times to be considered the employer, as it is contended the rule should be. Neither our own decisions, nor those of other states, have pursued this simple course.

[2, 3] The constitutional provisions authorizing the Workmen's Compensation Law of necessity uses the terms "employer" and "employé" (article 20, § 21), and it must follow that in defining the terms "employer" and "employé" in any statute passed in pursuance thereof no definition therein contained can enlarge the scope of the constitutional authority. So, in determining the question as to whether or not the relationship of employer and employé exists, we must look to the general law, as well as to the terms of the statute itself. See Carstens v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 573, 579, 158 Pac. 218; Sturdivant v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 581, 158 Pac. 222. This view is in accord with the statement to that effect in Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 813, 814, 159 Pac. 721, 724, where it is said:

"It is suggested that, inasmuch as the statute enjoins upon the court liberal construction, we should ignore common-law and other definitions, and should, in determining who are and who are not employés, regard only decisions under compensation acts. * * * This court has always endeavored to construe the Workmen's Compensation Act liberally and with a view to carrying out its benevolent purposes, but we cannot see why we should discard the wisdom and learning of the past in our efforts to decide what the Legislature intended by the language used."

As the law recognizes that an employé may at the same time be under a general and a special employer, it would seem to follow that the jurisdiction of the commission might well be predicated on either the general or special employment or both. The New York Court of Appeals took this view in deciding a recent case under the Workmen's Compensation Law of that state (Consol. Laws, c. 67). De Noyer v. Cavanaugh, 221 N. Y. 273, 116 N. E. 992. There De Noyer was employed as the driver of a truck by Cavanaugh, who was in the trucking business. The Crown Oil Company, who was engaged in the business of selling oil and gasoline, made an arrangement with Cavanaugh by which he was to furnish it a horse and driver to be used in connection with a tank wagon owned by the company for distributing oil and gasoline, and De Noyer was employed by Cavanaugh for this purpose. While he was engaged in delivering a can of gasoline from the truck of the Crown Oil Company, the gasoline exploded, causing his death. The award was made against the general employer, Cavanaugh. In reconciling that decision with Nolan v. Cranford Co., 219 N. Y. 581, 114 N. E. 1074, the court said:

"Even where no property of the general employer is intrusted to the employé to be used in the special employment, the general employer pays the compensation, may direct the employé when to go to work, and may discharge him for refusal to do the work of the special employer. The Industrial Commission, therefore, has full power to make an award against the general employer. It does not follow that by the application of this rule the special employer is not to be held in any case. The fact that a workman has a general and a special employer is not inconsistent with the relation of employer and employé between both of them and himself. If the men are under the exclusive control of the special employer in the performance of work which is a part of his business, they are, for the time being, his employés. Comerford's Case, 224 Mass. 571, 573 [113 N. E. 460]. Thus at one and the same time they are generally the employés of the general employer and specially the employés of the special employer. As they may under the common law of master and servant look to the former for their wages and to the latter for damages for negligent injuries, so under the Workmen's Compensation Law they may, so far as its provisions are applicable, look to the one or to the other, or to both, for compensation for injuries due to occupational hazards (Workmen's Compensation Law [Consol. Laws, c. 67] § 3, subds. 3, 4), and the Industrial [Accident] Commission may make such an award as the facts in the particular case may justify."

The above reference to the New York Workmen's Compensation Law (section 3, subds. 3, 4) is to the definition of "employer" and "employé" therein contained, which does not substantially differ from the definition given in our own Workmen's Compensation Law (Stats. 1913, c. 176, §§ 13 and 14), so far as concerns the matter under consideration here.

[4] The definitions of "employer" and "employé" in our Workmen's Compensation Law (sections 13, 14) are broad enough to include both the general and the special employer, and as such contracts of employment, express and implied, were recognized before the constitutional amendment, we do not see why either or both might not give jurisdiction to the Industrial Accident Commission. While we have heretofore held that an independent contractor is not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Law, we find nothing in our decisions which would prevent our following the rule announced by the Court of Appeals of New York in the case of De Noyer v. Cavanaugh, supra, and, recognizing the fact that in some cases where, at the time of the accident, both the general and special employer exerted some measure of control over the injured person through their respective foreman or employés, both should be held liable. Our attention has been called by the Ætna Life Insurance Company to a case (S. F. No. 8106, Ayer et al. v. Industrial Accident Commission [no opinion]) where it was held liable by the commission as the insurance carrier of the general employer in a case where the full control of the employé was at the time of the accident in the special employer, and where the petition of that company for a review by this court was denied. So far as this case can be regarded as a precedent, it establishes the responsibility of the general employer, even though there was full control by the special employer. Although the commission refused to hold the insurance carrier of the special employer, the refusal to issue a writ of review would not affirm such action. The refusal of this court to review the case tends to establish the point that, where there is a general employment, this court will not hold that the commission has exceeded its jurisdiction in giving judgment against such employer, even if there is a temporary and full control in a special employer. It is not, however, necessary for us to so hold in this case. The Supreme Court of Massachusetts, however, in a recent case, has reversed an award against the general employer. Scribner's Case, 231 Mass. 132, 120 N. E. 350 (May 28, 1918). In that case the plaintiff was in the general employment of an ice company, but was injured while handling coal for a coal company, both companies being insured. Compensation was awarded against the ice company. The court reversed the decree. The test is there stated as follows:

"'In determining whether, in a particular act, he is the servant of his original master or of the person to whom he has been furnished, the general test is whether the act is done in business of which the person is in control as a proprietor, so that he can at any time stop it or continue it, and determine the way in which it shall be done, not merely in reference to the result to be reached, but in reference to the method of reaching the result.' Shepard v. Jacobs, 204 Mass. 110, 112, 90 N. E. 392, 393 (26 L. R. A. [N. S.] 442, 134 Am. St. Rep. 648). 'The test is whether, in the particular service which he is engaged to perform, he continues liable to the direction and control of his master, or becomes subject to that of the party to whom he is lent or hired.' Coughlan v. Cambridge, 166 Mass. 268, 277, 44 N. E. 218, 219. Applying these tests, it is clear that Scribner at the time of the injury was an employé of the coal company; he was in that company's yard, engaged in its business, and doing its work; and he was under its direction and subject to its orders. Whatever may have been the relation of Scribner to the ice company in the care and management of the horses, at the time of his injury he was engaged in work over which that company had no control. [Italics ours.] The business was that of the coal company and under its direction. The transaction between the two companies amounted only to a loan of the ice company's servant to the coal company, the servant became the employé of the latter for the time being, and on the evidence he must be found to have assented to this, although remaining in the general employment of the ice company. Coughlan v. Cambridge, supra; Hasty v. Sears, 157 Mass. 123, 31 N. E. 759, 34 Am. St. Rep. 267; Samuelian v. American Tool & Machine Co., 168 Mass. 12, 46 N. E. 98, and cases cited.

"Pigeon's Case, 216 Mass. 51, 102 N. E. 932, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 737, relied on by the employé, is distinguishable. In that case the driver was on his way to water the horse which was owned by Shaw, the general employer, who retained the general direction of the employé except so far as his control was surrendered to the city of Springfield. This relation of control included the care of the horses to the extent, at least, of seeing that they were watered. When injured, the employé was under the control of the original master and occupied in his work, and not engaged in the business of the city of Springfield nor under its direction. * * * This well-established principle of the common law which holds that an employé who is lent to a special employer as distinguished from his general employer, and who assents to the change of employment, becomes the servant of the employer to whom he is lent, applies as well to cases arising under the Workmen's Compensation Act as to those at common law."

This decision is based in part upon a consideration of the provisions of the Massachusetts Workmen's Compensation Law, differing from our own statute, as therein stated. If we follow our own action in Ayer v. Industrial Accident Comm., supra, and the decision of the District Court of Appeal, Second District, in Kirkpatrick v. Industrial Accident Comm., 31 Cal. App. 668, 161 Pac. 274, holding the general employer liable, and the Massachusetts court in the Scribner Case, holding the special employer, we reach the same conclusion as the New York court did in De Noyer v. Cavanaugh, supra, holding both or either liable.

[5] In the instant case, however, we are not required to go so far. The decision of the commission was based upon the joint control by the partnership and the cement company, and upon their finding as to such joint control their award should be affirmed. There is nothing in the decision in Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 807, 159 Pac 721, cited by petitioners, inconsistent with this view. There the claimant, who had been given an award by the accident commission, was held to be an independent contractor, furnishing his own teams and drivers other than himself. This conclusion was reached by an application of well-established principles of law to the facts therein stated.

With reference to the claim of the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation that its policy included the accident in question by reason of mutual mistake, the commission found the facts as follows:

"That said Wellman-Lewis Company was at the time of said injury insured against liability in the Employers' Liability Insurance Company, and that at that time was also insured against liability in the defendant Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, and that the policy issued by said insurance carrier was unlimited and covered said employer's liability to all of its employés within the state of California; that the oral intention and understanding between defendants Wellman-Lewis Company and the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation at the time the policy of the latter insurance carrier was issued was that said policy should cover only employés employed at a magnesite mine at Hemet, Cal., but that said policy was in fact limited to correspond with said oral intentions after the sustaining of this injury by J. H. Coulter, and that none of the other parties to this proceeding was a party to said understanding prior to said injury, and the said employé, the applicant, and defendant Riverside Portland Cement Company, and Ætna Life Insurance Company, have at no time been parties to such agreement."

The facts found by the commission indicate mutual mistake; it being the intention of the Wellman-Lewis Company that the work at the cement company's plant should be covered by the insurance policy issued by the Employers' Liability Insurance Company, and that the work at Hemet should be covered by the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation. After the happening of the accident, to wit, on January 5, 1918, a rider was attached to the policy of the latter company containing the following provision:

"It is understood and agreed that the operations covered * * * are hereby limited to cover at Hemet, Riverside county, state of California, only, and statement (4) of said policy is hereby amended to read as follows: 'Hemet, Riverside county, state of California.'"

[6] It is true that the parties to this contract of insurance could not amend the policy, after an accident, to defeat rights of compensation that had accrued before the amendment, and if the addition to the contract was in fact an amendment of the policy of insurance by mutual consent, the rights of Mrs. Coulter could not be affected thereby. If, however, the policy issued differed from that actually contracted for, and by mutual mistake of the parties expressed an agreement not intended by them, there is no reason why they could not correct the provisions of the policy to state their actual intent, unless for some reason they would be estopped from doing so. There is no showing here that any of the parties whose rights are involved ever knew of the existence of this policy previous to the accident, or acted upon it in any way. There is no evidence that deceased had any knowledge of the policy in question. His rights as an employé resulted from his status as such employé (North Alaska Salmon Co. v. Pillsbury, 174 Cal. 1, 162 Pac. 93, L. R. A. 1917E, 642), and not because of any interest he had in the policy or knowledge of its existence. We are not called upon to pass upon the question as to whether or not the Industrial Accident Commission could permit the reformation of a policy of insurance where the question of the mistake was disputed. Here the parties actually consented to the amendment of the contract to conform to their intentions, and it was so amended.

[7] The point is made that there is no sufficient evidence to justify the finding that the death of the decedent arose out of his employment, for the reason that such evidence consisted in part of his hearsay declarations. The amendment to the law passed in 1915 (section, 77a, Stats. 1915, pp. 1079, 1102) expressly permits such testimony, and the evidence, therefore, is sufficient. Western Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 174 Cal. 315, 163 Pac. 60.

The awards against the Ætna Life Insurance Company and the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation, Limited, of London, England, are affirmed, and the award against the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation is annulled.

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⊂=10 — RIGHT OF PARENT.

Where affection of friends or kinsfolk opposes the natural rights of a parent, the paramount right of the parent under Code Civ. Proc. § 1751, will be regarded, unless it has been forfeited.

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⊂=13(4) — PETITION FOR GUARDIANSHIP — ABANDONMENT OF MINOR—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to sustain finding that mother petitioning for letters of guardianship of her son's person and estate had abandoned him.

3. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⊂=13(4)—COMPETENCY OF GUARDIAN—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held not to show that mother petitioning for guardianship of her son was incompetent to discharge duties of guardianship.

4. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⟸10 — RIGHT OF PARENT.

That child was in suitable home and that his inheritance would be managed by trustee would not authorize court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1747, to deny mother's petition for guardianship, in view of her paramount right under section 1751.

5. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⟸10—RIGHTS OF PARENT.

The court may not, by merely refusing letters of guardianship to any one, deprive the mother of a right to the society of her child and the direction of his life during his minority.

6. GUARDIAN AND WARD ⟸13(4)—GUARDIANSHIP—NECESSITY—EVIDENCE.

Under facts proven, held, that minor needed a guardian, and that his mother was entitled to appointment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Benjamin K. Knight, Judge.

In the matter of the guardianship of the person and estate of Kenneth Dare Wise, a minor. The petitions of Winifred C. Wise, the minor's mother, and of Pearl Makinney, his grandaunt, were denied, and the former appeals. Order refusing letters of guardianship to mother reversed.

J. Samuels and Oscar Samuels, both of San Francisco, and W. P. Netherton, of Santa Cruz, for appellant.

William T. Jeter and Charles B. Younger, both of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

MELVIN, J. This is an appeal by the mother of Kenneth Dare Wise from so much of an order of the superior court of Santa Cruz county as denies her petition for guardianship of the person and estate of said minor.

On September 27, 1916, Pearl Makinney, a grandaunt of the said minor, petitioned for letters of guardianship of his person and estate. In said petition it was alleged that the boy, then about nine years of age, had been left by his grandfather, Dr. Kenneth Dare Wise, a legacy of the value of about $10,000, in trust, the income of which, and the principal if necessary, should be used for the child's educational and other requirements. On the 16th of November, 1916, the mother of the minor filed her petition asking for letters of guardianship. Both petitions were heard together, and the court denied both on the ground that there was no necessity for the appointment of a guardian, and ordered that the boy remain with his great-grandmother. An additional ground for the denial of the mother's petition, as found by the court, was that by abandoning the infant she had forfeited her right to the custody and control of her child and his fortune.

Appellant contends that she is a competent person, entitled by absolute right to appointment as the child's guardian, and that the evidence does not support the finding that she had abandoned her boy.

The child had been in the custody and care of his great-grandmother and his grandaunt, in their home in Santa Cruz, ever since he was a baby about one year old. For the first three years of the period during which he lived there, the father and mother had resided most of the time in San Francisco. The habits and condition of health of the father (who was suffering from tuberculosis) were such that the home of the boy's parents was not so suitable for him as that of Mrs. Makinney, his great-grandmother. The father and mother were divorced after three years of separation from their child, and afterwards the mother worked for a living in San Francisco. She was on friendly terms with the relatives in Santa Cruz and visited her child as often as twice a year and corresponded with Mrs. Makinney from time to time regarding him. It appears that the child was intrusted by Mrs. Wise to Mrs. Makinney at the latter's suggestion and because both wished to avoid the danger of infection from tuberculosis. There was no understanding regarding the length of time the boy was to remain in the Makinney household, and no promise by the mother to surrender her rights. During the exposition of 1915, the lad went to San Francisco and remained with his mother for a week or ten days. There had been other visits also. It was shown that there was no understanding that the mother was to contribute regularly to the support of her son. At one time, upon request, she paid $30 of a doctor's bill of $50, and $7.50 for his care in a hospital. There was other testimony which need not be reviewed in detail regarding the mother's contribution to the child's welfare. Such, for example, was the statement of Mrs. Makinney that the mother had sent the lad certain suits of clothing. A study of the record convinces us that the great-grandmother expected and demanded very little from the child's mother. As she said, the keeping of the boy at her home was a matter of affection and love on her part, rather than any other cause.

[1] This is one of those cases which we are sometimes called upon to decide, in which the affection of cherishing friends or kinsfolk is at war with the natural right of a parent. In such cases, we are impelled by the force of our statutes as interpreted by the decisions of this court to regard the paramount right of the parent, unless such right has been forfeited by abandonment of the minor or by other conduct making the parent unfit to discharge the duties of guardianship. As our present chief justice (then an associate justice) said, in Re Mathews' Estate, 169 Cal. 26, 27, 145 Pac. 503:

"It is well settled that, under the provisions of section 1751 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the father or mother of a minor child under the age of 14 years, if found by the court competent to discharge the duties of guardianship, is entitled to be appointed guardian in preference to any other person, and that the court must appoint a parent seeking to be appointed, unless it finds such parent incompetent, notwithstanding the judge is of the opinion that the child's health and welfare may be promoted by giving it to another. In re Forrester, 162 Cal. 493 [123 Pac. 283]; In re Salter, 142 Cal. 412. 415 [76 Pac. 51]."

[2, 3] We are of the opinion that the evidence in this case utterly fails to sustain the court's finding of abandonment, and that it does not prove appellant to be incompetent to discharge the duties of guardianship. In many respects this case resembles the Mathews matter. Upon the second appeal in that proceeding, Mr. Justice Henshaw, delivering the opinion of department 2, and discussing the emphatic terms of section 1751, Code of Civil Procedure, and their dominance over those of section 246, subd. 1, of the Civil Code, used the following language, which in its essentials is most pertinent to the solution of the problem now before us:

"It is argued with great force that the trend of modern decisions is to regard as of primary importance the welfare of the minor himself. This is most true. The decisions to this effect are made either under the permission of the law, which contains no such restriction as that found in our section 1751, or else are given under the command of the law which, in effect, declares that over and above all else the controlling consideration shall be the welfare of the child. If we were thus at liberty to act, it might well be that the custody of this child, under the findings of the court, would be given to the Rouses. This is the injunction declared in our own law by subdivision 1 of section 246 of the Civil Code. But, as we have pointed out, unless the parent has for some reason (and no such reason is here found) forfeited his preferential right to the guardianship of his offspring, all considerations of the welfare of the child must, under our law, be regarded as subordinate to that right." In re Mathews' Estate, 174 Cal. 679, 683, 164 Pac. 8, 9.

[4] We must next consider the finding of the superior court that there was no necessity for the appointment of a guardian for the person or the estate of the minor. This finding was made under the supposed sanction of section 1747 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and was based upon the two circumstances that the child was in a suitable and comfortable home, and that, under the terms of the will of Dr. Wise, the minor's inheritance would be managed, not by a guardian, but by a trustee acting under authority of the probate court of Los Angeles county, wherein the will had been admitted to probate. The section in question is, so far as pertinent to this proceeding as follows:

"The superior court of each county, when it appears necessary or convenient, may appoint guardians for the persons and estates, or either of them, of minors who have no guardian legally appointed by will or deed, and who are inhabitants or residents of the county, or who reside without the state and have estate within the county."

It is argued with much force, in opposition to appellant's claim of right to letters of guardianship, that this section vests in the court a wide discretion in determining what may be necessary or convenient for the child and its interests. This may be freely conceded, but that concession does not free us from the force of section 1751, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that—

"The father or the mother of a minor child under the age of fourteen years, if found by the court competent to discharge the duties of guardianship, is entitled to be appointed a guardian of such minor child, in preference to any other person."

[5, 6] That the minor child, who was the object of the affection of the hostile petitioners herein, needs the care and guidance of some adult person, may not be denied. The court, by refusing to appoint either petitioner, virtually bestowed the infant upon the great-grandmother, who was not asking for letters, thus depriving the mother of a preferential right secured to her by statute. This may not be done under such circumstances as are revealed by the record before us. To allow such an order to stand would be to substitute the discretion of the court for the compulsion of the statute which gives preference to a qualified parent. It may be, and doubtless is true, that the fund left by Dr. Wise for the care and education of the child may be administered by the trustee without the aid of a guardian. And there can be no doubt that in the home of the great-grandmother the boy would be surrounded in the future, as he has been in the past, by refining influence and by all things which would contribute to his moral and physical welfare. But the court may not, by merely refusing letters to any one, deprive the mother of a right to the society of her child and the direction of his life during his minority, which is recognized as a natural privilege and is secured to her by solemn enactment. Upon the facts proved, the child needed a guardian, and the mother was entitled to the appointment. It is suggested by counsel opposed to appellant that such an interpretation of section 1751 as this court has given would have the effect virtually to eliminate the words "necessary or convenient" from section 1747. If that were its effect, there would be nothing novel in the dominance of section 1751, for we have seen that it was held in the second of the appeals in Re Mathews' Estate that the preferential parental right bestowed and declared by section 1751, unless forfeited by abandonment or some other disqualification, overcomes and controls the discretion which the court might otherwise enjoy under the terms of section 246 of the Civil Code, But we do not agree with counsel in their opinion that the quoted words in section 1747, Code of Civil Procedure, are eliminated by our interpretation of the later section of the same Code. It is to be remembered that applicants for guardianship of minors are not always parents or persons related to such children, and numerous illustrations will suggest themselves, without our aid, in which, under reasonably supposable facts, the terms of the earlier section would apply with all force, and those of the later would have no relevancy whatever. But in the present proceeding we are bound to give the effect to section 1751 sanctioned by the authorities above cited, and others to which reference might be made, and we are compelled to hold that the finding of lack of necessity for the appointment of a guardian is not supported and justified by the evidence.

The action of the learned judge of the superior court, as shown by his very able written opinion, was based largely upon the authority of In re Gates, 95 Cal. 461, 30 Pac. 596, in which Chief Justice Beatty refused to make an order in a proceeding on habeas corpus, enforcing the mere legal right of a mother who had years before surrendered the exclusive control of her child to a relative who had obtained letters of guardianship which, however, were void for want of jurisdiction in the court awarding them. But that opinion, as all similar ones must do of necessity, left open to the petitioner the right to apply for letters and to test in the proper forum her fitness for the care and control of her minor child. In commenting upon the Gates proceeding and the matter of the Application of Bell, 28 Cal. App. 547, 153 Pac. 240, we said, in the opinion in Ex parte Britt, 167 Pac. 863, 865:

"These cases are to be carefully distinguished from those in which, after hearings held for the very purpose of determining the fitness or unfitness of a parent, courts have awarded the custody of a child."

In the later proceeding, Ex parte Mathews, 167 Pac. 873, it was held that a mother to whom letters of guardianship had been issued was entitled to recover the physical custody of her ward by habeas corpus. In commenting upon the opinions in the Gates and Bell proceedings, Mr. Justice Sloss, in the opinion in the Mathews matter, used the following language:

"If it be sound doctrine that a court or judge may, on habeas corpus, disregard an established legal right which would control the judgment in any other form of proceeding, we are nevertheless satisfied that the rule can have no just application here."

It will thus be seen that there is no just analogy between the matter at bar and the cited proceeding In re Gates.

The order refusing letters of guardianship to Winifred Wise, mother of Kenneth Dare Wise, is reversed.

JAQUES et al. v. TOMB. (Sac. 2720.)

1. COVENANTS ⇐96(6)—COVENANTS AGAINST "INCUMBRANCE"—ASSESSMENTS.

An assessment which did not exist when land was conveyed was not an "incumbrance" within a covenant against incumbrances.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Incumbrance.]

2. COVENANTS ⇐96(1)—COVENANT AGAINST "INCUMBRANCE."

A covenant against "incumbrances" meant those incumbrances defined by Civ. Code, § 1114, and could not have had reference to an existing and obvious levee constructed across the land and owned by a levee district.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by E. E. Jaques and another against Jane Tomb. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. W. Eastin, of San Francisco, for appellants.

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for respondent.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment in favor of defendant, entered upon plaintiffs declining to amend their complaint after the sustaining of a general demurrer to each of the four purported causes of action set forth therein.

[1] It appears from the first cause of action that defendant was the owner of a farm situated in reclamation district No. 784, which, on October 28, 1911, she by grant deed containing a covenant of seizin and against incumbrances, conveyed to plaintiff D. E. Jaques, who, on April 28, 1912, conveyed a three-fourths interest therein to E. E. Jaques, who, also, at a date not stated, acquired the remaining one-fourth interest in said property; that, subsequent to her acquisition thereof, the district levied an assessment upon the property, which assessment, it is alleged, constituted a breach of the covenant against incumbrances. Since the assessment did not exist at the time when defendant conveyed the land to D. E. Jaques, but was levied subsequent to said date, and, indeed, after he had conveyed the property to his grantee, we are unable to perceive how a cause of action could be founded thereon, any more than would a subsequent annual assessment, upon which to base a levy for fiscal taxes, give rise to a cause of action. Neither he nor his grantee, as such, could maintain an action to recover for this alleged breach; hence the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

By the third cause of action it is made to appear that, at the time when the assessment was made by the reclamation district, there existed a mortgage upon the property, and that, in order to protect her security, the mortgagee was compelled to, and did, pay the assessment so levied thereon by the district, which, together with interest and penalties, amounted to approximately the sum of $3,200, by reason of which fact it is alleged that plaintiffs are damaged in the sum of $3,200 required to redeem said land from the lien thereof under the terms of said mortgage. The reasons stated as justifying the action of the court in sustaining the demurrer to the first cause of action are equally applicable to the ruling of the court in sustaining defendant's demurrer to the third cause of action, viz., that at the time of executing the deed there was no assessment in existence against the property.

[2] In the second cause of action it is alleged that, at the time defendant executed said deed of conveyance to D. E. Jaques, there had been constructed by said reclamation district a large levee, then owned by and in possession of the district, and which occupied eight acres of the land so conveyed by defendant, of the value of more than $1,600, and the levee thereon was of the value of $10,000, which fact, it is alleged, constituted a breach of the covenants in said deed to D. E. Jaques, to the damage of plaintiffs in the sum of $11,600.

The fourth cause of action, in which plaintiffs allege they have sustained damages in the sum of $5,000, is based upon the fact that said levee referred to in the second count of the complaint consists of a high embankment dividing the farm into two tracts inaccessible from each other except by a circuitous route across the land of other parties, thus rendering the farming operation of the land more expensive than it would be otherwise, and greatly depreciating the market value of the farm.

The demurrer to each of these counts was properly sustained, for the reason that upon the facts alleged both defendant's grantor and his grantee must be deemed to have understood and intended that the covenant against incumbrances meant those defined by section 1114 of the Civil Code. It could not have been considered as having reference to this existing and obvious levee, alleged to have constituted an insurmountable barrier across the farm. In the case of Ferguson v. Edgar, 171 Pac. 1061, the court had under consideration the question as to whether a public highway, and a district canal used to convey water for irrigating the farm, in common with other lands in the district, constituted a burden thereon within the meaning of a covenant against incumbrances. Referring to such covenant, the court said:

"It was not considered as having reference to obvious and physical burdens, permanent in character, such as a state highway (or irrigating canal), the use of which was open and notorious. As to such obvious burden the party proposing to buy, having full knowledge of the servitude and the necessity therefor as a means of egress and ingress to the premises, contracts subject to the physical and visible burden imposed upon the land."

In Brewster on Conveyancing, § 203, it is said:

"In cases where there is a physical burden of this sort, which is visible, there is a fair and reasonable presumption, in the absence of an express agreement, that both parties act with reference to this plain, existing burden, and that the vendor on the one hand demands, and the vendee on the other pays, only the fair value of the land as visibly incumbered."

Hence such burdens are not really incumbrances within the meaning of section 1114, Civil Code, in view of which the parties are deemed to have made and acted upon the covenant.

Since, for the reasons given, no cause of action is shown to have ever existed in favor of D. E. Jaques, there was nothing which could be made the subject of the transfer, alleged to have been made to E. E. Jaques, by the purported assignment of his claims for damages growing out of the facts stated.

The judgment is affirmed.

HINTON v. WELCH. (Sac. 2718.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1)—QUESTIONS OF FACT—REVIEW.

Where there was a substantial conflict in the evidence, a finding of the trial court thereon will not be disturbed upon appeal.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸155(8)—LETTERS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, where plaintiff on cross-examination volunteered to state in part the subject-matter of a correspondence between her and deceased, defendant executor was entitled to present in evidence the whole correspondence to which the testimony thus volunteered related, even though it embraced the decedent's self-serving declarations.

3. EVIDENCE ⟸271(19) — LETTERS — SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

In an action against estate of an alleged partner, where the executor set up repudiation of partnership, laches, and limitations, he was properly permitted to introduce in evidence a letter written by decedent to show that there was a repudiation and that plaintiff was guilty of laches and that limitations had run.

4. EVIDENCE ⟸357—LETTERS.

In an action against estate of an alleged partner, defendant could introduce letters written to deceased by plaintiff to show that plaintiff had not asserted or insisted upon the existence of such partnership and was guilty of laches.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Emma D. Hinton, formerly Emma D. Welch, against Blanche E. Welch, as executrix of the last will and testament of Charles Jay Welch, deceased. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a motion for new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Muhleman & Crump, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Haven & Athearn, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal prosecuted by the plaintiff from a judgment in the defendant's favor. The action was one instituted by the plaintiff against the estate of her deceased brother, Charles J. Welch, to have it decreed that the former was entitled to one-half of the property of said estate as the surviving partner of said deceased. Upon the trial of the cause the court made its findings to the effect that no agreement of partnership was ever entered into between the plaintiff and the deceased; that no such partnership ever existed; that no partnership business was ever conducted by them; that the property described in the complaint was never the property of any such partnership; and that plaintiff had no interest therein. The court further found that, if any such partnership had ever existed, a full settlement thereof had been had in April, 1910. It further found that the deceased had repudiated any such alleged partnership relation in May, 1910, and that the plaintiff then had notice of such repudiation and, based upon this finding, the court further found that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in the prosecution of her said claim and of the present action, and that her alleged cause of action was barred by the provisions of section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Judgment accordingly went for the defendant, from which judgment, after a motion for a new trial had been denied, this appeal was taken.

[1] The appellant's first and main contention is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding of the court to the effect that a partnership had never existed between the appellant and Charles J. Welch, her deceased brother. The evidence in the case is quite voluminous, covering a period of about 30 years, during the latter half of which the partnership, according to the plaintiff's contention, was in existence. No useful purpose would be subserved by a review in detail of this evidence; but this court, after a careful examination of the record embracing the same, is satisfied that a substantial conflict is presented as to whether or not such partnership was formed or existed at any time during said period or at all. The trial court resolved this conflict in favor of the defendant's contention that no such partnership had ever existed, and its finding in that regard will not therefore be disturbed upon appeal.

[2, 3] The further finding of the court to the effect that such partnership, if it ever existed, was repudiated by Charles J. Welch in the month of May, 1910, would be immaterial, in view of its first above finding that such partnership did never in fact exist except as the same may have a bearing upon certain errors of law which the appellant insists were committed by the court during the trial of the cause and which have relation to the court's conclusion that the plaintiff was guilty of laches in the presentation of her said claim and in her prosecution of this action, and that said action is barred by the statute of limitations. These errors of law were alleged to have been committed in the admission in evidence of certain letters of the deceased to the plaintiff and also in the admission of certain letters of the plaintiff herself. As to the first of these, the record discloses the following to be the facts: The plaintiff, while upon the witness stand in her own behalf, but while undergoing cross-examination, was asked this question, "You received, did you not, Mrs. Hinton, all of the money which you were entitled to from the estate of your father?" The plaintiff answered this question at some length, in the course of which she volunteered the statement that she had written a letter to her brother requesting a statement as to her half interest in the ranch, to which she had received a reply. The defendant produced her said letter and offered it in evidence, and thereupon offered in evidence the decedent's letter in reply. To the admission of this latter letter the plaintiff objected upon the ground that it was inadmissible as a self-serving declaration. We are inclined to the opinion that this objection was not well taken, for while we think it is true that a party may not, under the provisions of section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure, offer a letter of an opposing party for the mere purpose of laying the foundation for the admission of an answer to it containing self-serving declarations on the part of the writer of such reply, yet when, as in this case, the plaintiff has volunteered to state in part the subject-matter of a correspondence between the parties, the other party is entitled to have and to present in evidence the whole correspondence to which her testimony thus volunteered relates, upon the same principle, also covered by section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that when part of a conversation is given in evidence by one party the whole conversation may be given by the other party, even though it may embrace the latter's self-serving declarations. There is, however, another and a conclusive reason why the letter of the plaintiff's deceased brother, to which objection was made, was properly admitted in evidence. Among the issues joined in the case were those as to whether the said decedent had ever repudiated the partnership in question, and whether, if he had so done, the plaintiff was guilty of laches in not prosecuting her claims as to the existence of such partnership within a reasonable time after such repudiation. The letter of the plaintiff's deceased brother, to the admission of which objection was made, was the letter which, the defendant asserted, contained his repudiation of the partnership and his denial that such partnership had ever existed; it was therefore admissible in evidence of those facts for the purpose of setting in motion the time within which the plaintiff, with knowledge of such repudiation and denial, would be bound to take action for the assertion and establishment of her claims or be guilty of laches and liable to the bar of the statute of limitations for failing so to do. This letter, having been thus properly admitted, formed a sufficient basis, taken in connection with the other facts of the case, to justify the court's findings in the defendant's favor upon the subject of laches and of the bar of the statute of limitations.

[4] The other alleged error of law committed by the trial court was that of admitting in evidence a large number of letters of the plaintiff to her deceased brother, written after the date of his alleged repudiation of the partnership for the purpose of showing that the plaintiff had not, during such period and until after her brother's death, asserted or insisted upon the existence of such partnership. We think these letters were properly admissible for this purpose and as having some weight in determining the issue of the plaintiff's laches in not insisting upon her alleged rights as a partner until after the decease of her brother.

There are no other points in the case requiring consideration.

Judgment and order affirmed.

In re SHARON'S ESTATE. (S. F. 8676.)

(Supreme Court of California. Dec. 26, 1918.)

1. ADOPTION ⟸3—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The right to adopt a child and the right of a person to be adopted as the child of another are wholly statutory, and one claiming that an act of adoption has been accomplished must show that every essential requirement of the statute has been strictly complied with.

2. ADOPTION ⟸4, 7—JURISDICTIONAL FACTS.

It is jurisdictional that a person adopting a child must be ten years older than the child, that all the parties whose consent is required do consent fully and freely, and that the adoption contemplated will be for the best interest of the child.

3. ADOPTION ⟸7, 13, 14—CONSENT, EXAMINATION, AND ORDER.

In 1892, to validate adoption, the following things were necessary: Consent of wife of an adopting husband, signed in presence of judge (Civ. Code, § 223, and section 226, as amended by St. 1880, p. 4); consent, duly acknowledged, of mother, or due proof of abandonment (section 224, as amended by St. 1891, p. 24): agreement of person adopting, signed in presence of judge of county in which he then resided (section 226, as amended by St. 1880, p. 4); consent of child, signed before the judge (sections 225, 226); examination of persons; a decision that interests of child would be promoted; and an order of the judge (section 227).

4. ADOPTION ⟸17 — EVIDENCE ⟸83(1) — PROOF—PRESUMPTIONS.

An adoption was not proved, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 15, 16, providing that it is presumed that official duty had been regularly performed, and that a judge was acting in the lawful exercise of his jurisdiction, where the papers in the case were destroyed, and all that witnesses could testify was that from looking over indorsements on the papers they could see that there was a petition, a consent, an agreement, and an order.

5. ADOPTION ⊂=10—WHO MAY ADOPT—JURISDICTION.

No judge of the superior court of any county of California could have jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an adoption by a resident of New York.

6. EVIDENCE ⊂=386(4)—ADOPTION—EXTRINSIC PROOF.

As the only writings necessary to an adoption are the consent of the parties, the agreement of the adopting parent, and the order of the judge, the fact that the adopting parent was not a resident of California and was not ten years older than the child can be shown by extrinsic evidence to invalidate the order.

7. TRIAL ⊂=143 — DIRECTION OF VERDICT — EVIDENCE.

It is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence to warrant the court to direct a verdict, the court being deprived of such right only where there is a substantial conflict.

8. TRIAL ⊂=179—DIRECTED VERDICT—REFUSAL OF JURY TO DIRECT.

Where a part of the jury refused to obey an order to direct a verdict, the court had authority to appoint a juror as foreman and have him sign a verdict; contempt proceedings being unnecessary.

9. TRIAL ⊂=325(1) — DIRECTED VERDICT — POLLING OF JURY.

Where a verdict is directed, the polling of a jury is a mere useless ceremony, and the law does not require it.

10. JUDGMENT ⊂=573—DIRECTING VERDICT—CONCLUSIVENESS.

A verdict directed by the court is a decision upon the merits and is a bar to another action for the same cause.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1170(1) — HARMLESS ERROR — ERRORS NOT AFFECTING RESULT.

On appeal from a decree of distribution by one claiming to have been adopted by decedent, evidence held to satisfy the Supreme Court that there was no legal adoption and that there should be no reversal, even if errors were committed under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Garret W. McEnerney and William F. Herrin, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. In a proceeding in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco for the final distribution of the estate of Frederick William Sharon, deceased, the appellant, Frederick Wallace Sharon, appeared and filed an answer to the petition for distribution, alleging that he was an adopted son, and the only child, of said decedent; that he was not mentioned in the will of said decedent; and that by virtue of his relation as adopted son he was entitled to one-half of the estate and asking that the same be distributed to him. The widow, Louise Tevis Sharon, and the beneficiaries under the will of decedent, took issue upon the allegations of this answer. A jury was demanded by the appellant, and the case proceeded to trial. At the close of the evidence, the respondents moved the court to direct the jury to render a verdict in favor of the respondents, and against the appellant, on the issues raised by his answer. The court sustained this motion and directed the jury to return a verdict accordingly. Thereupon, nine of the jurors refused to agree to such verdict. The court then designated one of the remaining three jurors to act as foreman, and under the directions of the court he signed a verdict in accordance with the order. This verdict was then filed. The appellant's counsel then asked that the jury be polled. This demand was refused by the court. A decree of distribution was thereupon entered, refusing any share of the estate to the appellant and distributing it all in accordance with the provisions of the will of decedent. The appeal is from this decree.

The answer of the appellant alleged that in July, 1892, he was under 12 years of age, that the decedent was then 33 years of age, and was then residing in the city and county of San Francisco, and that said decedent then adopted the appellant as his son by proceedings legally had before Hon. Walter H. Levy, then one of the judges of said superior court; that at said time said decedent was the husband of Louise Tevis Sharon; that the mother of the appellant had abandoned him and was in the Republic of Mexico; that the father of the appellant was dead; that the said decedent appeared before said judge and executed an agreement to the effect that the appellant should be adopted and treated by him in all respects as his own lawful child should be treated; that Louise Tevis Sharon, the wife of said decedent, was at that time absent from the state of California; that her consent, in writing, duly acknowledged, was produced and filed by said decedent; that the said judge then separately examined said decedent and the appellant, and after such examination made an order wherein he found that the interests of the appellant would be promoted by his adoption by said decedent, and declared that the appellant should thenceforth be regarded and treated in all respects as the child of said decedent.

The appellant was a son of John W. Sharon, who was a cousin of Senator William Sharon, the father of decedent. At the time of the alleged adoption, the decedent, Frederick William Sharon, had one child, a son about seven years of age, and was a resident of the city of New York; but he and his wife were then visiting in California. From June 27, 1892, until August 30, 1892, his wife, his child, with a governess and maid, were living in rooms at the Del Monte Hotel in Monterey county, Cal. The decedent was at the hotel at intervals during that time and at other times was in San Francisco at the Palace Hotel. Senator William Sharon, shortly before his death, which occurred in 1885, conveyed all his estate to trustees, in trust for the period of ten years following his death, one-third for said decedent, who was his son, one-third for his daughter Florence, Lady Hesketh, and one-third to the children of his deceased daughter, Mrs. Newlands. This estate was very large, amounting to several millions of dollars, and during the year 1892 it was managed by Mr. Newlands, then the sole trustee.

In support of the above allegations as to the adoption papers and proceedings, testimony was given by the appellant and two other witnesses, namely, George S. McComb and William J. Heney. McComb testified that he was a deputy clerk of said superior court during the years 1891 and 1892, that he was acting as courtroom clerk for Judge Troutt at that time; that in 1892, while passing along the corridor of the city hall, he was called into the department presided over by Judge Levy, to act as clerk upon an ex parte motion, the regular courtroom clerk of said court not being then present; that he went into the courtroom and sat down; that Judge Levy came out of his chambers with three or four other people, among them a boy 10 or 12 years of age; that an attorney handed to the judge a petition for adoption; that one of the persons was then sworn, gave his name as F. W. Sharon, his testimony was taken, and the judge interrogated the boy; that the judge then said, "Take your order," or, "The petition is granted," or some similar words, directed the witness to make a minute entry of the matter, and then signed an order granting the petition; that the witness then took the papers, made an entry of the proceedings in a book called the "rough minutes," gave the papers to the judge, and saw them no more; and that some one of them requested that the matter be kept from the public. On cross-examination he corrected his testimony as to the judge having signed any order, saying that he did not recollect that occurrence, that he did not see any written order, nor any other paper except the petition for adoption, but that he did not read the petition and knew nothing of its contents, nor who signed it. He also retracted the statement that he made his entry on the rough minutes, saying that his impression was that he had made the entry on a loose sheet of paper and that he had placed the paper in the book of rough minutes, leaving it there for the regular clerk of the department when he should come in. This correction was made after he had been reminded that an entry in the book would have made the matter public. He did not explain how he came to know that the paper handed to the judge by the attorney was a petition for adoption. He did not testify that any one called it by such name, or said that it was a petition for adoption. The witness Heney testified that in the year 1892 he was a deputy county clerk and occupied the position of filing clerk; that he remembered the proceedings in adoption mentioned by McComb; that the papers were presented to him to be filed; that, "as the usual custom was," he looked them over; that there was a petition, a consent, an agreement, and an order of adoption; that as deputy clerk he indorsed each one of these papers as filed and indexed the matter in the general index of civil actions under the name, F. W. Sharon, or Frederick W. Sharon, on each side, as the respective parties. On cross-examination he said that he did not remember what judge signed the order, nor whether it was signed by more persons than one; that he could not describe the document which he said was a consent, nor say whether it was acknowledged or not; that he had no recollection of the contents of the agreement, nor by whom it was signed, nor of anything that was in it; that he did not read it at all; that he did not read the petition, nor know anything of its contents, nor who signed it; and that he did not read the order and knew nothing of its contents. He admitted that his designation of the papers by the names above given was made either from the indorsements thereon or from his knowledge that such papers were necessary to an adoption proceeding, and not from any knowledge or recollection of their contents. The appellant testified that he was born on July 10, 1879; that a few days before the alleged adoption proceedings, while he was living in San Francisco, he was taken from his place of abode by Alexander D. Sharon, a cousin of the decedent, to the Palace Hotel, and to a room occupied by the decedent; that the decedent there asked him if he wanted to be his (the decedent's) boy, and told him that he would see that the appellant was well taken care of; that he was then kept at the Palace Hotel for something over two weeks, including the time of the alleged adoption; that during that period he was provided with several suits of new clothes and was taken to a dentist and to a nose specialist for medical treatment; that on a certain day, which it is claimed was July 23, 1892, the decedent asked him if he would like to be his boy, and thereupon he, with the decedent and said Alex. D. Sharon, went to a place which he believed to be the city hall in San Francisco; that there they saw a gentleman who he believed was a judge; that the judge asked him if he wanted to be the decedent's boy, to which he answered, "yes"; that some papers were then produced; that the papers were signed before the judge and were left there; and that they then, in connection with those papers, went to another room in the building.

This was all the evidence in proof of the papers and proceedings for the alleged adoption. There was no evidence that Louise Tevis Sharon, the wife of the decedent, was then absent from the state of California, or that she was lawfully or otherwise separated from him, or that she was not capable of giv- her consent. On the contrary, the evidence was undisputed to the effect that she was not separated from her husband, that she was then within the state, and that she was capable of giving consent. There is no evidence that the appellant himself signed a consent to the adoption.

There was evidence tending to prove that prior to the alleged adoption the decedent had formed a purpose to adopt the appellant as his son, and had told the appellant of that intention, and other evidence, apparently intended as corroborative proof, which it is claimed tends to show that the decedent had thereafter in some respect treated the appellant as a child of his own. The appellant was kept in a boarding school for about four years thereafter and supported for some six months longer in Arizona, where he was sent because he was afflicted with tuberculosis. The appellant contends that his expenses during all this period were paid by the decedent. But the evidence is almost conclusive that the expenses were paid out of the funds belonging to the Sharon trust above mentioned, and charged to all the beneficiaries. At all events, it comes far short of proving that the decedent, after the alleged adoption, regarded and treated the appellant as his own child should have been treated. He did not treat him as he treated his own child, then living. He never took the appellant into his family, nor associated with him in any way, and in fact he never thereafter spoke to the appellant or communicated with him in any manner whatever. As corroboration of the fact of a valid adoption, the evidence could not well have been weaker without being absolutely immaterial and irrelevant.

[1, 2] The right to adopt a child, and the right of a person to be adopted as the child of another, are wholly statutory. Such right is unknown to the common law. He who claims that an act of adoption has been accomplished must show that every essential requirement of the statute has been strictly complied with. Ex parte Clark, 87 Cal. 641, 25 Pac. 967; In re Stevens, 83 Cal. 331, 23 Pac. 379, 17 Am. St. Rep. 252. In Estate of Johnson, 98 Cal. 531, 538, 33 Pac. 460, 461 (21 L. R. A. 380) after careful consideration of the question as to what requirements are essential, the conclusion was stated as follows:

"The proceeding is essentially one of contract between the parties whose consent is required. It is a contract of a very solemn nature, and for this reason the law has wisely thrown around its creation certain safeguards, by requiring, not only that it shall be entered into in the presence of a judge, but also that it shall receive his sanction, which is not to be given until he has satisfied himself of these three things: (1) That the person adopting is ten years older than the child. (2) That all the parties whose consent is required do consent, fully and freely, to the making of such contract. (3) That the adoption contemplated by the contract will be for the best interest of the child adopted."

These requirements are there held to be jurisdictional. Unless they coexist, the proceeding for adoption is insufficient, the attempted contract is invalid, the judge is without power to approve it, and there is no lawful adoption. Ex parte Chambers, 80 Cal. 219, 22 Pac. 138; Ex parte Clark, supra; In re Stevens, supra; Matter of Cozza, 163 Cal. 522, 126 Pac. 161, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 214; Estate of McCombs, 174 Cal. 214, 162 Pac. 897.

[3] Under the law in force in 1892, and upon the undisputed facts of this case, the following things were necessary to make the alleged adoption valid: (1) The consent of the wife of the decedent, signed in the presence of the judge. C. C. § 223; section 226, as amended in 1880, Amendts. 1880, p. 4. (2) The consent in writing, duly acknowledged, of the mother of the child, or due proof that she had abandoned said child. C. C. § 224; Stats. 1891, p. 24. (3) The agreement of the decedent, signed in the presence of the judge of the superior court of the county in which the decedent then resided, to the effect that the child should be adopted by him and treated in all respects as his own lawful child should be treated. C. C. § 226, as amended in 1880, supra. (4) The consent of the appellant, in writing, signed by him before the judge, to the adoption, he being then 13 years of age. C. C. §§ 225, 226. (5) The examination by the judge of the persons required to appear before him as aforesaid, his decision therefrom that the interests of the child would be promoted by the proposed adoption, and the making of an order by said judge declaring that said child should thenceforth be regarded and treated in all respects as the child of Frederick William Sharon. C. C. § 227.

[4] We find in the evidence no proof whatever of such papers and proceedings for the adoption of the appellant by the decedent. If the documents have been destroyed, as it is admitted was the case here, if they ever existed, secondary proof thereof would be admissible. Without such secondary proof, the adoption cannot be said to have been proven. There was no such secondary proof. No copy of any paper was proven or offered. No witness testified to the contents of any of the supposed papers, nor gave evidence as to the substance thereof. The witnesses McComb and Heney each testified that he had not read any of the papers and did not know the contents thereof. Neither of them said that he had heard any paper read, or that any of the persons present had stated the character or contents of any paper. Heney testified that there was a petition, a consent, an agreement, and an order. As he did not read either of them nor know their contents, his knowledge of their character must have been derived wholly from the indorsements thereon or from the title on the inside, although he does not say that he read such indorsements or titles, but leaves that to be inferred from his rather evasive statement that, "As the usual custom was, I looked them over." There was no attempt to show what evidence was produced to the judge, upon which the alleged order was given. The appellant does not contend that there was any proof of the contents of any of these essential documents, except a certain proof which he claims arises by presumption. The presumptions upon which he rests his case are those stated in subdivisions 15 and 16 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, "that official duty has been regularly performed" (subdivision 15), and "that a court or judge, acting as such, whether in this state or any other state or country, was acting in the lawful exercise of his jurisdiction" (subdivision 16).

No case has been cited by appellant, and we know of none existing, wherein these presumptions have been given such effect. Appellant cites Matter of Warfield, 22 Cal. 64, 83 Am. Dec. 49; Posten v. Rassette, 5 Cal. 469; Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 N. Y. 533; Estate of Edwards, 58 Iowa, 431; Croom v. Winston, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 1, 43 S. W. 1072; and Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 115. None of them goes as far as it would be necessary to go in this case if we should hold that this proof established the existence, contents, and legal sufficiency of the instruments of writing, and the other facts necessary to the validity of the alleged order of adoption. In the Warfield Case, the petition for the probate of a will was missing from the files. It was referred to, however, in the other papers on file and in the records of the case, and the executor testified that he had signed and sworn to a petition for the probate of the will and that he could not tell what else it contained. Upon all the evidence the court held that the existence and contents of the petition were satisfactorily established. In Posten v. Rassette a power of attorney had been burned. Two witnesses, who were accustomed to draw such powers, each testified that he had seen and read the document and stated its substance and effect. It was said that the mere fact that they could not recite its contents word for word did not render their testimony inadmissible or ineffectual, and that the existence and contents of the power were proved by their testimony. In Leland v. Cameron an execution on which a sale of land had been made was lost. Its issuance and contents were the facts to be proven. The attorney who had entered up the judgment was dead, but on his law register, among other entries of the proceedings in the case, was this: "Fi. fa. issued December 19, 1816, to McClure." The sheriff's deed recited the delivery of the execution to the sheriff. The court held that the entry on the attorney's register was admissible as a contemporaneous memorandum of the fact of the issuance of the execution, and that, as the law fixed the contents of an execution and the data for making it up were contained in the judgment, the contents and issuance of the execution were sufficiently proven. In each of the other cases, the substance and effect of a judgment of a court of general jurisdiction, the entry of which had been lost, were proven by means of entries in the judgment book and in the judge's docket, showing briefly the character and effect of the judgment and the rendition thereof. In the Edwards Case and also in Croom v. Winston, evidence of that character was supplemented by testimony of witnesses to the contents of the pleadings.

Here we not only have no writings of any kind, but we have no testimony as to the contents, the substance, or the effect of any of the writings claimed to have existed.

In Ex parte Clark, supra, the court says that "jurisdiction in such cases, although the court be one of general jurisdiction, must appear by the record, as to both subject-matter and person," and that the judge so acting is to be regarded and treated in that respect as a court of limited and special jurisdiction. All the other decisions where the subject was involved assume that this is the rule applying to adoptions. Estate of McKeag, 141 Cal. 406, 74 Pac. 1039, 99 Am. St. Rep. 80; Estate of Camp, 131 Cal. 470, 63

Pac. 736, 82 Am. St. Rep. 371; Estate of Williams, 102 Cal. 70, 36 Pac. 407, 41 Am. St. Rep. 163; Ex parte Johnson, supra. The rule established by many decisions in this state is that, where one relies on an adjudication of a tribunal of limited or special jurisdiction, he "must show affirmatively every fact necessary to confer such jurisdiction." Rowley v. Howard, 23 Cal. 401; Newman v. Barnet, 165 Cal. 425, 132 Pac. 588; Swain v. Chase, 12 Cal. 285; Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 217; Cardwell v. Sabichi, 59 Cal. 493; Kane v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 466; Jolley v. Foltz, 34 Cal. 326; Ex parte Greenall, 153 Cal. 770, 96 Pac. 804; Ferguson v. Basin Con. Mines, 152 Cal. 715, 93 Pac. 867; Eltzroth v. Ryan, 89 Cal. 140, 26 Pac. 647; Keybers v. McComber, 67 Cal. 396, 7 Pac. 838; King v. Randlett, 33 Cal. 322; Lowe v. Alexander, 15 Cal. 301. In many of these cases the record of the inferior court failed to recite some jurisdictional fact. This, of itself, does not make the judgment void, for extrinsic evidence is admissible to prove such fact, except where some statute makes the record the exclusive mode of proof. Jolley v. Foltz, supra. But if the presumptions of subdivisions 15 and 16 of section 1963 have the effect now claimed for them, no extrinsic proof would have been necessary. The fact that the inferior tribunal acted would have raised the presumption that the jurisdictional fact existed. Its action would have proved its jurisdiction; yet, in all of the cases it is held that the jurisdictional facts must be proven, either by the record, or by other evidence. In no case has it been held that the fact that a judgment or order was made and that it appeared on the record, or the presumption that official duty has been regularly performed, was sufficient proof of the jurisdiction of an inferior court or tribunal.

The conclusion necessarily follows that these provisions of section 1963 are not to be construed to dispense with the necessity of proof of the facts essential to the jurisdiction of an inferior court or tribunal, and that they apply only to the acts of such inferior court after jurisdiction of subject-matter and person has attached. When jurisdiction has been acquired to do the thing, all proceedings in the exercise thereof are presumed to have been lawfully done, unless the contrary is shown. The authorities uniformly limit the application of the presumption in this manner:

"While the law will presume in favor of the regularity of an official's act, it will not by such presumption supply the necessary jurisdictional facts." 1 Jones on Ev. § 45a.

"When the necessary facts of jurisdiction are established, the same assumption is made in favor of the judicial proceedings of judges of inferior courts," says Mr. Chamberlayne, speaking of the presumption that courts act in the lawful exercise of their jurisdiction. 2 Chamberlayne on Ev. § 1206; Best on Ev. (10th Ed.) § 361; King v. All Saints, 7 B. & C. 790, 108 Eng. Rep. 918; Kuker v. Biendorff, 63 Neb. 91, 88 N. W. 190; Wight v. Warner, 1 Doug. (Mich.) 387; Fell v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 75; Fowler v. Jenkins, 28 Pa. 178; Ex parte Lange (D. C.) 197 Fed. 771.

[5] The presumption being thus ineffectual as proof, nothing remains of the appellant's case. The extrinsic evidence bearing directly on the facts essential to jurisdiction, and to the effect that they did not exist, was clear and convincing. Frederick William Sharon was shown to have been a resident of New York. Consequently no judge of the superior court of any county of California could have had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an adoption by him. Ex parte Clark, 87 Cal. 640, 25 Pac. 967; Estate of Williams, 102 Cal. 77, 36 Pac. 407, 41 Am. St. Rep. 163. The appellant admitted that he was over 12 years of age at the time, and he did not testify that he signed a consent to the adoption and produced no evidence to that effect. The wife of the decedent was capable of consenting, was not separated from her husband, was then in California, and she did not sign a consent thereto. It follows that even if the judge did make an order, as claimed, it was wholly void.

[6] In Ex parte Williams, supra, it was held that the only writings necessary to an adoption are the consent of the parties whose consent is necessary, the agreement of the adopting parent or parents, and the order of the judge, and that the existence of the other matters required may be shown by extrinsic evidence. If this be so, then of necessity the nonexistence of such other matters could be shown in proof of the invalidity of the order. Hence proof of the facts of the residence and age of the parties concerned was proper.

From the foregoing it is clear that the appellant utterly failed to prove the allegation that he was an adopted child of the decedent. The result is that he was not entitled to distribution of any part of the estate. Some minor objections remain to be disposed of.

[7] It is a settled rule of law regarding trials by jury that in a proper case the court has full power to direct the jury to render a verdict. This power exists in favor of the defendant where there is no substantial evidence tending to prove all the controverted facts necessary to establish the plaintiff's case. It is not necessary that there should be an absence of conflict in the evidence. To deprive the court of the right to exercise this power, if there be a conflict, it must be a substantial one. There are numerous decisions to this effect. We cite the following: Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 473, 123 Pac. 267; Sill v. Ceschi, 167 Cal. 704, 706, 140 Pac. 949; Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 150, 155 Pac. 631; Jacobson v. Northwestern, etc., Co., 175

Cal. 473, 166 Pac. 3; Perera v. Panama P. I. E. Co., S. F. No. 7815, 175 Pac. 454, decided October 1, 1918. Many other cases supporting the rule are cited in the Baldwin Case. This rule would sustain the action of the court below even if it were conceded that there was some conflict in the evidence relating to the jurisdictional facts essential to a valid adoption. The conflict, if any, was beyond question not substantial, but was a mere shadow of form without substance. The objection that the court had not the power is consequently without merit.

[8] It is contended that the court erred in the manner of obtaining the verdict after its direction therefor had been given. The claim on this point is that, where a part or all of the jury refuse to obey the order, the only method by which the court can enforce it is by proceeding against the refractory jurors for contempt. It is obvious that this might easily prove ineffectual or impracticable, for in such event the refractory jurors would be able to compel a new trial and thus defeat the exercise by the court of a power which it clearly possesses. The objection is untenable, both on principle and by authority. It is based on a misconception of the theory upon which the power rests. The jury can decide facts alone. They are bound by the directions of the court as to the law and must follow those directions. A verdict is directed by the court because the evidence is such that the court can say, as a matter of law, that no other verdict is reasonably possible. The direction to render a verdict in favor of one party is the decision by the court upon a question of law. Such decisions are within the exclusive province of the court. In giving a verdict upon such an order, the jurors do not exercise discretion, but act ministerially as the instrument by which the court prepares the record which will support the only judgment that can lawfully be given. They are no more at liberty to refuse obedience than is the clerk when he is directed to do the ministerial act of entering an order or judgment of the court. The verdict so signed by one of the jurors who is appointed as foreman by the court and who signs in obedience to the order, though in form the act of the jury, is really and in law the act of the court. It is needless to elaborate further on these propositions. They are fully sustained by the authorities. Curran v. Stein, 110 Ky. 103, 60 S. W. 839; Cahill v. Chicago, etc., Co., 74 Fed. 290, 20 C. C. A. 184; Cloquet Lumber Co. v. Burns, 207 Fed. 50, 124 C. C. A. 600; Pardee v. Orvis, 103 Pa. 451; Moore v. Petty, 135 Fed. 675, 68 C. C. A. 306; Bryan v. Louisville, etc., Co., 244 Fed. 650, 157 C. C. A. 98.

[9] In such a case the polling of the jury is a mere useless ceremony and the law does not require it. Donoghue v. Indiana, etc., Ry. Co., 87 Mich. 13, 49 N. W. 512; Kinser v. Calumet, etc., Co., 165 Ill. 505; Jameson v. Officer, 15 Tex. Civ. App. 212, 39 S. W. 190; McClaren v. Indianapolis Co., 83 Ind. 319; Winn v. Neville, 79 Kan. 29, 98 Pac. 272.

[10] After the verdict was filed and before the decree of distribution was signed or filed, the appellant filed a new answer or opposition to the distribution prayed for. It was substantially the same as the previous answer. He insists that this filing of a new answer arrested the proceedings and entitled him to another trial of his case on the merits. His theory is that the decision upon the directed verdict was not a decision upon the merits, that it does not entitle the respondents to a distribution, but merely authorizes a dismissal of the appellant upon his first answer, and, in short, that it is the equivalent of a nonsuit and does not bar a subsequent proceeding by him for the same relief. We cannot agree to this proposition. The law is well settled to the contrary. A verdict directed by the court is a decision upon the merits of the case. The one important difference in this respect between a judgment of nonsuit and a judgment on a directed verdict is that the latter is a bar to another action for the same cause, while the former is not. Central, etc., Co. v. Pullman, etc., Co., 139 U. S. 39, 11 Sup. Ct. 478, 35 L. Ed. 55; Morgan v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 83 Wis. 353, 53 N. W. 741; Huntt v. McNamee, 141 Fed. 295, 72 C. C. A. 441; McCown v. Muldrow, 91 S. C. 540, 74 S. E. 386, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 139; Wicks v. Sanborn, 72 Or. 324, 143 Pac. 1007; Reams v. Sinclair, 97 Neb. 542, 150 N. W. 826. The appellant relies on the case of McKay v. Montana U. R. Co., 13 Mont. 15, 31 Pac. 999, as authority in his favor on this point. The court was there considering the manner in which the evidence should be brought up on appeal from the judgment on a directed verdict in order to present the question whether or not such direction was authorized by the evidence. The question whether or not such judgment was on the merits and was a bar to another action was not involved. In the course of the discussion the court says that such judgment is "in effect a nonsuit." So it might be, so far as the question of presenting the evidence on appeal is concerned; but such a remark in such a case cannot be deemed a decision on the question here presented. Even if it were so regarded, it is contrary to all other authority on the point and is not sustainable on principle, and we should refuse to follow it. The result is that the verdict ended the case. The appellant was no more entitled to refile his answer and continue the litigation after the entry of such a verdict than he would have been after a verdict had been rendered voluntarily and without direction of the court.

[11] Finally, it may be said as to this, as well as to all other objections to the rulings of the court, that, under the Constitution as it now exists, the Supreme Court has a limited jurisdiction to consider evidence and determine the merits of the case. It may do so for the purpose of determining from an examination of the evidence whether or not an error as to any matter of procedure, pleading, or the admission of evidence, or in directing the jury, has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Unless it shall find that such miscarriage has been caused thereby, the error must be disregarded and the judgment cannot be set aside on account thereof. Const. art. 6, § 4½. The evidence in this cause is of such a character that it satisfies this court that the appellant should not prevail and that no miscarriage of justice could have resulted from any ruling or proceeding of the court, of the kind above mentioned, tending to his defeat.

The decree of distribution is affirmed.

PUBLIC LANDS ⊂144(2) — UNSEGREGATED SWAMP LANDS—APPLICATION FOR PURCHASE —STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS.

An application to purchase unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands from the state, which complies with the requirements of Pol. Code, § 3493, need not also comply with section 3443, which applies to purchase of all swamp and overflowed land in the state.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Action by William B. McGill against William V. Cowan. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

L. F. Coburn, of Yreka, for appellant.

A. R. Tabor, J. Fontaine Johnson, and William V. Cowan, all of Sacramento, and Lutrell & Ley, of Yreka, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in the defendant's favor, after an order sustaining his demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend. The action was brought under the provisions of section 3415 of the Political Code to determine which of the parties thereto was entitled to purchase from the state of California certain unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands in the county of Siskiyou. The defendant's application to purchase said lands was filed in the state surveyor general's office on May 26, 1917; the plaintiff's application to purchase the same lands was filed in the same office July 24, 1917. Both applications are set forth in full in the complaint. The only question presented upon this appeal is that of the sufficiency of the respondent's application.

The appellant concedes that the respondent's application complies with the requirements of section 3493 of the Political Code, but insists that it should have also complied as to its contents with section 3443 of the Political Code, which, according to the appellant's contention, is a general section applicable to the purchase of all swamp and overflowed lands of the state. We cannot give our assent to this contention. The sections of the Political Code having special reference to the purchase from the state of portions of its unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands are sections 3493m to 3493t of article 2a of title 8 of said Code. This article was added to said Code in the year 1907, but was taken bodily from the act of the Legislature of 1893 dealing with the same subject, which earlier act was passed in order to provide for the purchase from the state of lands uncovered by the rescission or drainage of waters of inland lakes and of unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands for the sale of which classes of lands by the state no previous provision had been made. The original act was apparently complete in itself in its provisions as to the application and affidavit for the purchase of such lands and the contents thereof, as to the duties of the surveyor general in respect to the survey of such lands, the approval of such application, the purchase price to be paid, the reclamation of the lands through the formation of reclamation districts, etc. No reference was made therein to any other acts or to any of the sections of the Political Code then in existence dealing generally with the purchase of swamp and overflowed lands; nor is any such reference made in the article of the Code in which said earlier act has been codified. On the other hand, section 3443 of the Political Code became a part of that Code in the year 1872, being derived from the statutes of 1867–68 having reference to the purchase from the state of segregated swamp and overflowed lands. In the cases of Buchanan v. Nagle, 88 Cal. 591, 26 Pac. 512, and Dewar v. Ruiz, 89 Cal. 385, 26 Pac. 832, it was held that no application could be made under this section of the Political Code for the purchase of swamp and overflowed lands prior to their segregation. It was the decision of these two cases in the year 1891 which apparently led to the passage of the act of 1893, providing for the purchase of unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands, from which act, as we have seen, the provisions of sections 3493m to 3493t, inclusive, were codified.

Since, according to the foregoing cases, section 3443 of the Political Code had no application to the purchase of unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands, it would seem clear that, if it had been the intention of the Legislature in the passage of the act of 1893 to have extended the provisions of section 3443 of said Code, so as to have the same apply to the latter class of lands, it would have expressly so provided in said later act. It did not so provide, but, on the contrary, proceeded to specifically state in said act the requirements of the application and affidavit to be made for the purchase of said lands. We are of the opinion that the provisions of said act and of the sections of the Political Code in which the same are codified are complete and exclusive, and that no other matters are required to be set forth in the application and affidavit of an applicant to purchase unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands than those which are contained in section 3493m of the Political Code.

It follows that the application and affidavit of the respondent herein were sufficient in form and substance to give to him the prior right to purchase from the state the unsegregated swamp and overflowed lands described therein. The defendant's demurrer was, therefore, properly sustained without leave to amend.

HIRONS et al. v. CLARE et al. (Civ. 2705.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 11, 1918.)

1. PLEADING ⊂=294 — GENERAL DENIAL — VERIFIED COMPLAINT—ISSUES.

The allegations of verified complaint were admitted by failure to deny them in answer, a general denial being insufficient to put them in issue.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=34—CONSOLIDATION—SPECIAL ELECTION.

A petition, signed by more than one-fourth of qualified electors of city, requesting special election for vote upon consolidation with adjacent city, under St. 1913, p. 577, as amended by St. 1915, p. 311, and by St. 1917, p. 26, was sufficient on being filed with board of trustees to require board to call election, without referring petition to city clerk for checking.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=939—PRESUMPTIONS —CONTENTS OF CLERK'S TRANSCRIPT.

Where appeal under alternative method comes before court on clerk's transcript alone, papers contained in transcript not identified will not be presumed to be copies of papers which have been received in evidence during trial.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂=46(3)—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE—NECESSITY OF DETERMINATION.

In action for writ of mandamus requiring board of trustees to call special election for vote on consolidation of city with adjacent city, under St. 1913, p. 577, as amended by St. 1915, p. 311, and by St. 1917, p. 26, defendants' objection that such statute is contrary to Const. art. 11, § 18, in that it provides for assumption of indebtedness of adjacent city upon a majority vote, will not be considered; such question not arising unless the assumption of such indebtedness should receive affirmative vote of more than a majority and less than two-thirds of electors.

5. MANDAMUS ⊂=178 — VALIDITY OF JUDGMENT—IMPOSSIBILITY OF COMPLIANCE.

A judgment, providing for issuance of peremptory writ commanding trustees of city to call special election not later than 50 days from service of writ, was not void because of impossibility of taking necessary steps at regular meetings of the board, where such steps, under Municipal Corporation Act, § 763, could be taken at special or adjourned regular meetings.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Mandamus by Charles C. Hirons and another against Montrose W. Clare and others, as members of the Board of Trustees of the City of East San Diego, State of California, and the Board of Trustees of the City of San Diego, a municipal corporation of the State of California. Judgment ordering that a peremptory writ issue, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

F. G. Blood, of San Diego, for appellants.

Allan Brant, John H. Moore, and Will M. Tompkins, all of San Diego, and Charles E. Sumner, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court, after hearing upon the return of an alternative writ of mandate and defendants' answer thereto, adjudging and ordering that a peremptory writ issue commanding and directing said defendants, as trustees of the city East of San Diego, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, to call and hold a special election for the consolidation of said city with the city of San Diego, adjacent and contiguous thereto, pursuant to the provisions of the municipal consolidation act of 1913, and the amendments thereto of 1915 and 1917.

[1] The court below filed findings of fact wherein it found, generally and specifically, that all the material allegations of the complaint are true. It appears, moreover, from an inspection of the record, that all of these allegations were admitted by the failure to deny them in the answer. The complaint being verified, a general denial was insufficient to put them in issue.

From the facts thus established, it appears that a petition was duly filed with said board of trustees of said city of East San Diego, signed by more than one-fourth in number of the qualified electors of said city, asking and requesting that a special election be called to vote upon the question of such consolidation, and that said defendants refused and ever since have refused to call or hold said election.

[2] Appellants' first contention is that they were not required to call said election because it does not appear that the city clerk, to whom the petition was referred by them for checking, ever reported back to them that it was sufficient. Appellants cite Davenport v. City of Los Angeles, 146 Cal. 511, 80 Pac. 684. That case is not in point here. It arose under a provision of the charter of Los Angeles, which expressly made such certificate of the city clerk a condition precedent to the action of the city council. The statute under which petitioners are proceeding here does not provide for or require any such certificate. It provides as follows:

"Whenever a petition, signed by not less than one-fourth in number of the qualified electors of any municipal corporation, * * * is filed with the legislative body thereof, asking that such municipal corporation and any other municipal corporation contiguous thereto, designated in such petition, * * * be consolidated, such legislative body must, without delay, call a special election," etc.

This case is therefore ruled by the case of People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 635, 84 Pac. 205, 209, wherein the court says:

"It is the petition signed by the requisite number that gives the power and creates the duty."

Appellants urge that the municipal consolidation act here in question (Stats. 1913, p. 577), as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 311) and in 1917 (St. 1917, p. 26), is in violation of section 18, art. 11, of the Constitution, which provides:

"No county, city, * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose."

The original act, as enacted in 1913, provided for the submission to the voters, at an election held under it, of the question whether or not the city in which they were voting should, in the event of such consolidation, assume and become liable for its pro rata of specified bonded indebtedness which had been theretofore created by the other city with which such consolidation was proposed. It further provided that, in the event of an affirmative two-thirds vote thereon, the property in such city should, after the consolidation, be taxed equally with the property in the other city for the payment of such bonded indebtedness. By the amendments of 1915 and 1917 this provision for a two-thirds affirmative vote was changed to a majority vote; and appellants' contention is that the statute as so amended is in violation of the constitutional prohibition above referred to, and is therefore void.

[3, 4] The first answer which suggests itself is that, so far as disclosed by the record in this case, no question of the incurring or assumption of indebtedness is involved. Appellants in their brief quote what they assert to be a copy of the petition for the election involved in this case, but the record before us does not bear out this assertion. This is an appeal under the alternative method and comes before us on the clerk's transcript alone, which contains duly certified copies of the judgment roll, the peremptory writ of mandamus, Exhibit A (whatever that may be), notice of appeal, and notice to prepare transcript. Bound in with this are certain other papers which we might guess are copies of papers which may have been received in evidence during the trial. But there is nothing in the record which in any way identifies them, and we are therefore wholly unwarranted in making such an assumption. If we should assume, however, that the question of the assumption of such bonded indebtedness was involved in the election here sought to be called, it is apparent that the question of the constitutionality of the statute in this connection would not be raised, unless at that election the proposition should receive an amrmative vote of more than a majority and less than two-thirds of the electors, and we are not called upon here to speculate on the question whether or not in such event it would be held that the amendments of 1915 and 1917 were unconstitutional, thus leaving the statute as originally enacted in 1913 in full force and effect.

In view of what we have just said, we do not deem it necessary to consider appellants' contention that, if the act be unconstitutional, then it follows that the petition was signed by the voters under a misapprehension as to its effect and cannot be made the basis of any action in the premises.

[5] It is further contended that the judgment here is void because of the impossibility of compliance therewith by the defendant trustees. The judgment provided for the issuance of a peremptory writ, commanding defendants to fix the date for the holding of said election not later than 50 days from the service thereof. Appellants call attention to the fact that the regular meetings of the board of trustees of the city of East San Diego are fixed by ordinance to be held on the first and third Tuesdays of each month. They present a schedule of the steps required to be taken in the calling and holding of such election, from which they conclude that the earliest possible date on which it could have been held would be 68 days after the service on them of the peremptory writ. This is based upon the assumption that no steps would be taken by them except at regular meetings, and wholly ignores the fact that most, if not all, of such steps could have been taken at special or adjourned regular meetings, as provided in section 763 of the Municipal Corporation Act (St. 1883, p. 252).

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

WAGNER v. MEINZER. (Civ. 2521.)

ADVERSE POSSESSION ⟸66(2)—HOSTILE POSSESSION—POSSESSION UNDER MISTAKE AS TO BOUNDARY.

If one of two coterminous owners takes possession and claims title to the extent of his possession, he holds adversely, although he was induced to locate his possession through a mistake as to the boundary.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Anna M. Wagner against Gottlieb Meinzer. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Carl W. Mueller, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Russell W. Cantrell, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action in ejectment. The complaint is in the usual form alleging ownership and right to possession of the land described in the complaint to be in plaintiff and the withholding without right by the defendant.

The land sought to be recovered consists of a portion of a lot about 8 feet in width by 100 feet in depth, located in the Barman tract in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendant is the owner of the lot immediately adjoining the land of plaintiff on the north, his dwelling house abutting on the northerly line of plaintiff's land. Before this dwelling house was erected, defendant's predecessor in interest caused defendant's lot to be surveyed by the then city and county surveyor, and the house was erected within the lines delineated and marked by said surveyor, where it has continuously stood for the past 20 years. This litigation is the result of the mistaken boundary line established by said surveyor between these coterminous landowners.

Among other defenses, defendant pleaded the statute of limitations, claiming an acquiescence in the line so established and an actual possession of the land thereunder beyond a period sufficient to establish a title by adverse possession. Plaintiff concedes this fact, but contends that possession under such circumstances is not hostile or under a claim of title, and that the statute of limitations, therefore, avails him nothing.

We do not so understand the law. If one of two coterminous owners takes possession and claims title to the extent of his possession, he holds adversely, although he was induced to locate his possession through a mistake as to the boundary. Woodward v. Faris, 109 Cal. 12, 41 Pac. 781. As is said in the recent case of Silva v. Azevedo, 173 Pac. 929, where there is a continued acquiescence in a line so fixed, and an occupation in accordance with it for a period beyond that fixed by the statute of limitations, and the erection by the defendant of valuable and permanent improvements upon the disputed piece, it would be a manifest injustice to permit defendant to be ousted merely because plaintiff has by a new survey discovered an error in the original establishment of the line.

Considering the conclusion we have reached, a discussion of the other points presented becomes unnecessary.

The judgment and order are reversed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; W. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by Rose G. Johns against Chauncey P. Pond. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

William P. Hubbard, of San Francisco, and D. C. Dutton, of Oakland, for appellant.

Ostrander, Clark & Carey, of Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment, taken within 60 days after the entry thereof, in an action wherein the plaintiff sought damages against the defendant, a physician, for negligently, and without occasion therefor, performing upon her a surgical operation.

The plaintiff alleges in her complaint that the defendant informed her that she had a fallopian tumor, and operated upon her for its removal, when in fact the symptoms diagnosed as indicating the presence of a tumor were caused by pregnancy; and that five months later she gave birth to a baby boy weighing 9½ pounds. As a result of the operation plaintiff alleges that her health has been permanently injured, and that she has suffered, and will continue to suffer, more or less pain in body and mind. Upon these facts she bases her demand for damages, placing the amount at $25,000.

The plaintiff was a witness in her own behalf, and we may paraphrase her testimony as follows:

"I shall have been married 4 years in January, 1916, and have since my marriage lived with my husband. The defendant attended me during pregnancy and at the time of the birth of my first child in the month of January, 1914. Until just prior to the 23d day of December, 1914, I enjoyed good health. On that day I telephoned to the defendant to call on me, and when he came I told him that I had been having severe pains in my back and head and also in the pelvic region. I also informed the defendant that I had been examined by Dr. Somers, of San Francisco, who said at the time of the examination that he thought I was pregnant five or six weeks. I further told him that I was having a scanty menstruation for almost a day each month. The defendant at that time in my home made what he called a bimanual examination, and concluded that perhaps my uterus had not contracted after my first child was born, but in any event he assured me that I was not pregnant, saying, 'You are no more pregnant than I am.' At that time he gave me a prescription which I was to use four or five days, and if it gave me no relief I was to let him know. A week or ten days later I called up the defendant, and told him that the douche he had prescribed had given me no relief, and that my suffering had in fact increased. He told me to call at his office the following day, which I did, and there, after making a more careful examination, he asked me my age. I told him I was 22 years old, whereupon he said, 'Mrs. Johns, you are a very young woman, but I want to tell you that you have a fallopian tumor that is growing over the mouth of the uterus,' and that I would have to be operated upon at once; that as soon as the tumor should be removed I would be an entirely different woman. I consented to the operation. It was performed. A few days thereafter the defendant said I was in false labor pains. I had bearing down pains in the pelvic region. These pains grew worse, and the defendant was sent for. When he called the nurse in attendance, she told him that she thought I was going to miscarry. He made no reply, but ordered some pills, and left word for them to be given to me as directed. He also ordered hypodermics, which were given to me often during the night, but I suffered intense pain, and got no sleep until about 4 o'clock in the morning. In the morning about 9 o'clock the defendant informed me that I was trying to miscarry, that I was pregnant, and about to feel life. I asked him why he had not performed an abortion, and told him that he had left me in such a condition that my child would be an idiot or deformed. He replied that he could not perform an abortion for it was against the law, and that he thought the operation would have no effect on the child. From that time I worried constantly about the effect the operation would have on the child. Two weeks after the operation defendant took me home from the hospital and carried me up the front stairs to my room. All this time I suffered intense pain, and the defendant told me he expected I would miscarry within nine or ten days. That was the last time he called. He rendered me no further assistance. The baby was born June 18, 1915. About one month after the operation I observed physical changes in my legs; varicose veins came out on them. This condition existed until the child was born, during which time on this account I could hardly walk and suffered pain and was required to wear elastic stockings. Shortly after the birth of the child I suffered from a hernia, and was operated upon for it. I suffered no accident, and do not know what occasioned the rupture other than the bearing down exertions which occurred while I was at the hospital. A physician other than the defendant took care of me at the birth of my child. The baby died within three months after its birth. At one time after the incision I heard the defendant make a statement, with reference to the operation, in which he said he had made a mistake."

As to this last statement by the plaintiff, and in some other respects, she was corroborated by other witnesses.

The defendant testified that in addition to the symptoms related by the plaintiff in her testimony she told him that she had been having hemorrhages between menstrual periods and suffered some dizziness; that she did not suspect pregnancy; that her condition was nothing like it had been with the first child; that considering the history of the case as related by her, she was suffering from a fibroid tumor; that her condition was serious and required the performance of an operation; that the operation consisted of an incision about 2½ inches long in plaintiff's abdomen; that upon making the incision he discovered that the plaintiff was pregnant, and that there was no condition of tumor, whereupon he concluded that the plaintiff had given him an incorrect history of the case; sewed up, dressed and bandaged the incision; that such an incision is called an exploratory incision, and would have been larger had he not found pregnancy.

According to the testimony of several medical witnesses produced by plaintiff, based upon the history of the case as claimed by plaintiff to have been furnished to the defendant, the defendant should have kept the plaintiff under observation for at least six weeks before operating; that if he had done this he would have discovered the error in his diagnosis, for he would have felt the movements of the living fœtus, and he would have heard the fœtal heartbeat.

According to the testimony of nine experts called for the defendant, he was justified in making an immediate operation for tumor only in the event of the presence of hemorrhages between regular menstrual periods; otherwise he should have kept the patient under observation and awaited developments.

[1] From this résumé of the evidence it is quite clear, we think, that if the jury believed, as it appears they did, the testimony of the plaintiff as to what she told the defendant relating to the history of her case, then the operation was unnecessary, and their verdict cannot be disturbed.

[2] Plaintiff closed her case without introducing any expert evidence, whereupon the defendant made a motion for nonsuit, arguing that the mere statement by defendant to the plaintiff and her mother that he had made a mistake in diagnosing plaintiff's case as one of tumor rather than pregnancy was not sufficient to establish negligence, in the absence of testimony that such incorrect diagnosis was arrived at by reason of negligence. Assuming this to be true, still as evidence was introduced later in the case which tended to supply this defect, and as it does not appear that the defendant was prejudiced in the presentation of his defense by the circumstance that the testimony was produced later in the trial instead of during the presentation of plaintiff's case in chief, the judgment will not, upon that ground, be reversed; for, as was said in Peters v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 48, 52, 116 Pac. 400, 402, "it is well settled that an order denying a motion for a nonsuit will not be disturbed, although the evidence at the close of plaintiff's case was so weak that it might properly have been granted, if, upon the trial, the defect is overcome by evidence subsequently introduced." See, also, Lowe v. S. F. Ry., 154 Cal. 573, 98 Pac. 678; Vica Valley R. Co. v. Mansfield, 84 Cal. 560, 24 Pac. 145.

Neither do we think that there is any merit in defendant's point that he was prejudiced by the manner in which the court disposed of the motion.

[3] The court committed no error in refusing defendant's requested instruction that, if there is more than one method of treatment recognized by the medical profession, a physician may adopt either, for the reason that the instruction was substantially given by the court in its charge to the jury when it said that if the defendant "applied reasonable skill and judgment with ordinary care, he is not liable for any damages or injuries consequent upon an honest mistake or error in judgment in making a diagnosis, in prescribing treatment, or in determining upon an operation, and if what he did appears from the evidence to be in accordance with recognized authority and good current practice, you must find a verdict for the defendant."

The defendant also complains of the action of the court in refusing certain other proposed instructions. As to those, we think their subject-matter was embraced by what the court stated to the jury on the subjects of proximate cause and preponderance of the evidence.

Other objections to instructions given or proposed have even less merit than those already referred to, and no discussion of them is deemed necessary. The instructions as a whole fully and fairly covered every phase of the case.

[4] Without serious objection from the defendant plaintiff was permitted to testify that the child when born was physically normal, for the purpose of showing, as claimed by plaintiff, that the condition of the uterus was normal when examined by the defendant. Later, however, she testified that while the child upon its birth cried for about five minutes, thereafter for about five days it could not nurse, and any milk gotten into its stomach by other means caused nausea; that the child "would vomit like a person coming out of an anæsthetic." She also testified that this condition of her baby caused her mental anguish. This testimony was objected to on the ground that this was not an action by the parents for the loss of their child by reason of the acts of the defendant. The court was doubtful of the right of plaintiff to introduce this evidence, and admitted it tentatively, subject to a motion to strike out. Later on, no motion having been made to this end, the court of its own motion instructed the jury as follows:

"You are instructed that you are not to take into consideration any evidence whatsoever as to any mental suffering or worry that the plaintiff may have experienced by reason of any fear that her unborn child might be marked or affected by reason of any act on the part of the defendant. * * * You are instructed that if you should find for the plaintiff in this case you cannot take into consideration any alleged injury to the said child in determining the amount of your verdict."

We are bound to assume that the jury followed this instruction.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

MacCOY v. GAGE. (Civ. 1837.)

1. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⟸24(4)—ACTIONS FOR SERVICES—COMPENSATION.

In a physician's action for services rendered in reducing a fracture, the question of the value of the services held, under the evidence, for the jury.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸558(6)—CROSS-EXAMINATION OF EXPERT.

On cross-examination of an expert witness, who had testified hypothetically, objection is properly sustained to a question which assumed facts which did not appear in the evidence, or did not correctly narrate the conditions shown by the hypothetical question, which was the basis of the witness' first answer.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1058(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action by a physician for services the exclusion of question as to whether it was customary to use X-rays was harmless, where it appeared that the diagnosis was correct and such testimony was also later gone into.

4. EVIDENCE ⟸554—EXPERT TESTIMONY.

Where a medical expert testified hypothetically as to the value of medical services, it was within the court's discretion to refuse to allow a discussion, possibly lengthy, as to a course of treatment not included within the facts as shown, upon which he based his testimony.

5. EVIDENCE ⟸538—EXPERT OPINION.

The opinion of a trained nurse is not competent to show that treatment administered by a physician is improper.

6. TRIAL ⟸234(7)—INSTRUCTIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action by a surgeon for services rendered in reducing a fracture, where defendant counterclaimed for damages occasioned by negligence, held that an instruction as to defendant's duty to establish his counterclaim, etc., was not calculated to mislead the jury into believing defendant had the burden of establishing matters the burden of which was on plaintiff.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by William E. MacCoy against H. R. Gage, who cross-complained. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. T. Morrow, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. The plaintiff, a licensed physician and surgeon, brought this suit to recover the sum of $1,000 alleged to be the reasonable value of professional services rendered by him to the defendant. Defendant filed a cross-complaint, seeking to recover damages which he alleged he had sustained by reason of unskillful treatment which he had received at the hands of the plaintiff. The jury sitting in the case found for the plaintiff in the full amount prayed for in his complaint and against the defendant on his cross-complaint. Defendant has appealed from the judgment, relying upon various errors of law which he asserts were committed by the trial court in the course of the proceedings.

[1] From the evidence, as set out in the bill of exceptions, it appears that the plaintiff, in May, 1910, was called upon to attend the defendant, whom he found suffering from a fracture of the upper portion of the upper leg bone, or, as it was phrased by the professional witnesses, a "fracture of the neck of the femur." At his first visit the plaintiff adjusted the broken part and applied a weight to the limb. A trained nurse was called to attend the case and the plaintiff continued his ministrations during several months, and until the defendant was able to move about on crutches. It was shown that the patient later became able to walk, even without the aid of a cane, at least for short distances. The plaintiff made about 85 visits to the defendant. During the time he attended him, he was called upon to prescribe for other conditions than the broken bone, to wit, pneumonia and rheumatism. From all of the medical testimony, even that produced by the defendant, it appears that so far as the fracture was concerned, the results obtained by the plaintiff were better than the average. Under the evidence as presented, it is very clear, of course, that the matter of the value to be placed upon the services rendered by the plaintiff to the defendant was one exclusively for the jury.

[2] Counsel for appellant first complains of the ruling of the trial judge sustaining objections to certain questions asked by him upon cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses. Two witnesses for the plaintiff, Drs. Barton and Thorpe, were asked to state their opinion as to the value of the services rendered by the plaintiff. What these services had been were detailed in the questions. On cross-examination of the witness Barton, counsel for appellant, assuming other matters not shown in evidence, inquired as to whether the witness would alter his opinion as to the value of the services. Objection was properly sustained to this question, for the facts assumed did not appear in evidence. Roche v. Baldwin, 143 Cal. 192, 76 Pac. 956.

[3, 4] The same witness was asked, on cross-examination, to which question objection was sustained, as to whether it was not customary, in cases of the character involved, to take an X-ray picture. If we were to concede that the trial judge should have allowed the question to be answered, we cannot see how any prejudice has resulted to the defendant by the sustaining of the objection. Concededly the taking of an X-ray picture was only valuable for purposes of diagnosis, and it seems very clear that the diagnosis made by the plaintiff without the aid of the X-ray was the correct one. More than this, the matter of the advisability and value of X-ray pictures was fully gone into in the testimony introduced later in the case. So we think, also, that the refusal of the court to permit counsel for appellant to require the same witness to give in detail what he considered proper treatment to a patient under the circumstances shown was without error prejudicial to the defendant. The facts upon which the witness had given his opinion as to the value of the services were all embodied in the hypothetical question, and it was upon those facts that the witness answered and was then turned over to the defense for cross-examination. The court did not debar the defendant from cross-examining upon all matters contained in the hypothetical question, and it was within the court's discretion to refuse to allow the witness to enter upon a discussion, possibly lengthy, as to a course of treatment, not included within the facts as shown, and upon which he based his opinion as to the value of the services rendered. The question asked of the witness Dr. Thorpe by counsel for defendant, to which objection was sustained, did not correctly narrate the conditions shown by the hypothetical question which was the basis of the witness' first answer, or conditions shown by the testimony. The objection to that question was therefore properly sustained. Roche v. Baldwin, supra.

[5] There was no error in sustaining objections to questions asked of witness Thatcher, who was a trained nurse and the nurse who had attended the defendant under the direction of the plaintiff. The questions all went to the point as to what the witness had observed other physicians do in like cases, or what she considered good or customary treatment. We do not think that the opinion of the trained nurse was competent evidence to show that the treatment administered by the plaintiff was improper.

[6] Complaint is made of an instruction given by the court which advised the jury that the law required the defendant and cross-complainant to "prove by a preponderance of the evidence, the same as any other matter or matters in the case, * * *" the things relied upon to show lack of skill or care on the part of the plaintiff. The argument is that by the phrase, "the same as any other matter or matters in the case," the intimation of the court to the jury was that all matters of defense should be so established, and that it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove facts relied upon by him by a preponderance of the evidence. While the instruction is somewhat loose in its phraseology, and perhaps not as carefully guarded as it should have been, we do not think that it by any means follows reasonably that the jury was misled by it. There was nothing in any of the other instructions given by the court carrying out the idea that the burden rested wholly upon the defendant to defend against the plaintiff's issues, or that upon a mere balance of the weight of evidence the plaintiff would be entitled to recover. We do observe that the court failed to give any express or precise instruction advising the jury that the burden of proving his case by a preponderance of the evidence rested with the plaintiff. But we find that no such instruction was offered and refused.

A very careful perusal of the record submitted compels the conclusion that in this case there was no miscarriage of justice.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

REDHEAD v. PAYNE. (Civ. 2559.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 18, 1918.)

1. DEEDS ⟸3—TITLE TO LAND—MEMORANDUM.

Where plaintiff held title to land as trustee for himself and defendant, because it was purchased with other land owned by the parties as tenants in common, a memorandum signed by defendant, to the effect that his interest in the land was merely an interest in remainder after liens had been paid, does not affect the title.

2. LIENS ⟸22—FORECLOSURE.

Where plaintiff and defendant, who were tenants in common, traded their land for other land, and defendant signed a memorandum that plaintiff should have a lien upon the land for the amount of his expenditures, held that, where defendant refused to contribute his part, plaintiff was entitled to the aid of a court of equity in enforcing the lien.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1073(1)—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where it was defendant's contention that plaintiff, who held the legal title to land, in which defendant was interested, could sell the land without the aid of a court, a decree of sale was harmless as to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action by J. F. Redhead against Jefferson Payne. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. K. Bonestell and N. Lindsay, both of Fresno, for appellant.

F. E. Cook, of Fresno, and Jesse F. Water, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment directing the sale of land described in the complaint. The defendant demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was overruled. Defendant declined to answer, and the judgment went by default. Defendant contends that no cause of action is stated in the complaint. The complaint sets forth: That between November, 1912, and January, 1915, plaintiff and defendant were the owners, as tenants in common, of certain lands in Riverside county. That this property was operated at a loss. That the defendant was financially unable to pay his share of operating said property, and plaintiff was obliged to advance and did advance over $5,200 more than defendant in its management and for its protection. That on January 14, 1915, defendant being unable to meet his share of the costs and expenses of the future operation of said Riverside property, the same was traded for certain land in Fresno county, which is the land involved in this action. In order to complete such trade, plaintiff was compelled to pay $5,000 bonus and $269 as costs and expenses. That before making such trade it was verbally agreed that the title to the Fresno county land should be taken in plaintiff's name, and that defendant's entire interest should be one-half of what might be derived from a sale thereof, in excess of the mortgage of $6,000 thereon, after deducting the balance due plaintiff of $10,470.84. That defendant refused to pay any part of the taxes or of the interest due upon the mortgage on the Fresno land and that the plaintiff was forced to pay the same. That plaintiff does not know whether he is the owner of said Fresno county land or whether he holds the title thereto as trustee for defendant and himself, subject to the lien of said mortgage and a second lien for the amount due him as aforesaid, and he therefore submits the question to the court. Plaintiff offers to do anything equitable in the premises and prays for a decree adjudging and determining the rights and interests of plaintiff and defendant in the said land, and that the same be sold under an order of the court and that the amount to which plaintiff may be entitled may be declared a lien on said land, subject only to the lien of the mortgage aforesaid, and that the proceeds of such sale be applied first to the costs and expenses of such sale and second to pay the amount found due to plaintiff and the balance divided between plaintiff and defendant.

[1] The defendant contends that as he had signed a certain memorandum, set out in the record, agreeing that his sole interest in the land was in any remainder after the land was sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of the mortgage and the payment of the indebtedness due to plaintiff, that therefore plaintiff had the absolute title to the land, subject merely to an obligation to pay to defendant one-half of the remainder after paying the aforesaid incumbrances, and that, having the absolute title to the land, he could sell it as he desired and did not require the aid of the court; that there was no right for the court to enforce and no wrong to redress. We think this objection to the judgment is entirely without merit. Title to land is a definite and positive matter and can be passed only in the manner prescribed by law. If the title to this land was in the plaintiff as trustee for himself and the defendant by reason of its having been purchased with other land held by the parties as tenants in common, the memorandum signed by defendant, to the effect that his interest in the land was merely an interest in the remainder after the liens upon the same had been paid, in no way affects the title to the land. Certainly both plaintiff and defendant held their title subject to all valid liens, and a mere declaration of that fact does not affect the legal situation.

[2] The plaintiff and defendant having agreed in writing that the plaintiff should have a lien upon the land for the amount of his expenditures in its purchase and operation, plaintiff was entitled to have the same foreclosed, which is, in effect, what he has asked in the present suit. He has merely set out all the facts and asked the court to determine his rights and then enforce them. This was certainly a desirable, if not a necessary, procedure from the standpoint of keeping the record title clear of all doubt. Certainly, since the defendant would not aid in meeting the expenses of the land, the plaintiff is not bound to bear such expense indefinitely, and he may seek the aid of a court of equity to have his lien foreclosed and the property sold.

[3] Moreover, the defendant asserts that plaintiff might have sold the property without the aid of a court, so defendant is certainly not injured by the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

OWEN v. CROCKER-HUFFMAN LAND & WATER CO. (Civ. 1609.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 14, 1918.)

NEW TRIAL ⟸165—ORDER—EX PARTE ORDER —"INADVERTENCE OR OVERSIGHT."

The trial court, having entered an order granting a new trial unless plaintiff should consent to a reduction of the verdict, was without jurisdiction to thereafter, on its own motion, modify the first order by changing the amount of the reduction, on the ground that the mistake was one arising through inadvertence in incorrectly recalling testimony, for such an error is not an inadvertence or oversight as usually construed, and the court having entered the order disposing of the motion for new trial, the matter was functus officio and without its jurisdiction (citing Words and Phrases, First Series, Inadvertence, 3489).

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by W. A. Owen against the Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order setting aside an order granting a new trial conditionally, defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded.

Peck, Bunker & Cole, of Oakland, for appellant.

Tuttle, Landrum & Shaffer, of Merced, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action was commenced to recover damages for land overflowed by an alleged negligently constructed and maintained canal. The cause was tried by the court with a jury, and, on July 1, 1916, the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $4,611. Judgment on the verdict was rendered on the same day and was recorded July 3, 1916. On July 7th defendant duly served and filed its motion for a new trial. The motion came on to be heard, was argued and submitted, and the court made the following order:

"Motion for new trial having been heretofore argued and submitted, it is ordered that the said motion [be] and the same is hereby granted, unless plaintiff consents to a reduction of the verdict, as follows, to wit: All in excess of $2,151.25 and costs must be remitted by plaintiff to defendant or a new trial is granted."

On September 19, 1916, the court made the following order:

"It is ordered that the order heretofore entered, to wit, on September 18th, relative to motion for new trial in the above-entitled action, be and the same is hereby changed and modified to correct a mistake arising through inadvertence, incorrectly recalling the testimony of plaintiff and other witnesses, and that the following be and is the order of said court: That unless the plaintiff files his written acceptance in this court of a reduction of the judgment heretofore entered in said cause in the sum of $4,611, and $574.05, costs of suit, to the sum of $2,788 and $574.05, costs of suit, the motion for a new trial be granted, and in the event of the filing of said written acceptance, it is ordered that said motion for a new trial be denied."

The second order was made ex parte without notice to defendant, apparently on the court's own motion. The first order was not consented to nor was it accepted by plaintiff, but, on September 19, 1916, plaintiff filed notice of his consent "in accordance with the order entered on motion for a new trial in said cause, on the 19th day of September, 1916." It appeared that defendant had no intimation that the court contemplated making the second order until September 27, 1916, when "defendant was preparing the records for the appeal herein, on the last day allowed by law for giving notice to have the record prepared and certified, under the provisions of law."

Defendant served and filed its notice of motion to set aside the said order of September 19, 1916. Said motion came on to be heard October 16, 1916, on the records in the case and on the affidavit of defendant's attorney, in which the facts above set forth were stated, and, on the same day, to wit, October 16, 1916, the court denied the motion. Defendant appealed from the judgment; also from the order made and entered October 16, 1916; also from the order made and entered September 19, 1916; also from the order made and entered September 18, 1916.

In Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. 596, 19 Pac. 174, the court said:

"After judgment upon the verdict had been entered and a motion for a new trial had been regularly made and denied, the court below was not authorized to set aside its action for mere error (citing cases). The foundation of this rule is that the modes in which a decision may be reviewed are prescribed by statute, and the courts are not at liberty to substitute other modes in their place."

In Holtum v. Greif, 144 Cal. 521, 78 Pac. 11, two orders were made, and the court said:

"The question, then, is as to the power of the trial court to vacate an order granting or denying a new trial after it has once been regularly made and entered. The decisions of this court are numerous and uniform to the effect that a judgment or order once regularly entered can be reviewed and set aside only in the modes prescribed by statute. If they have been entered prematurely, or by inadvertence, they may be set aside on a proper showing, * * * and if the order as entered is not the order as made, the minutes may be corrected so as to make them speak the truth, * * * but subject to these exceptions the order is reviewable only on appeal, and, the decision of the trial court having been once made after regular submission of the motion, its power is exhausted—it is functus officio."

The foregoing was quoted with approval in United Railroads v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. 755, 760, 151 Pac. 129, 132 (Ann. Cas. 1916E, 199), where the court also said:

"Nothing is more firmly settled in this state than the doctrine that the superior court may not revoke, modify, or otherwise disturb its judgments and orders regularly made in pursuance of plain statutory provision, where the statute prescribes the method by which such judgments and orders may be reviewed except as authorized by statute" (citing cases).

The contention of appellant is that the first order was duly entered after hearing and argument; that there was no clerical mistake or misprision and no inadvertence in making the order; that the order was not consented to or accepted by plaintiff, and by its terms a new trial was therefore granted. The only exception to the rule as laid down in the cases is where the judgment or order "has been entered prematurely or by inadvertence," as stated in Holtum v. Grief, supra. The second order recited that the first order is modified "to correct a mistake arising through inadvertence incorrectly recalling the testimony of plaintiff and other witnesses." Misapprehension as to the nature and extent of the testimony or of the effect of the testimony is not inadvertence. To warrant a practice by which the trial court, after an order has been regularly and deliberately entered, could after reflection for a day, re-examine or recall the testimony and reach a different conclusion and set aside his order, thus regularly and deliberately made, would introduce a most dangerous rule. The reason for making the order can mean nothing less than that upon a re-examination of the testimony the court has reached a different conclusion. The court added to the amount of recovery the substantial sum of $637.75, and this without notice to defendant. If, as has been held, orders or judgments may be set aside when entered prematurely or by inadvertence, it should be, it seems to us, on a proper showing. "The term 'inadvertence,' in Code sections 4501, 4502, allowing the Supreme Court after the term to vacate or correct mistakes in judgments given through inadvertence or oversight, does not apply to any judgment which was given upon the deliberate consideration and judgment of the court, though the court may have since adopted a different ruling as correct. It will be seen that the case provided is where judgment is given through inadvertence or oversight, and not where an opinion is formed from inadvertence and oversight." Russell v. Colyar, 51 Tenn. (4 Heisk.) 154, 176; 4 Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, p. 3489.

Wiggin v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 398, 9 Pac. 646, cited by respondent, is not applicable, for that was a collateral attack upon the decree. Baker v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., 73 Cal. 182, 14 Pac. 686, is relied on by respondent. In that case it appeared that:

"The motion (for a change of the place of trial) was at first granted, but on the following day the order granting the change as asked for was set aside upon the ground that it 'was inadvertently made,' and an order made denying such motion."

The report of the case does not show what proceedings took place in the trial court or under what circumstances the order was made. All that appears is that an appeal was taken from the order and the point made in the Supreme Court that the second order was void. Wiggin v. Superior Court, supra, is cited in the opinion as having decided the question adversely to appellants' contention. But in that case the attack was collateral. Hall v. Polack, 42 Cal. 218, is also cited in the opinion, but that was a case where the decree was prematurely made. We infer from the opinion that the court treated the reason for making the second order, to wit, inadvertence, either as having been shown or as falling under the rule that all intendments will be indulged in support of the order or judgment of a court of general jurisdiction.

We think defendant's right to a new trial, contingent upon plaintiff's failure to consent to or accept the order first made, was as sacred as plaintiff's right to a denial of a new trial upon his performance of the condition. In the present case, the order was that the motion for a new trial be granted "unless plaintiff files his written acceptance in this court of a reduction of the judgment," etc. Plaintiff did not file any acceptance under this order. The order, therefore, became operative granting defendant a new trial.

The judgment and the order appealed from are reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial. It is further ordered that the cause be heard on the testimony and evidence, or such parts thereof as the parties may desire to introduce, submitted at the former trial, and upon such further evidence as the parties, or either of them, may deem proper to offer.

We concur: HART, J., BURNETT, J.

38 Cal. App. 569

Ex parte SELOWSKY. (Cr. 456.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1918.)

1. NUISANCE ⊂⊃86 — RED LIGHT ABATEMENT ACT.

Red Light Abatement Act, § 6, prescribing penalty, as for contempt of court, for violation of injunction or order provided for in the act, relates to any injunction or order issued or made under such act, including the preliminary as well as the permanent injunction.

2. NUISANCE ⊂⊃84 — RED LIGHT ABATEMENT ACT—DECREE.

The Red Light Abatement Act, § 7, is not mandatory, and a decree of injunction need not contain a direction that the personal property should be sold or that the building or place where the nuisance was maintained should be closed to all use and for any purpose for the period of one year.

3. CONTEMPT ⊂⊃54(4), 63(4) — JUDGMENT — RECITAL OF FACTS.

A judgment adjudging one guilty of contempt need not contain a recital of facts, where the contempt was committed out of the immediate view and presence of the court or judge at chambers, but in such case it is necessary that the affidavits contain a recital of facts sufficient to show that a contempt has been committed, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.

4. NUISANCE ⊂⊃84 — RED LIGHT ABATEMENT ACT—VIOLATION OF INJUNCTIVE ORDER—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVITS—CONTEMPT OF COURT.

In a contempt proceeding under the Red Light Abatement Act, affidavits held to sufficiently charge facts constituting a violation of an injunctive order under such act.

5. NUISANCE ⊂⊃84—RED LIGHT ABATEMENT ACT—CONTEMPT—SUFFICIENCY OF AFFIDAVIT.

If affidavits disclose circumstances from which the conclusion must inevitably follow that acts constituting a nuisance enjoined by a decree in a proceeding under the Red Light Abatement Act, are carried on in defiance of the mandates of such decree, they are sufficient to invest the court with jurisdiction of a contempt proceeding.

6. NUISANCE ⊂⊃60—RED LIGHT ABATEMENT ACT — CONTEMPT — CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE.

Red Light Abatement Act, § 6, prescribing penalty for violation of the terms of any order or injunction made under such act, is not unconstitutional, as the Legislature has power to prescribe any reasonable penalty for contempt.

7. NUISANCE ⊂⊃60—VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION ORDER IN ABATEMENT ACTION.

Red Light Abatement Act, § 6, prescribing penalty for violation of an injunction order under such act, is not in conflict with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209, 1218, relating to contempt.

8. CONTEMPT ⊂⊃2—"CONTEMPT OF COURT"—NATURE OF OFFENSE.

The phrase "contempt of court," like the word "crime," is generic and expresses within its legal signification a variety of different acts which involve different elements, which, like the different acts constituting different crimes, differentiate the several acts, and the Legislature may fix the punishment according to the gravity of the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contempt.]

9. HABEAS CORPUS ⊂⊃92(3)—SCOPE OF INQUIRY.

In a habeas corpus proceeding brought to obtain release from imprisonment for constructive contempt, the inquiry is limited to the consideration of the question whether the court was, by affidavit filed, invested with jurisdiction to hear and determine the contempt proceedings.

Petition by Mary M. Selowsky for a writ of habeas corpus to secure her release from imprisonment. Alternative writ discharged, and prisoner remanded.

Frank J. Murphy, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Nathan F. Coombs and Frank L. Coombs, both of Napa, for respondent.

Uren, Beard & Linn, of Napa, amici curiæ.

HART, J. The petitioner has applied for a writ of habeas corpus to secure her release from imprisonment following a judgment of conviction of contempt of court, rendered by the superior court of Napa county, for the violation of the terms of a certain decree previously rendered by and entered in said court.

It appears from the petition that on the 20th day of March, 1917, the district attorney of Napa county filed a petition in the superior court of said county alleging that the petitioner here was using certain premises owned by her and known as the "Stone Bridge Saloon," being situated in Napa county, "for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution," and praying for a judgment of the court that said premises be declared a nuisance and that the same be perpetually enjoined; that, subsequently (on the 28th day of June, 1917), a trial was had upon the said petition and the answer thereto of the defendant (petitioner here); and that, on the 19th day of November, 1917, the court, upon findings that said premises were owned, in the possession of, maintained, and conducted by the petitioner as a place of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, entered its decree in said action, adjudging and declaring the said premises to be a nuisance and enjoining the further maintenance thereof by the defendant or any other person.

The petition here further shows that, on the 21st day of June, 1918, the district attorney of Napa county presented to the superior court of said county a verified petition, together with certain supporting affidavits, charging and alleging the petitioner here (Mary M. Selowsky) with violating the judgment and the injunction above mentioned, and praying for an order and citation directed to her, requiring her to appear before said court and show cause why she should not be punished for contempt of court therefor; that, upon the filing of said petition, an order was made requiring the said Selowsky to appear and show cause before said court on the 1st day of July, 1918, at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m.; that said order, together with a copy of the petition upon which it was made, having been served upon Selowsky, and she having made an answer to the same, a hearing on said petition was had on the day last above named, and on the 8th day of July, 1918, and thereupon the petitioner here was adjudged guilty of contempt of court in violating the judgment and injunction first above referred to and to pay a fine in the sum of $1,000 and in addition thereto to be imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Napa for a period of six months.

Annexed to and made a part of the petition for the writ here applied for are the judgment adjudging the premises mentioned a nuisance and enjoining the further maintenance of the same and the judgment adjudging the petitioner, Selowsky, guilty of contempt of court in that she violated the injunction and punishing her therefor.

The general proposition submitted for decision here is, of course, that the court below was without jurisdiction to adjudge the petitioner guilty of contempt and to punish her therefor. In support of this general proposition, a number of points are made and presented, and are submitted for decision on the petition for the writ and a demurrer interposed thereto by the respondent upon the general ground that said petition does not state sufficient facts to justify the granting of the writ.

It is contended by the petitioner that, for reasons to be hereinafter considered, the proceeding instituted against her in the superior court for the abatement of the nuisance complained of therein was not inaugurated under the so-called "Red Light Abatement" statute, but was brought under the general law of the state authorizing the abatement of nuisances. It is hence argued that, if the petitioner was guilty of contempt of court in that she violated the terms of the injunction issued in said proceeding, she must have been tried and should have been punished for contempt under the sections of the Code of Civil Procedure providing generally for the trial and punishment for contempt of court. See Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209–1218, inclusive. It is further contended that the affidavits upon which the proceeding in contempt was founded do not state facts sufficient to constitute a violation of the injunction order of the judgment in the original action and hence insufficient to have clothed the court with jurisdiction to try and punish the petitioner for contempt; that the facts recited in the judgment in the contempt proceeding do not show that the petitioner violated the terms of the original judgment. It is also claimed that section 6 of the abatement act, establishing the measure of punishment for any violation of the decrees entered under the provisions of said act, is unconstitutional, or, at least, in conflict with the law prescribing generally the power of courts in the matter of punishing for contempt, and is therefore void.

It would, perhaps, be the more orderly course first to set forth the salient provisions of the abatement act.

Section 2 provides that—

> Any "building or place used for the purpose of lewdness assignation or prostitution," or wherein or upon which such acts "are held or occur, is a nuisance which shall be enjoined, abated and prevented as hereinafter provided, whether the same be a public or a private nuisance."

The third section provides that whenever there is reason to believe that such a nuisance is kept, maintained, or exists, in any county, etc., the district attorney of said county must, or any citizen of the state, residing within said county, in his own name may, maintain an action in equity to abate and prevent the nuisance and to perpetually enjoin the person or persons so conducting or maintaining the same, and the owner or lessee or agent of the building, or place, in or upon which such nuisance exists, from directly or indirectly maintaining or permitting such nuisance.

Section 4 provides that, when the existence of such nuisance is shown by a verified complaint, or an affidavit, the court or judge may issue a temporary injunction for its abatement.

The sixth section provides the penalty, as for a contempt of court, for the violation or disobedience of any injunction or order expressly provided for in the act, which is not less than $200 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment in the county jail for not less than one month nor more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Section 7 is as follows:

"If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action as provided herein, an order of abatement shall be entered as a part of the judgment in the case, which order shall direct the removal from the building or place of all fixtures, musical instruments and movable property used in conducting, maintaining, aiding or abetting the nuisance, and shall direct the sale thereof in the manner provided for the sale of chattels under execution, and the effectual closing of the building or place against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a period of one year, unless sooner released, as hereinafter provided. While such order remains in effect as to closing, such building or place shall be and remain in the custody of the court. For removing and selling the movable property, the officer shall be entitled to charge and receive the same fees as he would for levying upon and selling like property on execution, and for closing the premises and keeping them closed, a reasonable sum shall be allowed by the court."

Section 9 reads:

"If the owner of the building or place has not been guilty of any contempt of court in the proceedings, and appears and pays all costs, fees and allowances which are a lien on the building or place and files a bond in the full value of the property, to be ascertained by the court, with sureties to be approved by the court or judge, conditioned that he will immediately abate any such nuisance that may exist at such building or place and prevent the same from being established or kept thereat within a period of one year thereafter, the court, or judge thereof, may, if satisfied of his good faith, order the premises, closed under the order of abatement, to be delivered to said owner, and said order of abatement canceled so far as the same may relate to said property. The release of the property under the provisions of this section shall not release it from any judgment, lien, penalty or liability to which it may be subject by law." Stats. 1913, pp. 20, 21.

[1] The contention that the original action for the abatement of the nuisance complained of against the petitioner cannot be held to have been brought under the "Red Light Abatement Act" is based upon the proposition, pressed by petitioner with apparent earnestness, that the act does not clothe a court of equity with power to grant a perpetual injunction. The argument is that the power perpetually to enjoin nuisances of any kind or character existed in courts of equity long before the passage of said act; that the provision therein giving the courts power to issue perpetual injunctions adds nothing to the power already exercised by courts of equity; and that therefore the provision prescribing a penalty for a violation of any injunction or order issued or made in a case arising under said act has reference solely to the violation of the terms of the preliminary restraining order which the law authorizes the court to make upon the filing of a petition for the abatement of the alleged nuisance.

There is no merit in the contention or the argument. The law plainly provides, in the third section thereof, that an action may be brought for the purpose of "perpetually" enjoining the nuisance denounced by the act. The fourth section, properly construed, means that the court may, upon the filing of a verified complaint or affidavit showing the existence of the nuisance, issue a temporary injunction for the purpose of stopping a continuance of the nuisance pending the final adjudication, and section 7 provides for a perpetual injunction upon the establishment of the existence of the nuisance after a trial of the action. The provision of section 6, prescribing the penalty, relates to "any" injunction or order issued or made in the action, and, of course, includes the preliminary as well as the permanent injunction.

[2] But it was further pointed out, in oral argument, in support of the proposition that the action was not instituted under the abatement act, that the judgment entered in said action does not contain the order provided for by section 7 of said act, directing the removal from the building wherein the nuisance is alleged to have been maintained and the sale of "all fixtures, musical instruments and movable property used in conducting * * * the nuisance," nor directing the "effectual closing of the building * * * against its use for any purpose, and so keeping it closed for a * * * year."

One answer to that proposition is to be found in the fact that the complaint and the judgment in the original action closely follow the language of the abatement act, except in so far as that the judgment fails to direct a sale of the personal property, if any, used in the maintenance of the nuisance, and does not order that the building in which said nuisance was alleged and found to have been maintained shall not be used for any purpose for the period of one year. But, as to that provision of the statute, it is to be remarked that, while the language thereof appears to be mandatory, we do not believe that it was intended by the Legislature that in all cases, regardless of the particular circumstances thereof, the judgment, to be valid, so far as its injunctive feature is concerned, should contain a direction that the personal property should be sold or that the building or place where the nuisance was maintained should be closed to all use or for any purpose for the period of one year. Cases under the act may arise which are not so flagrant in the law's violation as in others. As, for instance, a building may be used by a tenant for the immoral purposes denounced by the statute without the knowledge of the owner thereof and in defiance of his wishes or sentiments regarding such a business. In such a case, it would, indeed, be manifestly unjust to deprive the owner of the building of its use for the period of a year for a lawful and decent purpose. On the other hand, the owner of the building himself might let it for use for the immoral purposes referred to or he might have knowledge that it was being so used, and, for the sake of the compensation received for its use for such purposes, close his eyes to the nuisance and thus tacitly indorse, if not in effect connive at, the maintenance of the same. Thus it is to be observed that the circumstances of all cases arising under the statute may not be similar—some cases calling for decrees as drastic in their effect as the statute will permit and others for a more temperate treatment. It is therefore very clear that, if the provisions of the statute as to what the judgment may contain must be held to be mandatory and applied alike in all cases, gross injustice would, in many conceivable cases, necessarily follow the enforcement of the statute. The court would be without discretion to model its decree so that it could be justly appropriate to the peculiar circumstances of certain cases. In other words, the court would be without the power to differentiate between cases arising under the act according to the peculiar circumstances thereof.

The above reasoning is equally pertinent to the proposition that the judgment must direct a sale of the personal property used in connection with the maintenance of the nuisance. Such property might be owned by a person wholly innocent of and, indeed, opposed to the immoral purpose for which it was used, and certainly it would not be a just law that would sanction the confiscation of such a person's personal property.

A judgment similar to the one here was entered in the case of People ex rel. Bradford v. Dillman et al., 174 Pac. 951, and, while the question now under discussion was not raised in that case, the judgment therein was, nevertheless, affirmed; the assumption of both the attorneys and the court being, evidently, that the judgment, in substance as well as in form, was one which might appropriately be rendered and entered under the statute.

[3] As to the point that the judgment in the contempt proceeding does not itself show contempt, it may be observed that it is only where the alleged contempt is committed in the immediate view and presence of the court that the judgment in such a proceeding must contain a recital of facts sufficient to show that a contempt has been committed. In the case of a constructive contempt—that is, where the alleged contempt is committed out of the immediate view and presence of the court or judge at chambers—the proceeding must be inaugurated by the filing of an affidavit or of affidavits, reciting the facts constituting the contempt. Code Civ. Proc. § 1211.

In Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 284, 63 Pac. 372, 374, the court said:

"In the case of a contempt committed in the presence of the court, the section (1211, C. C. P.) says that the order adjudicating the contempt must contain a recital of the facts. This provision can only mean that the order must contain a recital of those facts * * * which, in a case of constructive contempt, the law says must be incorporated in an affidavit." (Italics ours.)

But, of course, in the case of a constructive contempt the affidavit or affidavits must contain a recital of facts sufficient to show that a contempt has been committed. Or, as this proposition is stated in Hutton v. Superior Court, 147 Cal. 159, 81 Pac. 409, 410:

"The affidavit or affidavits upon which the contempt proceeding is based constitute the complaint, and unless they, upon their face, charge facts constituting a contempt, the court is without jurisdiction to proceed."

See, also, Batchelder v. Moore, 42 Cal. 415; Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 284, 63 Pac. 372; Rogers v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 91, 78 Pac. 344; Frowley v. Superior Court, 158 Cal. 220, 226, 110 Pac. 817; Mitchell v. Superior Court, 163 Cal. 423, 125 Pac. 1061.

The present question, then, is whether the affidavits upon which the contempt proceeding against the petitioner was based show facts sufficient to constitute a contempt.

Two affidavits were filed as the basis of the proceeding—one by John de Vries and the other by E. A. Kelton, sheriff of Napa county. In the affidavit of De Vries it is alleged:

That, on the 1st day of May, 1918, affiant visited the building in which the nuisance interdicted by the court's decree was maintained by the petitioner; that, at that time, said building was occupied by the petitioner and two other women; that, at said time, the petitioner sold and served affiant with intoxicating liquors in said building, for which he paid petitioner $1, and that the liquors so served in said house were drunk by affiant, the petitioner, who was acting as landlady of said house, and the two other women; "that said building was then and there run, operated, and conducted as a house of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution by the said Mrs. M. Selowsky; * * * that two of said women, inmates and prostitutes of said house of prostitution, then and there solicited from affiant acts of sexual intercourse for hire, stating that they would commit acts of prostitution with affiant for prices of $2 for each act of prostitution, and also solicited affiant to stay all night with one of them for the purpose of prostitution for a price of $6; that affiant has investigated many houses of prostitution and is familiar with the manner in which houses of prostitution are conducted, and knows of his own knowledge that the aforesaid place was conducted as a house of prostitution, that two of the women were dressed in the garb usually worn by prostitutes in many houses of prostitution, being loose fitting, short dresses; and that said place was conducted only in a manner in which a house of prostitution is conducted."

The affidavit of Sheriff Kelton alleges:

"That on the 18th day of May, 1918, he, in company with officers of the law, visited the premises belonging to Mrs. M. Selowsky, mentioned and set forth in the judgment in said cause, made, signed, and filed herein on the 19th day of November, 1917, and that at said time said Mrs. M. Selowsky was still the owner and in charge of said premises, and was keeping and maintaining a house of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, assisted by one Florence Ponta, as follows: That at said time, said Florence Ponta occupied a room at said premises with a man, and affiant verily believes committed with him then and there the acts of illicit sexual intercourse; that thereafter, and on the same day, said Florence Ponta occupied a room at said premises with another man and, as affiant believes, committed such acts; that said premises set forth in said judgment hereinbefore referred to, and occupied by said Mrs. M. Selowsky, sometimes known as and called Mary M. Selowsky and Mrs. M. Krueger, on the 18th day of May, 1918, were in charge of said Mrs. M. Selowsky, and was conducted as a house of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution; that Florence Ponta, one of the inmates thereof, is a prostitute, and was working in said house for said Mrs. M. Selowsky as a prostitute. That affiant, by reason of his long experience as a sheriff, is familiar with houses of prostitution and knows of his own knowledge that said premises, on said date, were being maintained, conducted, and operated by said Mrs. M. Selowsky as a house of lewdness, and that all of said acts of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, committed on said premises, were committed with the knowledge and approval of said Mrs. M. Selowsky, and for her personal financial gain, and for the purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution."

The specific objections to the affidavits are that they do not charge that the alleged solicitation of the acts of sexual intercourse referred to therein was carried on with the knowledge of the petitioner; that it is not made to appear therefrom that the women mentioned would or intended to commit the proposed acts of prostitution upon the premises, "or that they solicited affiant to stay all night upon the premises"; that the allegations in the affidavits that the building was at the time mentioned being conducted as a house of prostitution involve the mere conclusions or unsupported opinions of affiants.

[4, 5] We shall not attempt to follow the ramifications of the very able argument advanced in support of the claim that the affidavits, either taken alone or together, do not make out a sufficient case of contempt against the petitioner to have given the court jurisdiction to inquire into the charge. It will be enough to say that, in our opinion, in the character of cases arising under the abatement act, the affidavits sufficiently charge facts constituting a violation of the injunctive order made against the petitioner in the original action and hence a contempt of court.

It is obviously true that, to prove that a building or a house is maintained for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, circumstantial evidence must necessarily be relied upon, for, particularly as to acts of prostitution or assignation, it is rarely the case that direct evidence in support of such a fact may be obtained or is available. Sexual relations between the sexes are, of course, always carried on clandestinely. Such performances, it is to be apprehended, are seldom ever witnessed by persons save those engaged therein. Hence, in proving illicit sexual relations between the opposite sexes, where the proof of such acts is indispensably necessary to the establishment of a case, either civil or criminal, circumstances sufficiently potent in probative force must always or invariably be wholly relied upon. For instance, it is a crime under section 647 of the Penal Code for any person to live in or about houses of ill fame or to be a common prostitute. To show that a person is a vagrant because he lives in and about houses of ill fame, which generally are houses of prostitution, the character of the house where the accused is charged with living in and about must necessarily be shown. The character of a female charged with being a common prostitute must, of course, be proved, for her character as such is the gist of the charge. Again, a charge based on section 315 of the Penal Code, which penalizes the act of keeping a house of ill fame, resorted to for the purposes of prostitution or lewdness, cannot be sustained without proof that prostitution or lewdness is practiced therein. Neither of these offenses could ever be established if it were requisite under the law to show by positive evidence that specific acts of prostitution had been practiced in the house or by the females. So it is true as to cases arising under the abatement act in which it is essential, to establish the nuisance thereby denounced, to prove that the building or place is maintained for the purposes of lewdness, assignation, or prostitution. While, as we shall later see, lewdness may with little difficulty be shown by direct proof, prostitution or assignation, or the essential acts constituting the same, cannot be so proved. In any of the cases thus referred to, the fact that a female is a prostitute or the fact that a house is one where prostitution or assignation is carried on may be proved by evidence of the general reputation of the female or of the house in that respect. Indeed, the abatement act, as is also true of section 315 of the Penal Code with reference to the crime therein denounced, expressly provides that such proof is admissible in support of the charge that a nuisance of the character of that at the suppression of which said act is particularly aimed is being maintained in a building or place, and that provision was undoubtedly predicated upon common knowledge of the fact that the specific acts which must of necessity habitually be practiced in a building or house to constitute the nuisance denounced by said act cannot well be proved by direct evidence. No more, so far as the character of the proof is concerned, should be or is required in laying the foundation for a contempt proceeding arising under the abatement act by reason of an alleged violation of the terms of any injunction or order issued or made thereunder. In other words, if the affidavit or affidavits disclose circumstances from which the conclusion must inevitably follow that the acts constituting the nuisance enjoined by the decree entered in the action for the abatement of said nuisance are carried on in defiance of the mandates of such decree, then they must be held to be sufficient in the statement of a case of contempt, and to invest the court with jurisdiction of the contempt proceeding.

In the present case, as will be noted, the affidavit of De Vries declares that one of the women in the house in question solicited him to have sexual relations with her at a specified price. This was not only of itself an act of lewdness (see Webster's Dict.; Cyclopedic Law Dict.), but tended to show that the building or house was carried on as a place of prostitution or assignation. He further declared that he had had considerable experience in the investigation of houses of prostitution and stated without qualification that the place was conducted as a house of prostitution; that liquors were therein dispensed; and that the women inmates of the house were garbed in the attire usually worn by prostitutes.

Sheriff Kelton's affidavit states that the petitioner was conducting a house of prostitution at the place in question, assisted by one Florence Ponta, a female; that the latter occupied a room in said house on two different occasions on the day he (affiant) was there with two different men; that said Florence Ponta is a prostitute, and that he verily believes that she practiced sexual acts with the two men referred to; that said acts were committed with the knowledge and approval of said Mary M. Selowsky.

Upon the facts set forth in the affidavits a judgment or verdict would, in our opinion, safely rest in any case where it is legally requisite to prove acts of prostitution or of assignation or of lewdness to establish the ultimate fact or a crime, and, if they are sufficient for such purposes, then certainly they are sufficient to show that the decree in the original action was knowingly violated by the petitioner and consequently a contempt of court committed by her.

It is, of course, to be conceded that the belief of the affiant that the Ponta woman cohabited and had illicit relations with the two men cannot be accepted as evidence of that fact, but that allegation in the affidavit may be eliminated and still there remain sufficient facts to show that the building was then being conducted for the purposes of prostitution or assignation, or, at any rate, that lewdness was practiced therein.

[6, 7] We now come to the consideration of the question whether section 6 of the abatement act, prescribing the penalty for the violation of the terms of any order or injunction made or issued in an action arising under said act, is or is not valid. As stated above, the contention is that the section is unconstitutional and is in conflict with sections 1209 and 1218 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The same contention was made in People v. Barbiere, 33 Cal. App. 770–780, 166 Pac. 812, 816, and therein we expressed our views upon the question as to the validity of said section of the act. In that case, among other things, it was said:

"But we do not acquiesce in the view that section 6 of the abatement law either affects or is affected by the Code section referred to. We know of no constitutional limitation upon the right of the Legislature to fix reasonable penalties for contempts of the judgments, decrees, orders, or processes of courts of justice, and, in admeasuring such punishments, to assign, as it may do and has done in cases of public crime, to certain acts of contempt a greater or less penalty than is annexed to others, according to the nature of the contempt with respect to the subject-matter of the adjudication violated and the consequences of such violation to the public or to individual rights."

We have found no occasion to recede from the views thus expressed. Certainly it cannot justly be contended that the Legislature may not amend section 1218 of the Code of Civil Procedure by prescribing a more severe penalty for any contempt of court than is now thereby prescribed. If therefore section 6 of the abatement act is void, it is not because the Legislature is without the power and the right under the Constitution to prescribe any reasonable penalty it may see fit for contempt in the violation of decrees, judgments, orders, processes entered, made, or issued by the courts, or for other misbehavior affecting or militating against the dignity of a court of justice or which is calculated to circumvent the ends of its judicial mandates, but solely for the reason that said section is in conflict with the provisions of section 1218 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to which proposition, as seen, we have expressed an adverse opinion in the Barbiere Case.

[8] Counsel for the petitioner says, however:

"While contempt of court may consist of a variety of acts, it is always the same offense. Contempt of court is not punished as a crime, strictly speaking, but purely as a vindication of the authority of the court."

In support of the proposition last stated by counsel, the case of Anargyros v. Anargyros & Co. (C. C.) 191 Fed. 208, and 13 Corpus Juris, pp. 4, 5, are cited; but neither of those authorities supports the statement of counsel, but, to the contrary, both distinctly recognize the proposition that there are two general classes of contempt, divided into criminal and civil. The contempt charged here very clearly comes within the category of criminal contempts. As to the proposition first stated by counsel, it is to be observed that the phrase "contempt of court," like the word "crime," is generic, and, as counsel says, embraces within its legal signification a variety of different acts, but such acts involve different elements which, like the different acts constituting different crimes, differentiate the several acts. No one has ever questioned the right of the Legislature to fix the punishment for crime according to the gravity of the offense or according to the degree of moral turpitude inhering in the particular criminal act. Why should not the same right be exercised by the Legislature in the matter of contempts of court? Should there in reason be meted out to the individual who violates an injunction against hydraulic mining, for instance, the effect of the general prosecution of which industry it has been shown is to destroy thousands of acres of the earth's soil, the direct and fundamental source of all material prosperity and happiness, than to the person who has been guilty of some refractory conduct in the presence of the court, or who has violated, to the damage or detriment of the rights of a single person only, some injunction? The violation of an injunction issued or made a part of the judgment rendered and entered in an action instituted under the abatement act involves the commission of acts which have been denounced by the Legislature as a crime (Pen. Code, §§ 315 and 316), and in this case the petitioner by her act in violating the injunction issued by the court to restrain her from maintaining the nuisance described in the act not only set at defiance a solemn judgment of a court of justice but committed a crime for which she could be prosecuted and punished under the sections of the Penal Code above named. Such a case, it will not be denied, calls for the infliction of a much more severe penalty than does the case where the contempt grows out of the violation of mere individual rights, in which society generally has only an indirect or a comparatively indifferent interest. It is true that the object of all contempt proceedings is to vindicate the authority of the court as well as to uphold the majesty of the law, yet, as above stated, there are, in their effect upon individual rights as well as upon society, degrees of turpitude in contempts of court which make the variety of acts constituting such contempt as different from each other as petit larceny is from grand.

We read nothing in the case of Ex parte Clancy, 90 Cal. 552, 555, et seq., 27 Pac. 411, which conflicts with the foregoing views. In that case, the petitioner had been adjudicated an insolvent debtor under the state insolvent act. The petitioner refused to obey an order of the court made in the insolvency proceeding commanding him to turn over and pay to the receiver in said proceeding certain assets of the value of $4,000. He was proceeded against in contempt and was adjudged guilty of contempt of court. Section 64 of the insolvent act provided that—

"All sections of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California relating to contempts are hereby made applicable to all proceedings under this act."

But it further provided that—

"An appeal shall be allowed to the Supreme Court from any order adjudging any person guilty of a contempt of court."

In a concurring opinion, joined in by Justice De Haven and Chief Justice Beatty, Justice Harrison held that the provision allowing appeals from judgments of contempt growing out of proceedings had under the insolvent act was in conflict with section 1222 of the Code of Civil Procedure, providing that "the judgment and orders of the court or judge, made in cases of contempt, are final and conclusive," and remarked:

"To give effect to this provision of the insolvent act is to permit an appeal from judgments of contempt in one class of cases which, under the general law applicable to contempts, is denied to all other judgments for the same offense. Such construction would except cases arising in insolvency from the uniform operation of this general law, and thereby destroy its uniformity and violate the provisions of section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution."

Judge Harrison further said:

"Any law for the punishment of this offense is necessarily of a general nature, and must have a uniform operation. It was not competent for the Legislature to provide a different procedure for contempts of the superior court committed while in the exercise of its jurisdiction in proceedings for insolvency from that which is provided for those committed while it is exercising its jurisdiction in any other matter."

It is the language just quoted from which the petitioner derives the notion that the court in that decision held that it is not within the competence of the Legislature to fix different penalties for different acts of contempt. But that language cannot be so construed in our opinion. Obviously, the point that Judge Harrison was making and did make was that the procedure for proceedings in contempt was required to be the same in all cases and that any law providing punishment for contempt—that is, a law authorizing punishment to be enforced for contempt of court—"is necessarily of a general nature and must have a uniform operation." In other words, it is not held by Judge Harrison that, to make the law conform to the Constitution, the punishment shall be uniform or the same in all cases.

[9] We have no reason for doubting that the affidavits contain sufficient facts to show that a contempt of court had been committed and to have given the court jurisdiction of this proceeding. What the evidence taken at the trial of the contempt proceeding disclosed, we are not advised by the record before us, nor is it necessary to the decision here that we should know what such evidence showed, since the scope of the inquiry in this proceeding is limited to the consideration of the question whether the court was by the affidavits filed herein invested with jurisdiction to hear and determine the contempt proceeding.

The alternative writ is discharged, and the prisoner remanded.

CO-OPERATIVE JUNK CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. BOARD OF POLICE COM'RS OF CITY OF LOS ANGELES et al. (Civ. 2746.)

1. LICENSES ⟸16(11)—JUNK DEALERS.

That thieves frequently dispose of their plunder to junk dealers is sufficient to bring those occupations within the field wherein, in the exercise of its police power, a city may vest in its police commission a discretion in the matter of granting permits for licenses.

2. LICENSES ⟸22—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE —DISCRETION—REVIEW.

Where a municipal ordinance provided that a license to conduct the business of a junk dealer should not be granted until the police commissioners shall have granted a permit therefor, held, that an applicant for a license to conduct the business of a junk dealer is not entitled to a permit upon compliance with the formal requirements, but the police commissioners have a discretion which will not be interfered with by the courts in the absence of positive proof of abuse.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸840(1) — REVIEW — SCOPE.

Where the judgment itself showed that the trial court abandoned the trial upon the facts and rendered judgment on the pleadings, the facts found cannot be considered by the appellate court; it appearing that the judgment on the pleadings was improper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Application by the Co-operative Junk Company of California, a corporation, for a writ of mandate against the Board of Police Commissioners of the City of Los Angeles and others. From a judgment on the pleadings, granting the writ, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., W. P. Mealey, Deputy City Atty., Erwin W. Widney, City Prosecutor, and W. K. Crawford, Deputy City Prosecutor, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Shapiro & Shapiro, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The defendants appeal from a judgment awarding to the plaintiff a writ of mandate. Although the case went to trial upon the complaint and answer, the court did not make any findings of fact or conclusions of law, and the judgment seems to have been entered pursuant to a motion for judgment on the pleadings. The judgment states that the case came on regularly to be heard before the court sitting without a jury, and that—

"Witnesses for the plaintiff and defendant having been sworn and examined, whereupon counsel for petitioners moved the court for an order directing that a writ of mandate issue herein, upon the pleadings of the respective parties, and, now being fully advised in the premises, the court doth adjudge and order that the defendants and each of them issue to the said Co-operative Junk Company of California a permit for a license to conduct a junk dealer business in the city of Los Angeles," etc.

[1, 2] The plaintiff's claim of right to a permit for a license to conduct the business of junk dealer in the city of Los Angeles is based upon a city ordinance, a copy of which is set out in the complaint. That is an ordinance regulating certain businesses, including the business of junk dealers and the business of junk collectors. It is provided that the city clerk shall not issue a license to any person to conduct the business of junk dealer until the board of police commissioners shall have granted a permit therefor; that any person desiring to obtain a permit to carry on that business shall file an application in writing therefor with the board of police commissioners, specifying by street and number the place where such business is proposed to be conducted; that it shall be unlawful for any person to carry on the business of junk dealer without first applying for and receiving a permit therefor in writing from the board of police commissioners. The ordinance contains numerous regulatory provisions which the city council deemed to be appropriate in order that businesses of that kind might be conducted in accordance with public welfare.

The complaint shows that the plaintiff was a corporation duly organized for the purpose of conducting the business of junk dealer; that the plaintiff made and filed its application in writing for a permit, as required by the terms of the ordinance, and complied in all respects with the formalities necessary under the ordinance to bring its application before the board of police commissioners. It is alleged that the board of police commissioners denied the application of the petitioner and refused to issue a permit for the demanded license; that the petitioner demanded from the board an explanation of the reasons for such refusal, but the board refused to make any statement of such reasons; that the petitioner "is being discriminated upon and improperly oppressed by the said board of police commissioners." There is no allegation that the board or its members refused to hear the application upon its merits, or that they were actuated by malice or by desire to promote a monopoly or by any corrupt motive.

The argument of counsel for respondent shows that the plaintiff is proceeding upon the theory that the issuance of a permit of the kind here demanded is a ministerial act, concerning which no discretionary power is vested in the board of police commissioners.

Counsel for respondent claim that it was not incumbent upon respondent to establish abuse of discretion by appellants. They insist that it must be assumed that, upon complying with the formal requirements incident to an application for a permit as provided by the ordinance, the applicant is entitled as of right to have the permit issued. As authority for this rule, they rely upon such cases as Henry v. Barton, 107 Cal. 535, 40 Pac. 798. There a judgment was affirmed which awarded a writ of mandate requiring the issuance of a retail liquor license. The court says:

"The ordinances of the city of San Bernardino, as they now stand, entitle every man who complies with their provisions to a retail liquor license, and this respondent complied with these provisions. Trustees of cities have no power except that given them by express provision of law, and we find no power in any of these ordinances vesting in them discretion as to the granting or denying an application for a liquor license. In the absence of some express legislative enactment granting such right, there is no principle of law that will allow the trustees of any city to say that a liquor license shall be granted to A. and the same right denied to B."

We think, however, that there is a very great difference between the ordinance upon which plaintiff's claim was based in that case and the ordinance in question here. The city of San Bernardino at that time did not by its ordinance attempt in the exercise of its police power to vest in any officer or board the right or duty to examine into applications for licenses and grant or withhold permits therefor by the exercise of a supervisory discretion in such matters. But the city of Los Angeles, in the exercise of its undoubted police powers, has determined that the business of junk dealer is one which requires constant police supervision, and that licenses to conduct such business shall not issue as of course to every applicant. It is perfectly plain that, when by ordinance it was provided that a license shall not issue until a permit therefor shall have been granted by the board of police commissioners, it was intended that the board shall examine into every such application and determine for itself whether or not the proposed place of business is appropriately located, and whether or not the applicant is a fit and proper person to be permitted to conduct such business. Considering the nature of the business and the special dangers to the public which would follow from the improper conduct thereof, there is no doubt in our minds that the business is one peculiarly appropriate to police supervision, although when properly conducted it is a perfectly legitimate business. Without casting any imputation upon the integrity and honesty of junk dealers, junk collectors, or pawnbrokers, it must be admitted that those occupations furnish a market where thieves frequently seek to turn into cash their ill-gotten plunder. This fact is sufficient to bring these occupations within the field wherein, in the exercise of its police power, the city may vest in its police commission a discretion in the matter of granting permits for licenses.

"Holding as we do the right of the city under the charter to enact the ordinance under consideration, a court will not interfere with the discretion reposed in a proper board or tribunal, but will assume that official duty has been properly and lawfully performed, in the absence of positive proof to the contrary." Goytino v. McAleer, 4 Cal. App. 655, 88 Pac. 991.

[3] The fact that the court heard evidence in this case cannot be considered by us, since the judgment itself shows that the court abandoned the trial upon the facts and rendered judgment upon the pleadings. For the reasons which have been stated, we are of the opinion that the complaint did not state a cause of action. It follows that the court erred in granting judgment upon the pleadings.

The judgment is reversed.

FARQUHARSON v. SCOBLE et al.
(Civ. 2520.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 16, 1918.)

1. COVENANTS ⊂=20 — RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS—IMPLICATION.

The mere fact that a landowner made and filed a map showing different subdivisions and sold lots in conformity therewith does not by implication raise a covenant in favor of purchasers which will prevent the landowner from disposing of the unsold portion of his lots singly or in bulk, or by subdivisions into smaller parcels; this being particularly true where the map itself showed the lots to be irregular in size.

2. COVENANTS ⊂=20 — RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS—IMPLICATION.

Where a landowner who platted premises for an exclusive residential subdivision incorporated in deeds side-line restrictions, but such restrictions were varied and there was no general scheme, it appearing that when fixed they were subject to change by agreement by contiguous or abutting owners, held, that there was no restrictive covenant that purchasers could enforce and require the owner to incorporate in its deeds to unsold portions.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Seawell, Judge.

Suit by Charles D. Farquharson against Thomas Scoble and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Houghton & Houghton and Edward T. Houghton, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harding & Monroe, of San Francisco, for respondent John Brickell Company.

Robert H. Borland, of San Francisco, for respondent Thomas Scoble.

LENNON, P. J. This is a suit in equity to enforce certain alleged building covenants claimed to be provided for under a general building plan designed by defendant John Brickell Company for the improvement, subdivision, and sale of a certain tract of land situated in the city and county of San Francisco, fronting on the Golden Gate and known as Seacliff. Demurrers to the complaint were interposed by the defendants, and were sustained by the trial court mainly upon the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and this appeal is from the judgment entered in favor of the defendants upon failure on the part of plaintiff to amend. The sufficiency of the complaint, therefore, is the single question presented by this appeal.

It is unnecessary to recite in detail the elaborate matters of inducement indulged in by plaintiff in stating his cause of action. The substance of the allegations necessary for a discussion of the case is: First, that the Brickell Company adopted in the subdivision of the tract of land above referred to what courts have called a "general building plan," under which the parcels subdivided were to be used for high-class restricted residences. The complaint then alleges that in the formation of such plan an elaborate and detailed map was prepared by defendant showing the subdivision of the tract into lots, and that sales were made to plaintiff and others in accordance therewith and under the representation that all the subdivisions would be disposed of in conformity with such map and subject to certain restrictive building covenants designed for the development of the tract as a whole and for the benefit of every purchaser in particular. It further alleges that the defendant John Brickell Company had sold to the defendant Thomas Scoble parcels of land contiguous to the lots owned by plaintiff not in accordance with the subdivision as contained on the map under which it had represented the land would be sold, and subject to restrictive building covenants relating to the location of residence building with respect to side-line boundaries less onerous than those imposed on the adjoining property of plaintiff. It also avers by affirmative allegation and by the recital of certain facts a knowledge on the part of Scoble of the general building plan adopted by his codefendant, John Brickell Company, and of the restrictive covenants contained therein relating to the location of buildings that might be erected on the various subdivisions, and a further knowledge on the part of Scoble of the map showing the dimensions of the different parcels. The allegations as to notice, however, refer to a period of time subsequent to the purchase by Scoble of the lots in question. Other allegations show the commencement of the construction of a residence by Scoble in violation of these restrictive covenants.

In the prayer of the complaint the plaintiff asks for relief by injunction restraining the defendant Scoble from erecting a residence except in accordance with the general plan under which all sales prior to the sale to Scoble had been made. Cancellation of the conveyance is also asked for on such terms as the court deems just.

The theory of plaintiff's case and the principle upon which his claim for relief is based is that where, as here, the owner of a tract of land has laid it out and offered it for sale under a general plan, he has no right to change or modify such plan, either by subdivision of the tract into smaller lots than originally laid out, or by releasing the unsold portion from restrictive conditions imposed on the sold portion, or modifying such conditions, to the disadvantage of the latter and the benefit of the former.

Respondents do not deny the correctness of this doctrine, but claim that the facts of the case afford no foundation for its application.

The restrictive building covenants contained in plaintiff's deed provided that all residence buildings erected on the lots in question should be placed back at least eight feet from the front, and at least three feet from one and seven feet from the other side boundary lines of said lots as platted and designated on the map. There is no restriction in the Scoble deed fixing the distance a residence must be set back from the front line, and the restrictions of three and seven feet imposed upon plaintiff's lots in respect to certain side boundary lines is reduced and cut down to one foot on the easterly and increased to eight feet on the westerly line. It is not claimed by defendants that a general plan as to street-line restrictions has not been properly pleaded, and defendants admit that through error no front-line limitation was inserted in the Scoble deeds. There is, however, no allegation in the complaint showing any violation of this restriction, nor is it claimed that the building being erected is not in accord therewith. Plaintiff's cause of complaint is thus narrowed down to the proposition as to whether or not under his pleadings the defendant John Brickell Company is precluded from selling, and the defendant Thomas Scoble from purchasing, any land in this particular subdivision of Seacliff: First, other than in the parcels and lots as platted and shown upon the map which the former caused to be prepared to assist in presenting that general scheme under which the tract was offered for sale; and, second, with restrictive building covenants less onerous or burdensome than those imposed on other lots in the tract similarly located.

[1] With reference to the first question, plaintiff does not claim that any express restrictive covenants are contained in any of the deeds of the company against the sale of lots in dimensions contrary to the subdivisions as claimed on the map. Upon this subject he alleges that defendant Brickell Company had represented to all purchasers of lots that sales would be made in accordance therewith. This allegation, however, is merely a general one, for it appears from other recitals in the complaint that such allegations as to representations is predicated upon the legal effect of the company's act in filing its map. In our opinion, the covenant here claimed cannot be implied from the mere making and filing of the map showing the different subdivisions, or by selling lots in conformity therewith. The right of an owner in such a case to dispose of the unsold portions of his lots singly or in bulk, or by subdivision into smaller parcels, is in no manner limited or impaired thereby. Herold v. Real Est. Co., 72 N. J. Eq. 857, 67 Atl. 608, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1067, 129 Am. St. Rep. 718, 16 Ann. Cas. 580. Of course, limiting and restrictive covenants when valid will be enforced; but when claimed courts will construe them strictly against the person seeking their enforcement, and when none are contemplated, they will not be created. In their absence a vendee cannot be held to a restrictive use of his property. That uniformity in the dimensions of the lots was never contemplated is shown by the map itself, for no uniformity exists with reference to the size or shape of the lots as laid out in the subdivision. We are therefore of the opinion that the complaint in this particular fails to state a cause of action, and we are of the further opinion that there is no merit in appellant's second contention with reference to the alleged side-line building restrictions. That some restrictive covenants with respect to open spaces and areas between and around the residences to be erected were contemplated there is no question, but that their exact dimensions were ever fixed and established is not shown by the complaint.

[2] Plaintiff claims that they should be in conformity with those established in his deeds. But even as to those, no uniformity is shown to exist, for the dimensions as to the easterly and westerly boundaries are not uniform. That no general scheme or plan in this particular was ever contemplated is further indicated by other pleaded facts. None are contained in the printed form of deed adopted by the company. In that instrument the provisions as to the dimensions of the side-line restrictions are left blank, presumably to be filled in when fixed and determined by the company when selling a particular lot. In addition thereto, it affirmatively appears by the allegations in the complaint that the side-line distances, even when established and adopted, were subject to change by agreement of contiguous or abutting owners. Under such circumstances, the side-line restrictions could be entirely done away with. How, then, can it be said that such restrictions were in accordance with any general plan? We conclude there was none.

From what we have said we are of the opinion that the sale by the company of the lots to Scoble was not destructive of, or violative of, or inconsistent with, any general building plan adopted by the company.

Judgment affirmed.

BAILEY v. SECURITY TRUST CO. (PLATZ, Intervener). (L. A. 4754.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 2, 1919. Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1919.)

1. ESCROWS ⟸1—CONSTRUCTION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Documents, including option, assignment, agreement for commission, and order on escrow holder to pay commission, together with letter of instructions, held to constitute an escrow, within Civ. Code, §§ 1053, 1057.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Escrow.]

2. ESCROWS ⟸1—CONSTRUCTION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Although option and assignment of shares of stock which were deposited in escrow did not specifically name the assignee, transaction was valid transfer, for the purposes of the escrow, where from all the documents deposited in escrow the name of the transferee was ascertainable.

3. ESCROWS ⟸1—AGREEMENTS FOR COMMISSION—EFFECT.

Where owner of corporation stock made option and assignment, depositing them in escrow, fact that he also gave the intended transferee agreement for commission and order on escrow holder to pay commission did not, as to the escrow holder, deprive the transaction of its escrow character.

4. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸123(2) — CONTRACTS—GOOD FAITH.

There is no rule which prohibits attorney from becoming transferee of his client's corporate stock, and collecting a commission for the sale thereof, in the absence of a showing of unfaith or unfairness.

5. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸129(2)—CONTRACTS — BAD FAITH — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Where owner of corporation stock gave attorney option, assignment, and agreement to pay commission, evidence held insufficient to show that attorney obtained such documents by misrepresentation.

6. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⟸123(2) — CONTRACTS—BAD FAITH.

The mere fact, as found by the trial court, that attorney secured option and transfer of corporate stock from client at price of $16,000, when real value was $18,000, did not show bad faith or misrepresentations, in the absence of showing that the client was deceived as to the value.

Action by Matthew Bailey against the Security Trust Company, wherein Matthew S. Platz intervened. From judgment for plaintiff and order denying new trial, defendant and the intervener appeal. Judgment and order reversed.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This action was commenced by the plaintiff against the defendant Security Trust Company and certain fictitious defendants to recover the possession of a certificate of stock for 4,166⅔ shares of the capital stock of the Kern Mutual Telephone Company, a corporation, and also of certain documents relating to said stock, which the plaintiff alleged had been delivered by him to said defendant corporation, and the possession of which was being unlawfully withheld by it from plaintiff, who at all times since its said delivery had been entitled thereto. The stock was alleged to be of the value of $18,000, for which sum the plaintiff demanded an alternative judgment, with costs and damages, in the event a redelivery of the same could not be had. The answer of the Security Trust Company, while admitting the delivery to it by plaintiff of the stock and documents in question, denied that it unlawfully held the same or that the plaintiff was entitled to their possession; and in support of such denial alleged that on the 16th day of May, 1913, the said plaintiff, together with one Matthew S. Platz, had delivered to it the stock and other documents in question, accompanied by the following letter of instruction, viz.:

"Bakersfield, California, May 16, 1913.

"Security Trust Company, Bakersfield, Cal.—Sirs:

"We hand you herewith option to purchase, and assignment executed by Matthew Bailey. You will kindly hold the same to the first day of September, 1913, unless sooner exercised, at which time, if not exercised, you will redeliver the same to Matthew Bailey. There is also handed you herewith certificate of stock of Matthew Bailey for 4,166⅔ shares of the capital stock in the Kern Mutual Telephone Company. In the event that the said Matthew S. Platz or his assigns shall deliver to you, for the benefit of Matthew Bailey, on or before the first day of September, 1913, the sum of $16,000 lawful money of the United States, then you will deliver to him or his said assigns the said assignment, together with the certificates of stock.

"Matthew S. Platz.
"Matthew Bailey."

The said defendant further averred that subsequently to the delivery to it of said stock and papers, and on July 23, 1913, the said Matthew S. Platz had tendered to said defendant the sum of $16,000, and demanded from it the delivery to him of the stock and papers referred to in said letter of instruction; wherefore the said defendant prayed that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, but that said defendant recover certain costs and expenses incurred by it in defending its right to the possession of said property.

The said Matthew S. Platz, shortly after the commencement of said action, filed a complaint in intervention therein, wherein he set forth that on or about the 16th day of May, 1913, while the said plaintiff, Matthew Bailey, was the owner of the stock in question, he had for a valuable consideration made, executed, and delivered to said intervener a written option to purchase the same, in the words and figures following, to wit:

"For and in consideration of the sum of five dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I hereby give and grant to Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, Kern county, California, the option to purchase on or before the first day of September, 1913, all of my right, title, and interest in and to the shares of stock distributed to me in the estate of said John E. Bailey, deceased, in the Kern Mutual Telephone Company, a corporation, together also with all of my right, title, and interest distributed to me in the estate of said John E. Bailey, deceased, in and to that certain contract and agreement entered into among the said J. E. Bailey, Phil Blankenship, and James T. McGuire, on the 22nd day of September, 1911, regarding the division of the shares of stock in the said Kern Mutual Telephone Company, also all of the right, title, and interest distributed to me in the estate of said John E. Bailey, deceased, in, to, and under that certain other agreement made on the said 22nd day of September, 1911, among C. S. Garfield, Grace M. Garfield, J. E. Bailey, Phil Blankenship, and James T. McGuire, regarding the purchase of certain shares of and from the said C. S. Garfield and Grace M. Garfield, which said agreement herein mentioned, and also the shares of stock in said Kern Mutual Telephone Company, in said agreements mentioned, is now in escrow in the First National Bank of the City of Bakersfield, Kern county, California.

"Said shares of stock, and all the interest in said Kern Mutual Telephone Company herein mentioned may be purchased under this option for the sum of sixteen thousand dollars, lawful money of the United States, cash at the exercise of this option.

"It being understood that this option to purchase may be exercised by the said Matthew S. Platz by depositing, by him or by his assignees, with the Security Trust Company of the city of Bakersfield, Kern county, California, the said sum herein mentioned.

"Witness my hand this the 16 day of May, A. D., 1913. Matthew Bailey."

The intervener further alleged that, at the same time of the execution and delivery to him of the foregoing option to purchase said property, the said plaintiff, Matthew Bailey, had executed the following assignment of said property, viz.:

"For and in consideration of the sum of five dollars, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I hereby sell, transfer, and set over all of my right, title, and interest in and to the shares of stock distributed to me in the estate of John E. Bailey, deceased, in the Kern Mutual Telephone Company, a corporation, together also with all of my right, title, and interest distributed to me in the estate of said John E. Bailey, deceased, in and to that certain contract and agreement entered into among the said J. E. Bailey, Phil Blankenship, and James T. McGuire on the 22nd day of September, 1911, regarding the division of the shares of stock in the said Kern Mutual Telephone Company, also all of the right, title, and interest distributed to me in the estate of said John E. Bailey, deceased, in, to, and under that certain other agreement made on the said 22nd day of September, 1911, among C. S. Garfield, Grace M. Garfield, J. E. Bailey, Phil Blankenship, and James T. McGuire, regarding the purchase of certain shares of and from the said C. S. Garfield and Grace M. Garfield, which said agreement, together with that certain other agreement herein mentioned, and also the shares of stock in said Kern Mutual Telephone Company, in said agreements mentioned, are now in escrow in the First National Bank of the City of Bakersfield, Kern county, California.

"Witness my hand this the 16 day of May, A. D. 1913. Matthew Bailey."

The intervener further alleged that on or about May 16, 1913, the said plaintiff and the said intervener placed in escrow with the defendant Security Trust Company the said option and the said assignment, together with the certificate of stock in question, accompanying the same with the written escrow instructions set forth in the answer of the said defendant Security Trust Company, which said Trust Company then and there accepted and since held in such escrow. The intervener alleged that he had on July 23, 1913, tendered to said Security Trust Company the sum of $16,000, and demanded the delivery to him of the said certificate of stock and said assignment, but that the said Security Trust Company had refused to comply with such demand; wherefore the intervener, alleging that he had performed all of the terms and conditions of said escrow to be by him performed, prayed judgment for the possession of said property. To this complaint in intervention the plaintiff, Matthew Bailey, filed his answer, admitting that he had executed and delivered the documents set forth in the said answer of the defendant Security Trust Company and in the complaint in intervention, but denied that the same constituted either an assignment, an option, or an escrow in respect to said property. He also denied that he had received any consideration for the same, and alleged that the said documents were prepared by the said intervener and signed by the said plaintiff without any knowledge by the latter of the contents of said instruments, but that he signed the same on account of representations made to him by said intervener at the time. He also denied that the Security Trust Company had been delivered, or had received or accepted, said stock and documents in escrow, or that it was entitled to hold the same. He further denied that the sum of $16,000 was a just or adequate value of said properties, and denied that the said intervener had performed the conditions of the said agreements to be by him performed.

The plaintiff further alleged in his said answer to the complaint in intervention that in the month of April, 1913, the said plaintiff had employed the said intervener as his attorney for the purpose of having the latter inform said plaintiff as to the value of the stock in question, and that the said plaintiff had relied upon and accepted as true the statements of said intervener, as his said attorney, that the said stock was only worth the sum of $16,000 at the time of his signature of said documents, and that subsequently the said plaintiff had been offered and had accepted the sum of $18,000 for said stock. The plaintiff also alleged that his understanding and purpose in the signature and delivery of said documents were that they should not constitute an option giving said intervener himself the right to purchase said stock, but that they simply, according to the intervener's representation, amounted to an agreement making the intervener his agent for the sale of said stock, and giving the intervener a commission of 5 per cent. upon such sale by him of said property.

The cause went to trial upon the issues presented by these respective pleadings, and upon said trial the foregoing documents were produced and presented in evidence. It appeared that said documents had, at the time of their delivery to and acceptance by the defendant Security Trust Company, been accompanied by two other documents which read, respectively, as follows:

"It is agreed that I will pay to Matthew S. Platz the commission of five per cent. upon the sale or disposition of all of my interest in the Kern Mutual Telephone Company, a corporation, as per that certain option entered into between the said Matthew S. Platz and myself regarding said interest on the 16 day of May, 1913. Matthew Bailey."

"To the Security Trust Company, Bakersfield, Cal.—Sirs:

"You are hereby instructed to pay to Matthew S. Platz, of Bakersfield, Cal., out of the money coming to me for the sale of my interest in the Kern Mutual Telephone Company as by the certain option entered into between said Matthew S. Platz and myself on the 16 day of May, 1913, five per cent. commission, and that you are to take the said amount out of the money coming to me. Matthew Bailey."

It also appeared that all of the foregoing documents had been joined together in one cover, which was indorsed on the back, "Option, Letter of Instructions to Security Trust Company, Assignment, and Agreement to pay Commission, between Matthew Bailey and Matthew S. Platz." It also appeared in evidence that, while the certificate of stock to which these documents referred as having been delivered with them was not in fact so delivered until several days after their deposit with the Security Trust Company, it was at length so delivered by said plaintiff, Matthew Bailey, and was then attached to the other documents.

Upon the trial of the cause the plaintiff, Matthew Bailey, did not appear as a witness, and no evidence was offered on his behalf supporting the averments of his complaint as to any misrepresentations made by the intervener as his attorney, to him, as to the value of the stock or the import and contents of the documents which were executed by him. On the other hand, the intervener testified that while he was, in respect to certain other matters, the attorney for Matthew Bailey, at the time of the transaction in question, he made no misrepresentations upon either subject to him, and that as to the contents of the documents in question they were dictated by him to his stenographer in the presence and hearing of said Matthew Bailey, and he was given copies of the same, which he took and retained after the signature of the originals and their delivery in escrow. The intervener also testified, without contradiction, as to the consideration for the execution and delivery of these documents. There was no evidence offered which in any wise tended to show that the defendant Security Trust Company had any knowledge as to the relations or understandings between the plaintiff and the intervener, other than those which the face of the documents delivered to it imported.

The cause having been submitted to the trial court for decision, it filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law in favor of the plaintiff, and against both the defendant Security Trust Company and the intervener Matthew S. Platz, finding that the documents executed between said plaintiff and said intervener did not constitute an option to purchase the stock in question in favor of said intervener, but that the same were to be construed to be merely an agency authorizing said intervener to sell said stock to other persons for the price of $16,000, which agency was revocable at any time at the will of the plaintiff; and that the delivery of said documents, together with the letter of instruction to the Security Trust Company, did not constitute an escrow so as to entitle the said Security Trust Company to hold said stock in accordance with said letter of instruction, or to deliver said stock to said intervener, as provided by the terms of said documents, but that the Security Trust Company held said documents and said stock subject to the right of the plaintiff at any time to demand and receive their possession. The court further held that the sum of $16,000 was not a fair or adequate value of the property described in said documents, but that the value thereof was not less than $18,000. The court accordingly rendered its judgment that the plaintiff do have and recover the possession of the said stock and of the assignment thereof from the said defendant Security Trust Company, or the sum of $18,000, in case delivery could not be had, together with costs as against both said defendant and said intervener.

From this judgment two appeals have been taken, one by the said defendant and said intervener, the other by the plaintiff, claiming that the court should have given to said plaintiff a further judgment for interest upon the sum of $18,000, as damages for the withholding of said stock from said plaintiff from and after the 5th day of June, 1913, the date of his demand therefor. The trial court also denied the motions of the defendant and the intervener for a new trial.

[1] Dealing with the first of these appeals, in so far as the rights and liabilities of the defendant Security Trust Company are involved therein, we are satisfied that upon the record before us the findings and judgment of the trial court cannot be sustained. The rights and liabilities of the said defendant Security Trust Company are to be determined by the face of the several documents of which, by the written agreements between the plaintiff and the intervener, it was made the custodian and charged with the duty set forth in their letter of instruction. These documents are all to be read together, and when so read they amount, in our opinion, as a matter of clear and unmistakable construction, to the creation of an escrow, based upon an option to purchase, by the express terms of which escrow the said defendant Security Trust Company was to receive and hold, and did in fact receive, accept, and hold, the said certificate for 4,166⅔ shares of the capital stock of the Kern Mutual Telephone Company in escrow, charged by its letter of instruction to deliver the same to Matthew S. Platz on or before the 1st day of September, 1913, provided the said Matthew S. Platz or his assigns should on or before said date deliver to said Security Trust Company the sum of $16,000 for the benefit of said plaintiff, Matthew Bailey. Section 1057 of the Civil Code provides that "a grant may be deposited by the grantor with a third person, to be delivered on performance of a condition, and, on delivery by the depository, it will take effect. While in possession of the third person, and subject to condition, it is called an escrow." By section 1053 of the Civil Code the term "grant" is made to apply to every transfer in writing, and hence to transfers of personal property. The foregoing documents, when read together, clearly contemplate a transfer of the stock in question to Matthew S. Platz or his assigns upon the fulfillment of the condition prescribed therein, and the delivery of such stock, with its accompanying documents, to the depository constituted an escrow within the intent and meaning of the foregoing sections of the Civil Code. The cases of Miller v. Sears, 91 Cal. 282, 27 Pac. 589, 25 Am. St. Rep. 176, Fitch v. Bunch, 30 Cal. 209, and the recent case of Holland v. McCarthy, 173 Cal. 597, 160 Pac. 1069, are not in point upon this question, since each of those cases had reference to transactions which were inchoate in character, and not to transactions like that in the instant case, where nothing remained to be done except the fulfillment of the agreed condition and the delivery of the property by the escrow holder in accordance with its express letter of instruction.

[2] The only two contentions worthy of mention which the respondent in this first appeal makes against the foregoing construction as to the nature of this transaction are these: First, that the document which purports to be a transfer of the right, title, and interest of the plaintiff in said stock does not contain the name of any transferee, and hence does not constitute a valid assignment or transfer thereof. But, conceding that this would be correct if the said document was to be construed alone, when all of these several documents are construed together the conclusion is irresistible that the said Matthew S. Platz or his assigns was intented to be, and was in fact in one or the other of these documents stated to be, the transferee thereof. In addition to this showing, the stock itself, properly indorsed, was delivered with and attached to these several documents; and this being so, had there been no other or separate instrument purporting to be an assignment thereof, such delivery to the escrow holder would of itself have been sufficient to constitute a transfer thereof for the expressed purposes of such escrow. This contention, therefore, has no merit.

[3] The second contention of the respondent is that the two documents, by the terms of the first of which the plaintiff agreed to pay "to Matthew S. Platz a commission of five per cent. upon the sale or disposition of all of my interest in the Kern Mutual Telephone Company as per that certain option, etc.," and by the terms of the second of which the Security Trust Company was instructed to pay said Matthew S. Platz said 5 per cent. commission out of money coming to him as a result of the exercise of said option, destroyed the character of the option and escrow by rendering the former simply an agency for the sale of said stock upon commission. We cannot agree with the contention of the respondent in this regard in so far as the rights and liabilities of the defendant Security Trust Company are concerned. The latter as the escrow holder was entitled to have its mutual obligation to each of the parties to the intended transfer of the stock in question determined by a fair and liberal construction of the documents themselves, in the absence of a showing of any knowledge on its part of the relations or dealings between the parties other than as disclosed in the writings committed to its charge. Were it otherwise, there would be an end to the common and convenient practice, which has of recent years found general acceptance in the business world, of consummating transfers of real and personal property through deposits in escrow. In the instant case the letter of instruction to the escrow holder explicitly describes the documents delivered with it as constituting an "option to purchase," and as an "assignment executed by Matthew Bailey," and also explicitly declaring the condition upon the fulfillment of which the "said assignment, together with the said certificate of stock," is to be delivered by the said escrow holder to Matthew S. Platz or his assigns.

To hold that a mere subsidiary agreement between the parties to the proposed transfer providing that, after its consummation, a certain percentage of the purchase price to be paid by Matthew S. Platz, or his assigns into the hands of the escrow holder, in performance of the condition of the option and escrow, was to be repaid to him as a commission, should have the effect of nullifying the letter of instructions, and destroying the obvious intent and explicit terms of the main document and agreements between the parties, would be to violate a most essential rule governing the construction of written instruments by giving to a minor portion of the agreements between the parties an implied meaning and effect contradicting the express terms of the main agreements between them, and rendering abortive the very option and escrow out of the fulfillment of which the commissions provided for in the minor stipulations between the original parties to the transaction were to flow. As to the escrow holder no such consequence should be permitted if its avoidance is possible by such a construction of the agreements between the parties as shall give effect to all their terms and carry out the main and the express purpose of their creation, and this is done by the interpretation of the several instruments embraced in this escrow which we have above given. This being so, the transaction between the original parties being on the face of the documents before us a valid option to purchase the stock in question, and the delivery of said documents with said stock and with their attached letter of instruction to the depository constituting a valid escrow, it follows that as to the Security Trust Company the judgment herein must be reversed.

[4-6] As to the appellant Matthew S. Platz it is insisted by the respondent herein that a different conclusion as to the nature of the transaction between himself and the plaintiff must be reached. In making this contention the main reliance of the respondent is upon several considerations alleged to have existed outside of the face of the agreements. These considerations, according to the plaintiff's pleadings, were that at the time of making of the agreements between the plaintiff and the intervener the latter was the attorney of the former in regard to certain matters connected with his possession and ownership of said stock, and that as such attorney the said Matthew S. Platz made certain misrepresentations as to the value of said stock, and also as to the contents of the documents which he had drawn, giving him the option to purchase the same at the price he had represented it to be worth, upon which misrepresentations the plaintiff had relied in the execution and delivery of said documents. The plaintiff also alleged that there was no consideration for the giving of the option in question. In so far as the relation between the parties of attorney and client is concerned we know of no rule preventing dealings of this character between them in the absence of a showing of unfaith or unfairness on the part of the attorney. In so far as the alleged misrepresentations as to the value of the stock in question and as to the contents and meaning of documents creating the option to purchase said stock, the evidence entirely fails to sustain the averments of the plaintiff as to these matters. The plaintiff himself, by whom these matters, if they existed, might have been proven, did not take the witness stand. The intervener, as a witness, assuming the burden which the law cast upon him as the attorney for the plaintiff, at the time expressly denied any misrepresentations made by him as to either of said matters or the existence of any unfairness therein. The court made no finding thereon. It is true that the court did find that the sum of $16,000 was not the fair or adequate value of the stock in question at the date of the creation of the option, but the court makes no finding indicating that the plaintiff was in any way deceived in that regard. Upon the issue of consideration the court found against the plaintiff. It thus appears that there is neither any evidence nor any finding which would justify the trial court or this court in arriving at any different conclusion upon the construction to be placed upon the documents in question as between the plaintiff and the intervener than that above arrived at in relation to the rights of the escrow holder.

Judgment and order reversed.

BAILEY v. SECURITY TRUST CO. (PLATZ, Intervener). (L. A. 4704.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 2, 1919. Rehearing Denied Jan. 30, 1919.)

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Matthew Bailey against the Security Trust Company, wherein Matthew S. Platz intervened. From the decree rendered, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Foster & Barnhart and George E. Whitaker, all of Bakersfield (Leon E. Morris, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

J. W. Wiley and Wiley & Lambert, all of Bakersfield, for respondent.

C. E. Arnold, of Bakersfield, for intervener.

PER CURIAM. The facts out of which this appeal arises are fully set forth in the case of Bailey v. Security Trust Co. (L. A. No. 4754), 177 Pac. 444, this day decided. The conclusions arrived at in that case render unnecessary for decision the sole question presented upon this appeal, and for that reason the appeal herein is dismissed.

LEADBETTOR et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION. (S. F. 8602.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸398 — WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — "ACCIDENT" — "INJURY."

There is a distinction between the terms "accident" and "injury" as used in Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20, providing that actual knowledge of injury shall be equivalent to service of notice, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accident; Injury.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸405(1)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—KNOWLEDGE OF INJURY BY FOREMAN—EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to justify Industrial Accident Commission in concluding that employer's foreman had knowledge that some injury had been suffered, though no report of accident was made, within proviso of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20, that actual knowledge of injury shall be equivalent to notice.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸393½—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—MEDICAL ATTENTION — SELECTION OF PHYSICIAN BY SERVANT.

An injured servant is authorized, by Workmen's Compensation Act, § 15 (a), to select his own physician at the expense of the employer only where the latter has neglected or refused to provide the necessary services.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸393½—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT — EXPENSE OF MEDICAL ATTENTION.

In view of letter received by employer from injured servant, employer held under no duty to offer further medical attention, servant having previously consulted physician of his own choice, to render employer liable for expense of further treatment.

In Bank.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Frank G. Pryor, opposed by William Leadbettor, employer, and the Georgia Casualty Company, insurer. Compensation was awarded, and the employer and insurer bring certiorari. Award annulled, and proceeding remanded to make a new award in accordance with the opinion.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission. The applicant, Frank G. Pryor, was a bridge carpenter, employed by the petitioner Leadbettor. On July 22, 1916, he was working at Hermosa Beach. Pryor and a number of other men were handling a heavy "bent" made of steel, when the bent settled down, crushing Pryor to the ground and resting upon his back. An injury to the ninth dorsal vertebra resulted.

[1, 2] One of the points made by the petitioners, Leadbettor and his insurance carrier, is that the applicant failed to give timely notice of his injury, as required by section 20 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 291). That section contains the proviso, however, "that actual knowledge of such * * * injury on the part of such employer, or his managing agent or superintendent in charge of the work * * * shall be equivalent to such service." The commission found that the employer had such knowledge, and we think there was evidence to warrant this finding. The foreman in charge of the work was present when the accident occurred. After visiting a physician for examination, Pryor returned to his work. Apparently he then thought, as did the foreman, that he had suffered no substantial injury. In fact, he rejected the foreman's suggestion that a report of the accident be made. The claim of the petitioners is, accordingly, that while the employer had knowledge of the occurrence of an accident, neither he nor his foreman was made aware that any injury to Pryor had resulted. There is, no doubt, a distinction between the terms "accident" and "injury," as used in section 20. Smith v. Ind. Acc. Comn., 174 Cal. 199, 162 Pac. 636. But the evidence is that for some time after his return Pryor was suffering pain, and was not fully able to do his usual work, and that these facts were known to the foreman. The commission was therefore justified in concluding that the foreman had knowledge that, however slight in degree, some injury had been suffered.

[3] A further contention is made on the allowance of charges for medical attendance. The statute (section 15a) imposes upon the employer the duty to provide medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, and, "in case of his neglect or refusal seasonably to do so," makes him liable for the reasonable expense incurred by the employé in providing the same. The intent of the act obviously is that the employer shall, in the first instance, have the right to designate and select the physicians who are to give treatment to the employé. The latter is authorized to make his own selection at the expense of the employer only where the employer has neglected or refused to provide the necessary service. City of Milwaukee v. Miller, 154 Wis. 652, 144 N. W. 188, L. R. A. 1916A, 1, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 847. See Mass. Bonding Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 767, 151 Pac. 419. In this case Pryor made his own arrangements for medical and hospital aid, and the question is whether there was any evidence of neglect or refusal on the part of his employer to supply him with this service.

It appears that immediately after the accident Pryor went to see a physician, who merely examined him and permitted him to return to work. He had no further medical care while he remained at Hermosa Beach. Thereafter he went to Porterville, and while there consulted a physician, by whom he was sent to an osteopath for treatment. In October, 1916, some three months after the accident, Pryor left for Portland, Or. While there he incurred further bills for medical treatment and hospital service.

On the original submission of the application, the commission found that the employer had neglected to furnish medical and surgical services, and charged him and the insurance carrier with the value of all services rendered by physicians at the place of injury, at Porterville, and at Portland, Or. A rehearing was granted on the single issue of medical expense, and thereafter the commission made its final order, reciting that Pryor had, on the day following the accident, declined the medical treatment then tendered him by his employer, but that the employer had actual knowledge, while the applicant was in Porterville, that he was receiving further medical treatment, and had neglected thereafter to again offer medical treatment. Accordingly the employer was held liable for the charge of the physician consulted at the place of the accident, and for bills incurred in Portland, Or.

[4] No question is made of the propriety of allowing the charge of Dr. Hembree, the physician who first examined Pryor. No medical service was provided or tendered at the time of the accident, and the injured man was entitled to consult a physician of his own choice. The briefs discuss to some extent the question of whether the applicant's conduct on the next day was such as to relieve the employer from any obligation to then furnish medical service. On this question the commission, on its final hearing, decided in favor of the employer, and we must therefore start with the assumption that when Pryor went to Porterville the employer had not been guilty of any neglect upon which it could be charged with expenses thereafter to be incurred by him. At that time there was nothing to indicate to Leadbettor or the insurance carrier that Pryor either desired or needed medical attention. The conclusion that there was a subsequent neglect, and a consequent liability to pay for the bills incurred in Portland, is based upon the view that the employer had actual knowledge, while Pryor was in Porterville, that he was receiving further medical treatment, and that the defendants should, upon receiving such knowledge, have immediately offered medical treatment of their own choice. Pryor testified that he had told Leadbettor that he was receiving treatment at Porterville. But the commission found that the date of this communication could not be fixed, and made no allowance for the treatment obtained by Pryor at Porterville. On October 16th, when he was leaving for Portland, Pryor wrote a letter to Leadbettor. In it he said:

"As for myself, I was injured, while on a job at Hermosa Beach by a bent falling on me. My back was merely examined by Dr. Melvin [a physician at Porterville] and I was sent to an osteopath for treatment. Is the policy made out so I can send the bill to the insurance company, as it hasn't been paid yet?"

Under no reasonable interpretation can it be said that this letter conveyed to its recipient information that Pryor still required medical treatment for his injury. The plain import of the communication is that he had already received the needed treatment. The purpose of the communication is shown by the closing sentence, in which he inquires whether the bill may be sent to the insurance company for payment. The only fair interpretation of the letter is that the service had ended, and the claim on that account matured. There is no warrant for saying, in the face of this statement, that there rested upon the employer a duty to tender or supply additional medical treatment, or that his failure to do so constituted any neglect on his part. The award should therefore be modified by eliminating the provision charging the petitioners with liability for the surgical and hospital bills incurred in Portland.

The award is annulled, and the proceeding remanded to the Industrial Accident Commission for the making of a new award in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion.

In re FLINT'S ESTATE. (Sac. 2854.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 3, 1919.)

1. WILLS ⟸324(2, 3) — UNDUE INFLUENCE AND INSANITY—QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

On petition for revocation of probate of will on account of undue influence and unsoundness of mind, if there was substantial evidence on either subject, it was duty of court to submit case to jury.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸568(2) — OPINION — INSANITY OF TESTATOR—WEIGHT.

On petition for revocation of probate of will for undue influence and unsoundness of mind, opinion evidence of testator's daughter, a trained nurse, and business acquaintances, that testator was of unsound mind, was of no greater value than the reasons given in support.

3. WILLS ⟸324(2) — INSANITY — QUESTION FOR JURY.

On petition for revocation of probate of will for undue influence and unsoundness of mind, opinion evidence of daughter of testator, a trained nurse, and business acquaintances, that testator was of unsound mind, held insufficient alone to require submission of issue to jury.

4. EVIDENCE ⟸65 — PRESUMPTION OF KNOWLEDGE OF LAW BY TESTATOR.

Testator is presumed to know that his wife would be entitled to one-half of all his property, which was community property, as acknowledged by him in his will.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Daniel Flint, deceased. On petition for revocation of probate of the will by Russell Flint. From judgment of nonsuit, petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

C. E. McLaughlin, C. P. McLaughlin, Arthur M. Seymour, and Sheridan Downey, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. The will of the decedent having been probated, appellant petitioned for its revocation, alleging undue influence and unsoundness of mind. Issues were joined, and upon the trial thereof a judgment of nonsuit was rendered, and Russell Flint appealed, claiming that there was sufficient evidence of unsoundness of mind and of undue influence to be submitted to a jury.

[1] If there was substantial evidence on either subject, it was the duty of the trial court to submit the case to the jury. No useful purpose will be subserved by a lengthy statement of the evidence bearing upon the question of unsoundness of mind.

[2, 3] There was evidence of the daughter, of a trained nurse, and business acquaintances, that, in their opinion, the decedent was of "unsound mind." This evidence, however, as we have heretofore in effect held (Estate of Collins, 174 Cal. 663, 164 Pac. 1110; Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 300, 306, 128 Pac. 932), is of no greater value than the reasons given in support of the opinion, and is not alone sufficiently substantial to require the presentation of the case to the jury. The decedent was about 85 years old. The will was drawn three months and five days before he was accidentally killed while crossing a railway track. At the time of the execution of the will, the wife of the testator (to whom he had been married 65 years) and their six sons and two daughters were living; their ages ranging from 36 to 58 years. The wife predeceased her husband, dying about one month after the execution of the will. The point most strongly insisted upon by appellant is that the will itself, when compared with the actual facts concerning the decedent's property and his dealings with his wife and children, show that the will was the product of insane delusions directly operating upon him at the time it was executed. The provision in regard to the wife is as follows:

"Secondly, all of my property, both real and personal and mixed of which I am now possessed is the community property of myself and my wife Mary E. Flint, but inasmuch as I have heretofore deeded to her valuable property as and for her own separate property, the income of which is more than she will need for the remainder of her life I make no provision for her in this will, my intention being at the time of the execution of said deeds that they should be an advancement of her interest and title in my estate. Should she, however, decline to accept said property so deeded to her as her share and demand her community share of my estate, then I desire such property to be appraised and considered as part of her share of said community property."

The provision in regard to the daughters is as follows:

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

"I declare that my daughters Lillian Bruner and Alice Lampert have each heretofore received advancements in cash from me on their shares of my estate and for that reason I give and bequeath them only the following amount, to wit: To the said Lillian Bruner the sum of $5,000; * * * to the said Alice Lampert the sum of $5,000." It is provided that these amounts should be a lien upon real estate left to the sons, and to be paid in annual installments of not less than $1,000, but without interest. "* * * my intention being not to hamper them (the sons) in the enjoyment of their said real property by the immediate payment of said large legacy."

[4] Evidence was introduced on behalf of respondents tending to show that at the time the will was executed the decedent had conveyed to his wife their residence, consisting of a house and lot valued at $9,500, and that he had given each daughter upon her marriage a house and lot, and that from time to time he had made small gifts to his daughters. The estate of the deceased was appraised at $180,467. With regard to the provisions for the wife in the will, it will be observed that she takes, notwithstanding the will, one-half of all the property by reason of its community character. This seems to be fully recognized by the testator, who specifically declares that all the property "of which I am now possessed, is the community property of myself and my wife, Mary E. Flint." It is recognized also that she was entitled to "demand her community share of my estate." The legal effect of this provision of the will was that the wife was entitled to the $90,000 interest in the estate of the deceased, and that it was his desire that the home place, theretofore deeded to her, should be considered in making up her one-half. We need not pause to inquire as to the effect of this express desire on the part of the decedent with relation to the property theretofore conveyed to the wife. Appellant's claim with relation to this clause is that it seems to be founded upon a belief on the part of the testator that he had theretofore conveyed to his wife property, "the income of which is more than she will need for the remainder of her life," and also the suggestion in the will that the deed to her of this property had been made as an equivalent of her half interest in the community property. With reference to the question of the income of the property theretofore conveyed to the wife being sufficient for her support, it may be said that at the time the will was executed the wife was and had for some time been in a hospital, having been operated upon for cancer of the face; and, from the circumstance that she had been bedridden for some time and unable to use even a wheeled chair, it may be inferred that her condition was very serious. And, while it is true, as testified by appellant, that the will should be read in the light of the circumstances existing at the time it was executed, and not in view of the fact that the wife died before the testator, it is nevertheless obvious that, owing to her extreme age and physical condition, her wants in this world were not for long. The expectancy of persons of her age was about three years. The decedent does not say that the property conveyed to his wife was of equal value to her share in the community property, as seems to be contended by appellant, but that it was his intention at the time of the execution of the deeds "that they should be an advancement of her interest and title in my estate." It is evident from an examination of the will that it was drawn by an attorney. The language used is not the language of the decedent, but of the attorney.

There is not the slightest evidence that these statements in the will, however erroneous they may have been, were the product of an insane delusion. There is not the slightest evidence, other than the language of the will itself, that the decedent believed that he had conveyed to his wife anything other and different from that which he had actually conveyed to her. There is no evidence from any source that he believed the property conveyed to his wife would yield any larger income than it would in fact yield. There is no evidence whatever that decedent had any erroneous belief concerning his property which he adhered to against reason and without foundation. It is useless to speculate upon the reason why the decedent made the statements that he did concerning his bequest to his wife. He is presumed to know, and the evidence is that he did in fact know, that she would be entitled to one-half of all he possessed, and that this would have been ample for her maintenance is conceded. It is also true that an investigation of the amount of gifts of the decedent to his daughters, their adequacy in view of the size of his estate, speculation as to whether or not $5,000 should be considered a "large" or small amount, interesting though they may be, are not determinative of the question of an insane delusion. There is no evidence whatever that the testator believed that he had given either of his daughters a dollar more or less than he had in fact given to them. There is no evidence to show that he had made other statements concerning his gifts to them which were incorrect. There is no evidence of the persistence of an erroneous belief, such as is characteristic of an insane delusion. Estate of Kendrick, 130 Cal. 360, 364, 62 Pac. 605. Much is said by the appellant concerning the inadequacy of the provisions for the wife and the two daughters. Such an argument, no doubt, is entitled to due consideration. But the decedent had a perfect right to dispose of his property as he saw fit. If we assume, as it is contended we should, that the testator believed that his wife would survive him, as has already been pointed out, her half of the community property would be ample for her maintenance, and at her death she could make such provision for the daughters as seemed to her just and proper. In addition to the statements contained in the will, there is evidence of a number of witnesses tending to prove that the decedent was forgetful, penurious, irritable, and unreasonable in some of his conduct. It is suggested that his treatment of his wife was unfeeling, in that he manifested little interest in her while in the hospital, and apparently begrudged the expense of a wheeled chair and of hospital attention. It would be useless to attempt to analyze the reason and motive for the conduct of the testator. It is sufficient to say that his conduct must be construed in the light of the presumption of sanity, and that the evidence falls far short of proof that the decedent entertained any insane delusions whatever, or that he was suffering from general insanity or incompetence. He managed and supervised the household, kept up his interest in the management of two large ranches which he owned, but which the sons were operating, deposited in and drew large amounts of money from the bank, was strong-minded in his dealings with others, but realized that his mental powers were waning, sometimes saying that he was forgetful. In short, the evidence proves, what his age indicates, that his mental and physical powers were waning.

Without further analysis of the testimony, and without discussion of the well-settled principles of law so often declared by this court on this subject, we conclude that the proof of incompetence was too unsubstantial to justify its submission to a jury. There was no evidence of undue influence operating upon the decedent at the time of the execution of the will.

In re MORTON. (Cr. 2202.)

1. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐57 — DISBARMENT PROCEEDING—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

In disbarment proceedings, as in other cases, a court of review cannot determine the weight to be given conflicting evidence, but such determination is the peculiar and exclusive province of the tribunal wherein the hearing is had.

2. ATTORNEY AND CLIENT ⇐53(2)—DISBARMENT—ACCOMPLICE—CORROBORATION.

In proceeding to disbar attorney for having knowingly received from his clients funds stolen by them, the uncorroborated testimony of such clients was sufficient to support judgment of disbarment; Pen. Code, § 1111, requiring corroboration of an accomplice, not being applicable, since it defines an accomplice as one liable to prosecution for the "identical offense charged," and the offense of which the clients were guilty is different from that of which the attorney was accused.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Proceedings by the Los Angeles Bar Association for the disbarment of W. Ona Morton, an attorney and counselor at law. From a judgment of disbarment respondent appeals. Affirmed.

Nathan Newby, Matteson B. Jones, and Claude B. Morton, all of Los Angeles (H. M. Barstow, Will H. Anderson, Tom C. Thornton, and Harry A. Hollzer, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

Leonard B. Slosson and Richard J. Culver, both of Los Angeles, for Los Angeles Bar Ass'n.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Upon an accusation filed by the Los Angeles Bar Association, charging W. Ona Morton, an attorney at law, with a violation of his professional duties, a hearing was had by the superior court of Los Angeles county, which caused a judgment to be entered, depriving the accused of the right to practice as an attorney and counselor in the courts of the state of California. From this judgment the accused has appealed.

No attack is made upon the sufficiency of the accusation, which clearly charged the accused with the commission of acts which, if true, fully warranted the rendering of the judgment of which he complains.

Briefly stated, the facts in support of the charge made are as follows: Some time in August, 1917, one Robertson, then assuming the name of Butler, and his wife, robbed a man by the name of Smith of about $1,000. They left Los Angeles, where the crime was committed, going to Arizona, where they, on September 18, 1917, deposited $800 of the stolen funds in three different banks. They returned to Los Angeles on September 22, 1917, where they were immediately arrested and at once confessed their guilt to the arresting officers. Being committed to the county jail, they, on the day following, sent for Morton, to whom they admitted the fact that they had stolen the money, and also informed him that they had made a confession of the theft. As a result of the negotiations between Robertson and Morton, the latter was employed to defend them, and, being informed of the deposit of the stolen funds in said banks, he induced them to draw a check upon one of the accounts and deliver the same to him, by means whereof he obtained as his fee, $300 of such stolen funds. Thereafter, by suggesting that they should be released upon bond, he induced them to draw another check in favor of one D. M. Hidey for $300, of which sum $200 was to be paid him for securing the bond and $100 of which he was to hold for the use of Robertson and his wife. A short time thereafter, induced by the same instrumentality, Robertson drew another check for $200, the balance of the deposit, in favor of one Hayes, with which he was assured better board while in jail, the unused portion thereof to be paid to him upon their release. Under Morton's advice, Robertson and his wife entered a plea of not guilty, which later, likewise under his advice, was withdrawn and a plea of guilty entered, after which they applied to the court for probation. After their entering the plea of guilty, and pending the proceedings for probation, Robertson wrote a letter to one of the judges of the superior court, purporting to inform him of what had occurred, whereupon he and his wife were brought before the judge, and, under oath, examined with reference to the transaction had with Morton and matters in connection therewith. At the hearing of the disbarment proceedings, Robertson and his wife, both upon direct and upon an exhaustive cross-examination, testified in great detail as to the occurrences, and as to the relationship with Morton, his knowledge of their thefts, and that the moneys secured from them, by and through him, were the funds stolen from Smith, all of which he obtained and accepted, knowing the same to be stolen property, and advised them to give false testimony as to their disposition of the same.

[1] Basing his contention upon the fact that a proceeding for the disbarment of an attorney is in the nature of a criminal proceeding (In re Alameda County Bar Ass'n, 170 Pac. 432), counsel insists that, to warrant disbarment, the evidence, like that required to justify a verdict of guilty in a criminal case, must be clear, positive, and such as to establish both the motive and commission of the act charged beyond a reasonable doubt. In support of this proposition he cites a number of authorities from other jurisdictions, an examination of which, however, shows that none of them involved cases on appeal where the court was called upon to review the sufficiency of the evidence in support of the finding, but what was said therein related to proceedings of disbarment over which the court, in some of the cases having recourse to a referee in the taking of the evidence, assumed original jurisdiction, acting as a trial court, as in Re Houghton, 67 Cal. 511, 8 Pac. 52. None of them constitute authority for appellant's claim, when applied to a court charged with the duty of reviewing the testimony, but do announce the rule that in such cases the accused should not be convicted unless the trial court is convinced, by clear and satisfactory evidence, or, as said in some cases, beyond a reasonable doubt, of his guilt. However this may be, this court, in a like case involving a like question (Matter of Danford, 157 Cal. 425, 108 Pac. 322) has, in effect, held that in disbarment proceedings, as in other cases, a court of review cannot determine the weight to be given conflicting evidence, but that such determination is the peculiar and exclusive province of the tribunal wherein the hearing is had.

Conceding, as claimed by appellant, that Robertson and his wife were confessed thieves, and had theretofore, in an inquiry concerning their crime, lied to the court and perjured themselves, all of which, at the hearing in this proceeding, they fully, freely, and frankly admitted, the trial court, notwithstanding their story was contradicted by the accused, a lawyer theretofore of conceded good character and standing, accepted their testimony as true and disbelieved that of accused.

[2] In their reply brief, counsel insist that the accusation against appellant charged him with the commission of a felony, wherein Robertson and his wife were accomplices, and that, as provided in section 1111, Penal Code, a conviction cannot be had upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice who is defined to be "one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial in the cause in which the testimony of the accomplice is given." Assuming the accusation charged appellant with the commission of acts which constituted a felony, namely, that of receiving personal property, knowing the same to have been stolen, Robertson and his wife could not be deemed liable to prosecution for such offense, since they were the ones who committed the theft. The case of People v. Kraker, 72 Cal. 459, 14 Pac. 196, 1 Am. St. Rep. 65, upon which appellant relies in support of his proposition, is not in point, for the reason that, among others, it was decided before the amendment of 1915 of section 1111, which added the clause above quoted.

Moreover, the proceeding wherein these witnesses testified was a prosecution for an offense alleged to have been committed by the accused in his professional capacity as an officer of the court, the penalty for which, upon conviction, is the depriving him of the right to practice as an attorney and counselor in the courts of this state, an offense with which, since they were not attorneys at law, the witnesses could not be deemed liable to prosecution.

The judgment is affirmed.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; F. E. Densmore, Judge.

Action by Isaac Parks against Jesse Parks. From judgment rendered and from order denying defendant's motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John M. Clayton, of Hemet, for appellant.

George A. French and Miguel Estudillo, both of Riverside, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Plaintiff and defendant are brothers and sons of Frances E. Parks, who died intestate in December, 1912, leaving considerable estate. Her personal property she left to other of her children, and devised to the plaintiff and defendant, in equal shares, all her real property, which thereafter was inventoried in her estate as consisting of 600 acres of land in Riverside county—referred to in the evidence as section 29—and subsequently distributed in said estate to plaintiff and defendant in equal shares. Nearly a year after distribution plaintiff brought this action for a partition of said 600 acres of property, asserting equal undivided ownership therein in himself and defendant. In his answer, however, defendant set up a claim of ownership to three-fourths of the property, and the extent of ownership between the parties is the only question involved in the case. The finding of the court was that each of the parties was the owner of an undivided one-half of said property and awarded a judgment of partition, from which judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

The facts in this case are few and simple. The land in question was originally a part of what were known as "railroad lands" of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, and about 1889—the exact date not shown—a contract for the purchase of said section 29 for $3,000 was negotiated between said railroad company and Mrs. Frances E. Parks, said mother of the parties. What the terms of payment were to be is not shown, other than it appears they were to be made in two installments. A written contract of purchase from the railroad company was made and taken in the joint names of Mrs. Parks and the defendant, Jesse Parks, and of the first payment made on the purchase price of the land said Jesse Parks advanced $250, the rest, which must have amounted to some $1,000, being paid by his mother. Mrs. Parks then went into possession and control of the property, though it was used as a common pasturage for the stock of all the members of the family. The second and final payment on the land to the railroad company, which exceeded some $1,800, was made about 1893 by Mrs. Parks alone. Long prior to said last payment Mrs. Parks had repaid to Jesse Parks and he had accepted the $250 which he had handed to his mother when the contract with the Southern Pacific Railroad Company for the purchase of the land was originally made. Before this repayment to him Jesse Parks had been assisting in the payment of the taxes on the land, but afterwards he made no further advancement for that purpose, and for 20 years prior to her death, Mrs. Parks, in addition to having full charge and control of the property, had alone been paying the taxes on it. Although the final payment on the property was made to the railroad company about 1893, no deed to the land was made until about April 9, 1897 (a patent to the land not having probably been issued by the United States to the railroad company until about that date), and the deed which was then made by said company ran to Frances E. Parks and the defendant, Jesse Parks, the original parties in the contract of purchase from the railroad company. This was the situation in which the title stood at the time of the death of Mrs. Parks and the entry of the decree of distribution in her estate, and it is quite evident therefrom the attitude which each party takes in this litigation. Plaintiff claims that his mother was in legal effect the sole owner of the entire tract of 600 acres of land at her death, and that he became the owner of an undivided one-half thereof through her will and the decree of distribution in her estate. The claim of appellant is that he is the owner of an undivided three-fourths of the 600 acres—an undivided half under the deed from the railroad company to his mother and himself, and an undivided one-quarter in addition under the decree of distribution of the undivided half interest of his mother to himself and the plaintiff.

The trial court obviously concluded from the evidence that the property belonged to Mrs. Parks alone at the time of her death notwithstanding the deed from the railroad company to appellant, her son Jesse, and herself, and that the only title acquired by both parties to this action was derived solely under the will and decree of distribution in the estate of their mother, and we are satisfied that this conclusion of the trial court was fully warranted by the evidence in the case independent of any consideration of the question of the conclusiveness of the decree of distribution in the estate of the mother on title to the property, a matter asserted by respondent and denied by appellant, but a question which we find unnecessary to discuss or pass on.

[1] There is, it is true, evidence in the case of a deed from the Southern Pacific Railroad Company to Mrs. Parks and the appellant, Jesse Parks, to the 600 acres in question. The existence of this deed in his favor at the time of the death of his mother was prima facie evidence of title in him. But it was not conclusive on the question of title. The general rule is that the real nature of the transaction concerning property conveyed, the true intent and purpose moving parties in taking a conveyance to property in their joint names, or in that of one of them, can be investigated and determined unless where in good faith interests of third parties have intervened and would be injuriously affected. It may be shown that the taking of a conveyance in the name of the grantee, or one of them, was a mistake, or that it was a matter merely of convenience, or as security for a loan, or was taken under such circumstances as created a resulting trust or trust of some other character. Such an inquiry was the main feature in this case and the evidence shows quite satisfactorily, we think, that while, in fact, the contract for the purchase of the property was made with the railroad company by appellant and his mother, and years afterwards a deed made to both of them, it was never the intent of appellant or his mother that appellant should acquire a legal title to any portion of said property, and that appellant, though a party to the conveyance, never asserted or claimed any interest in it until long after the death of his mother and the settlement of her estate, and then only when respondent brought this action for a partition of the property. Even then his claim under the deed from the railroad company is not a definite and emphatic one, but rather of a hesitating and indefinite character.

Considering now the evidence in the case. It appears from the record that the appellant is the only one who could speak fully of the arrangement, if any, between his mother and himself relative to this land and their intentions respecting it, and his testimony is not only meager, but, as to those matters, as well as in other respects, unsatisfactory. We get no information from him how he became connected with his mother as a party to the original contract with the railroad company; how, if he was to acquire one-half of the property, his payment of $250 was but one-twelfth of the purchase price; whether the $250 was not really a loan to his mother to be used by her with her own larger funds in making the first payment on the land; how she came to return him the said $250, or why he accepted it if it was a part of the purchase price and not a loan; and why right thereafter he ceased advancing anything further towards payment of the taxes. In fact, he does not undertake to enlighten us on those important matters at all. As to the deed from the railroad company, all the evidence we have on that subject is that Mrs. Parks paid the entire purchase price for the property, having refunded to appellant the $250 he advanced, and that the deed was made by the railroad company some 7 years after final payment and ran—the same as the contract did—to both Mrs. Parks and the appellant. We stated that the claim of appellant under this deed was not explicit and definite. In that respect it appears from his testimony that he was making a claim in this case that his mother had made a deed in his favor at some time to all of section 29; that she promised to give him the whole section and that he had seen a deed made by her years before her death whereby she had done so. His own assertion of having seen such a deed or of such a promise having been made is all we have on the subject. No such deed was produced. No member of the family or any one else seems to have heard of such an instrument, and certainly no deed was ever delivered by his mother to appellant. Having testified as to the return to him by his mother of the $250 advanced by him when making the original payment on the purchase price of the land, he was asked by the court:

"Q. How do you claim to own one-half interest in this if you got your money back? A. Well, I claim I seen a deed that mother gave me of all of section 29—600 acres. * * * I claim the property because I seen the deed she gave me of all the land. I claim it on the railroad deed, the railroad deed and then this other deed that is now missing."

The only reasonable view to be taken from the evidence as far as the payment of the $250 by appellant is concerned, and the incorporation of his name in the contract of purchase, and the view doubtless taken by the trial court, is that the payment of the $250 was only a loan by appellant to his mother, and the insertion of his name in the contract was made simply as evidence thereof and to secure its repayment. The payment for the property might not be consummated for some years, and in case anything should happen to the mother during that time, and a question should arise among her heirs as to payments made and interests in the property, the right of appellant would be declared. That this money was not to be deemed a payment by appellant as a purchaser of the property with his mother is clear from the fact that she paid him back his advancement and he accepted it without any protest or question, but that its repayment to him was the proper and expected thing. His conduct in that respect is inconsistent with the idea of his being a purchaser with his mother. When he got his money he considered himself out of the transaction. He thereafter paid no taxes, and he assumed no control over the property, nor did he assert or claim any interest in it until this action was commenced.

[2] There is less room for the assertion by him of real actual ownership under the deed. It is true that it gave him a paper or record title, but that is all he can assert. His real interest under the deed would not be any broader than his interest might have been under the contract which the deed followed. He never paid any valuable consideration, or, in fact, any consideration at all, for the title under either the contract or deed. In fact, he does not claim that he paid any, asserting practically as to the deed that by allowing it to be made in his name his mother intended thereby to make him an advancement to the extent of one-half of the property. It does not appear that it was through any direction of the mother that the deed was made by the railroad company to both herself and the appellant. It will be observed that the deed was not made until several years after the final payment for the land, and was doubtless issued by the railroad company as soon as it obtained a patent to the land. In doing so it followed the contract, as it would have doubtless done anyhow, unless there was some assignment showing to it that appellant had disposed of his interest under the contract to his mother. It is true that it would have been more regular for the mother to have had the deed issued to herself. The only effect, however, of a failure to do this was, under the circumstances, to vest in appellant an apparent title to an undivided interest in the property. This was the apparent effect, but the legal effect was to make him a trustee for his mother under the familiar doctrine of a resulting trust, which occurs where the consideration for the purchase of real property is paid by one person and the title thereto is taken in the name of another. Civ. Code, § 853. All the purchase price of this property was paid by the mother, and the legal title to half of it taken in the name of appellant. This was the simple transaction; and, this being all that was shown in the matter, the principle of a resulting trust applies under which the apparent title which appellant held was held solely in trust for his mother.

[3] While appellant does not question the rule of resulting trusts, he contends that it should not apply here because the fact of having the deed run to both his mother and himself must be treated as disclosing an intention on her part to make a gift to him of one-half the property in the nature of an advancement. But it does not appear that she had the deed made to him. It was doubtless simply made by the railroad company after it received its patent running to the parties appearing on the original contract of purchase. The most that appears is that the mother let it stand that way. There is no evidence in the case warranting any inference that the mother had a greater affection for the appellant than for her other children, or that his circumstances of life were such that an advancement to him above her other children might naturally be expected from her, nor is there evidence of anything he ever did with respect to the property or for or on behalf of his mother or her interests which would prompt her to treat him with more consideration than her other children. Nor did the facts that she paid him back his money, never demanded a conveyance from him after the making of the deed by the railroad company, or bring suit to quiet title or have a trust declared, establish the advancement theory. The mother knew the true fact as did the appellant. Both knew that appellant had no real interest in this property, as did also the rest of the family. The family seem to have lived in entire harmony, the mother having confidence in all her children. She, if she ever gave the matter a thought, rested content that appellant would make no claim under a conveyance which, while it purports to give him an interest in the property, in truth did not do so, a fact which he recognized in her lifetime by never making any claim of interest under it. It is not at all an uncommon thing for parents who repose that confidence in their children to fail to take every precaution with respect to their property which may obviate subsequent disputes among the heirs. It does, however, sometimes occur.

From these considerations we are satisfied that the trial court was warranted in concluding, notwithstanding the conveyance from the railroad company to appellant and his mother, that in effect the real and true title to the property, both equitable and legal, was vested in Mrs. Parks at the time of her death, and that by her will and the decree of distribution in her estate, and solely thereby, appellant and respondent succeeded each to an undivided one-half of section 29, or 300 acres each, and that the court properly entered a judgment of partition.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. SHORTRIDGE. (Cr. 2189.)

1. HOMICIDE ⇐203(7)—DYING DECLARATIONS —ADMISSIBILITY.

Where a surgeon's testimony showed that a wound inflicted by defendant upon deceased was fatal, and district attorney, before questioning deceased, asked if his statement was made because he believed he was going to die, to which he replied affirmatively, deceased's statement then made to district attorney was admissible as a dying declaration.

2. HOMICIDE ⇐338(3)—ADMISSION OF DYING DECLARATION—HARMLESS ERROR.

Any error in the admission of deceased's statement as a dying declaration was not prejudicial to defendant, where his own statements, in the presence of different persons and at different times, as to the subject-matter of the declaration, were substantially identical with it.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐547(3)—BEST EVIDENCE —PRELIMINARY TRIAL—STATEMENT OF ACCUSED.

Where accused, after warning by magistrate at his preliminary hearing that he might make a statement, but that it might be used against him at trial, made a free, voluntary statement, taken down as required by Pen. Code, § 869, a witness present at hearing might testify as to such statements, against objection that record was the best evidence.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⇐829(1)—REQUESTED INSTRUCTIONS—GIVEN INSTRUCTIONS.

In a prosecution for murder, the refusal of defendant's requested instructions, though mainly correct statements of law, was not error, where the jury were elsewhere fully, fairly, and favorably instructed thereon.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; Eugene P. McDaniel, Judge.

Will Shortridge was convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to execution, and from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

Oscar Hudson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ray Manwell, of Marysville, U. S. Webb, of San Francisco, J. Charles Jones, of Sacramento, and Edward B. Stanwood, of Marysville, for the People.

VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem. Following his conviction of murder in the first degree, defendant was sentenced to execution. He appeals from the judgment so pronounced, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Briefly stated, the facts surrounding the homicide, and concerning which there is no dispute, are as follows: At about 2:30 o'clock on the morning of May 7, 1918, James Mock, a police officer of Marysville, was informed that defendant had robbed a person in a certain rooming house, and started out to apprehend him. Finding defendant in some brush near the railroad track, he placed him under arrest, and with his prisoner proceeded a distance of some 30 or 40 feet, when he stopped and whistled twice for the apparent purpose of attracting attention of other officers engaged in the search for defendant. Receiving no reply, he, in accordance with an expressed intention so to do, proceeded to place handcuffs upon defendant, who strenuously resisted his efforts, as a result of which the handcuffs were either knocked or dropped upon the ground. Thereupon the officer drew his gun, which, in the scuffle that ensued, defendant secured, and with it, after backing away some distance, fired the shot that caused the death of Mock about seven days thereafter. The defense was based upon insanity and self-defense.

As grounds for a reversal of the judgment, appellant insists that the court committed prejudicial error in, first, receiving in evidence a statement of the deceased, purporting to be offered as his dying declaration, without proper foundation laid therefor; second, that the court erred in admitting parol evidence of the statements made by defendant at his preliminary hearing before the magistrate; and, third, that he was prejudiced by the rulings of the court in refusing to give certain instructions requested by him.

[1, 2] As to the first alleged error, it was made to appear by the testimony of the surgeon that this wound, the character and seriousness of which he described, was a fatal one, and the stenographer who took the statement testified that the district attorney, prior to questioning deceased, said, "Jim, you know what statement you make is made because you believe you are going to die," to which he assented by replying, "Yes, sir." Upon this showing, defendant's objection to the reception of the statement in evidence, as a dying declaration of the deceased, was overruled, and the same admitted. While the evidence is meager, nevertheless it sufficiently appears from the statement of the district attorney, which deceased adopted as his own, that he later made the declaration and answers to the questions put by the district attorney, believing that his wound would prove fatal, and under a sense of impending death. However, even if this were not so, we would be constrained to hold that defendant suffered no prejudice by reason of the ruling, for the reason that his own statements, in the presence of different persons, and at different times, made by him as to the subject of the declaration, were in substance identical therewith.

[3] As to the second alleged error, it appears that at defendant's preliminary hearing, he, after being informed of his rights by the magistrate, was told that, in addition to his right to question the witnesses on the part of the state, he could make any statement he desired, but that such statement must be free and voluntary and subject to its use against him in the trial court. Defendant's objection that such statement so made at said time by defendant was taken down by the reporter as required by section 869, Penal Code, and hence the record thereof was the best evidence, was overruled, and Richard Barrett, present at said hearing, was permitted to testify to certain statements so made at the time by defendant. We perceive no merit in appellant's contention. As shown by the record, the statements as to which Barrett testified were voluntarily made by defendant, and they were subject to the same rules and mode of proof as though made elsewhere than at the preliminary hearing. Counsel for appellant has attached to the record herein a transcribed copy of the deposition taken at the hearing, upon which he attempts to argue that defendant's preliminary hearing was unfair, and calculated to deprive defendant of some of his lawful rights. But such deposition was not offered in evidence at the trial, and hence has no place in the record, and cannot be considered here for any purpose.

[4] Defendant requested the court to give to the jury 28 separate instructions, all of which were refused. His counsel, without argument, other than that he believes them to be correct statements of the law, assigns as prejudicial error 16 of the rulings so made. No purpose could be served by an extensive review of the instructions so refused. Suffice it to say that we have, owing to the gravity of the case, with painstaking care, considered each and every one of them; that, as claimed by counsel for the appellant, they are, in the main, correct statements of the law applicable to the case as tried, but in so far as correct, and upon every question presented by the evidence which could possibly avail defendant, the jury were elsewhere fully, fairly, and, we may say as to defendant, favorably instructed.

As appears from defendant's own testimony, the case is one where a police officer, knowing of, or having good reason to believe, that defendant had committed a felony, arrested him therefor, using no unnecessary force in so doing, and the latter, for the sole reason that he objected to having handcuffs placed upon him, resists the officer, takes his gun from him, with which, because the officer was using his club to protect himself and subdue his prisoner, he fires the fatal shot and makes his escape.

In addition to the plea of insanity, defendant urged, at the trial, that he was justified in killing deceased in self-defense, both of which questions, upon proper instructions, were submitted to the jury, which found adversely to him. The sufficiency of the evidence to warrant its verdict is not questioned.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Ex parte McCREADY. (Cr. 2216.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS ⊜69—FEDERAL COURT—SUPERIOR COURT—PENDENCY OF HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS.

Where superior court having imposed void sentence pronounced a second sentence, pendency of habeas corpus proceedings in United States District Court for purpose of having first sentence declared void did not invalidate second sentence under Rev. St. U. S. § 766 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1292), superior court treating first judgment as void in pronouncing second sentence, not acting in any matter pending and in process of being heard in United States District Court.

2. COURTS ⊜97(5) — DECISIONS — FEDERAL COURTS—SUPERIOR COURT.

Decisions of federal courts of last resort construing and applying Rev. St. U. S. § 766 (U. S. Comp. St. § 1292), providing that, pending habeas corpus proceedings in federal court, any proceeding in any state court against prisoner for any matter heard and determined under habeas corpus writ shall be void, will be deemed controlling by the Supreme Court in action involving applicability of such statute.

In Bank.

In the matter of the application of L. D. McCready for a writ of habeas corpus. Writ dismissed, and petitioner remanded.

---

L. D. McCready, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb and John H. Riordan, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. A writ of habeas corpus was issued upon the petitioner's application and hearing had thereon. The admitted facts of the case are these: During the year 1917 the petitioner pleaded guilty of the crime of rape in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles, Cal., and by the judgment of said court entered upon such plea was on August 1, 1917, sentenced to an indeterminate term in the state prison at San Quentin of not less than 1 year nor more than 50 years; and was on August 3, 1917, confined in the said state prison under such judgment and sentence. After serving therein for a period of about 10 months, the petitioner herein applied for a writ of habeas corpus to the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of California, claiming that said judgment and sentence were void, for the reason that the offense to which he had pleaded guilty was committed prior to the taking effect of the statute providing for indeterminate sentences. The said District Court returned the petitioner to the custody of the warden of the said state prison pending the determination of that matter; and thereupon and on May 21, 1918, the petitioner herein was taken before the superior court of the said county of Los Angeles and was there and by the judgment of said court resentenced to be imprisoned in said state prison for a term of 12 years; and on May 25, 1918, was again received and retained in said state prison by virtue of said second judgment and sentence. Thereafter and on August 23, 1918, the said District Court of the United States dismissed the said application of the petitioner for a writ of habeas corpus. Thereafter and on October 25, 1918, the petitioner filed the pending application for a writ of habeas corpus in this court.

Two points are made by him upon the hearing thereon. The first of these is that the first judgment and sentence of the petitioner being void under the authority of In re Lee, 171 Pac. 958, the superior court which had pronounced the same had no jurisdiction to pronounce a second judgment and impose a second sentence in his case, and hence that the said second judgment and sentence under which he is now being held is also void. The action of the said superior court in the matter of having the petitioner herein returned for a second judgment and sentence was taken under and by virtue of the express suggestion of this court in the case of In re Lee, supra, as applicable to all similar cases, which suggestion we have since approved in the case of In re Fritz, 177 Pac. 157, decided December 18, 1918, and to which we adhere in the instant case.

[1, 2] The second point urged by the petitioner is that the second judgment and sentence under which he is now being held was pronounced against him by the said superior court of Los Angeles at a time when he was subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District thereof by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus which had been issued out of said court on his behalf and which was still pending and undetermined in said court at the time of the rendition of said second judgment by the superior court of the county of Los Angeles. The petitioner cites as his authority for this contention section 766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. Comp. St. § 1292), which, in so far as it relates to habeas corpus proceedings in the federal courts, provides that pending such proceedings "and until final judgment therein, and after final judgment or discharge, any proceeding against the person so imprisoned or confined or restrained of his liberty, in any state court, or by or under the authority of any state, for any matter so heard and determined, * * * under such writ of habeas corpus, shall be deemed null and void." The petitioner contends that under the authority of this section of the Revised Statutes of the United States the second judgment and sentence of the superior court of Los Angeles county under which he is now confined is null and void. The difficulty with this contention on the part of the petitioner is twofold: In the first place, it appears by the return and hearing upon this writ that the same contention was urged by him upon the final hearing upon the writ of habeas corpus issued on his behalf in the District Court of the United States, and that court, construing said section 766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, held that the same was not applicable to the case of the petitioner for the reason that the proceeding which had been instituted by the petitioner in said court was one wherein he sought to have determined that the first judgment and sentence pronounced against him by said superior court was void; and that the said superior court, in treating its said first judgment and sentence as void and in proceeding to enter and enforce its second judgment and sentence against him, was not acting in any matter pending and in process of being heard and determined in said District Court. In support of this construction of said federal statute, the court cited the case of In re Strauss, 126 Fed. 327, 63 C. C. A. 99, which is precisely in point and which in its turn relies upon the cases of Jugiro v. Brush, 140 U. S. 291, 11 Sup. Ct. 770, 35 L. Ed. 510, and McKane v. Durston, 153 U. S. 684, 14 Sup. Ct. 913, 38 L. Ed. 867, wherein the section 766 of the Revised Statutes of the United States has been similarly construed and limited. We are not only in entire accord with the views expressed by the District Court of the United States in its decision of this matter, but we are also disposed to regard the decisions of the federal courts of last resort construing and applying this federal statute as controlling in the determination of the instant case.

The writ is dismissed, and the petitioner remanded.

PEOPLE v. DENMAN. (Cr. 2187.)

1. HOMICIDE ⟸18(1)—MURDER IN COMMISSION OF OTHER OFFENSE—DEGREE.

Under Pen. Code, § 189, one who kills another in perpetration, or attempt to perpetrate, arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem, is guilty of murder in the first degree, regardless of whether the killing was intentional.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸485(2)—HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS—INSANITY.

In prosecution for murder, where defense was insanity, district attorney could properly state hypothetical question to medical witness, based upon facts given in testimony but omitting certain defensive facts, though the testimony in regard thereto was not contradicted.

3. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸485(1) — HYPOTHETICAL QUESTIONS—BASIS.

While hypothetical question must be based upon facts claimed to be shown by evidence, it need not embrace all the evidence, may be addressed to any reasonable theory taken by counsel, and counsel may frame question to accord with his theory and to disregard facts which he believes to have no material bearing.

4. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1160 — REVIEW — NEW TRIAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

Where the evidence presented on motion for new trial was conflicting, the decision of the trial court denying the motion is conclusive upon the court on appeal.

5. WAR ⟸32—OFFENSES BY SOLDIERS—JURISDICTION.

Any changes in articles of war in years 1913 and 1916 did not alter rule that courts-martial do not have exclusive jurisdiction for trial of a soldier for murder committed in time of war, but that the state courts have jurisdiction until it is assumed by military authorities.

6. WAR ⟸32 — COURTS-MARTIAL—JURISDICTION.

Provision of Articles of War, art. 15 (U. S. Comp. St. § 2308a), preventing construction of article conferring jurisdiction on courts-martial, so as to deprive military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunal of concurrent jurisdiction, did not impliedly deprive civil courts of concurrent jurisdiction.

7. WAR ⟸32—OFFENSES BY SOLDIERS—JURISDICTION.

Conceding paramount right of military authorities in time of war to custody of soldier notwithstanding criminal charges against him in the courts of a state, the right inures solely to military authorities, and cannot be raised by the offender.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Harold Denman was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Judgment and order denying new trial affirmed.

Earl Rogers, Paul W. Schenck, Charles Williams, V. J. Cobb, Frank Dominquez, and O. G. Kuklinski, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn and Jerry H. Powell, Deputy Attys. Gen., for the People.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of Los Angeles county of the crime of murder in the first degree, and adjudged to suffer death. He appeals from the judgment.

No claim is made that the evidence was in any way insufficient to support the verdict. The deceased was shot to death by the defendant on a public street in the city of Los Angeles. The theory of the prosecution, amply sustained by the evidence, was that the killing was done in the perpetration of a robbery of the deceased by defendant and two companions. The defense was insanity. The defendant was most ably defended, and apparently was accorded every substantial right. The suggestions of error in the proceedings are very few, considering the length of the trial, and we find nothing of substance in any of them.

[1] We regard it as settled law in this jurisdiction that one who kills another in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem, is guilty of murder of the first degree by force of the provision of section 189, Penal Code, altogether regardless of any question whether the killing was intentional or unintentional. As said in one of the cases:

"Nor is it of the slightest consequence that the conspirators may not have intended to bring about their victim's death. The killing, having occurred in the perpetration of robbery, was murder of the first degree. Pen. Code, § 189." People v. Raber, 168 Cal. 318, 143 Pac. 318; People v. Milton, 145 Cal. 169, 78 Pac. 549; People v. Witt, 170 Cal. 108, 148 Pac. 928.

We see no reason to doubt the correctness of the views expressed in the cases cited. Appellant's claim of error in the instructions in this behalf must be held to be unfounded.

[2] Objection was made to certain hypothetical questions propounded by the district attorney to medical witnesses called by him as experts on the issue of insanity, the objection being in substance that the questions did not contain all the material facts claimed to have been shown by defendant's witnesses, without contradiction by any of the witnesses for the prosecution. The objection is based upon the fact that there was some evidence given by witnesses for defendant which, it is claimed, tended to show a hereditary predisposition to insanity, certain head injuries to the defendant in his early youth, which resulted in a disordered mind, and the inordinate use, by smoking, of a Mexican weed known as marihuana, the constant use of which for a more or less extended period of time was calculated, according to testimony given by witnesses for the defendant, to produce insanity; that this testimony was not contradicted by any witness for the prosecution; and that the district attorney in his hypothetical questions to his expert witnesses failed to refer to any of these elements. It is not claimed that any of the facts stated in the hypothetical questions of the district attorney was without support in the evidence. The district attorney elected to confine his hypothetical questions to evidence as to the acts, course of conduct, and statements of the defendant from a date shortly prior to the alleged crime, including, of course, the facts, as claimed by him to have been shown, as to the preparation for the robbery and the killing in the perpetration thereof, and the subsequent conduct and statements of the defendant. His theory, whether correct or not, doubtless was that, in view of the evidence as to the facts stated in his questions, the evidence as to other matters relied upon by counsel for defendant had no substantial importance in the matter of the determination of the issue of insanity. In view of the well-settled law in this jurisdiction, it cannot be held that the trial court erred in overruling the objections to these questions.

[3] It is thoroughly settled here that, while a hypothetical question must be based upon facts claimed to be shown by evidence in the case, it is not essential that it embrace all the evidence in the case upon the subject of inquiry, that it may be addressed to any reasonable theory which may be taken by counsel, and that counsel has the right to frame a question to accord with his theory of what the material facts are as shown by that evidence, and in so doing may omit facts which, from his point of view, have no material bearing upon the subject under inquiry. See People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 216, 48 Pac. 75; People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 566, 48 Pac. 711; Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co., 155 Cal. 716, 103 Pac. 190. See, also, Lawson on Expert and Opinion Evidence (2d Ed.) pp. 166 and 167; 2 Jones, Commentaries on the Law of Evidence, § 371; Burt v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 445, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344, 39 L. R. A. 305, 330. Counsel for defendant had the right on cross-examination to question these expert witnesses fully as to the effect of such additional facts as he deemed shown by evidence and material to the issue, and the record shows that he was fully accorded this right. There is no basis whatever for any claim of prejudicial error in the matter of rulings on hypothetical questions.

Examination of the record has failed to indicate to us that there was any prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney during the trial of this cause.

[4] We see no force in the claim that the trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for a new trial. As to the matters complained of, in so far as we regard them as important, the evidence afforded by the affidavits presented on the motion was conflicting, and the decision of the trial court thereon is conclusive on us. We see no reason to doubt the correctness of that conclusion.

The main contention on this appeal is that the superior court was without jurisdiction to try the defendant. This claim, made for the first time on this appeal, is based upon certain facts disclosed by the evidence as to which there is no dispute. At the time of the commission of the homicide a state of war existed between the United States and the governments of Germany and Austria-Hungary, and the offense of defendant was therefore one committed in time of war. The defendant was at the time of such offense a private soldier in the army of the United States, regularly enlisted and mustered into service, and subject to the articles of war and the provisions of the United States statutes with respect to the jurisdiction of courts-martial. The evidence shows further that at the time of the homicide he had been absent from his station, Camp Kearny, for several days. He was not engaged during this time in the performance of any military duty. The day after the homicide he was arrested in the city of Los Angeles by the civil authorities, and has ever since been in the custody of the state. No demand for his custody has ever been made by the military authorities, or any claim urged by them or on their behalf that the state courts are without jurisdiction to proceed in his case. The defendant alone makes this claim. It does not appear that any court-martial proceeding has ever been initiated against him. The claim is that under the articles of war the offense of defendant, although a crime under the law of the state, was cognizable only by a court-martial, and that the courts of the state were entirely without jurisdiction to try him therefor, or to adjudge punishment in the event of his conviction. This claim is based solely on the fact that defendant was at the time of the offense a member of the army of the United States, and that the offense was committed in time of war. Admittedly the offense was not committed in the performance of any military duty, or in any place under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

The right of Congress to provide for exclusive jurisdiction in courts-martial and other military tribunals as to persons in the military service of the United States for offenses of any kind committed in time of war may be freely conceded. It is not disputed by the Attorney General in this case. But it is claimed on behalf of the state that, while Congress has invested courts-martial with jurisdiction to try and adjudge to punishment any person subject to military law who commits murder or rape in time of war within the geographical limits of the states of the Union and the District of Columbia, it has not deprived or attempted to deprive the civil courts of the state of jurisdiction in such cases; has not made the jurisdiction of the military tribunals exclusive of that of the state courts.

That this was true prior to the revisions of the articles of war in 1913 and 1916 is amply evidenced by the decisions of both federal and state courts, there being practically no conflict of authority on the proposition. It was almost universally understood and declared by the courts wherever the question was raised that the design of those provisions of the articles of war which confer jurisdiction on courts-martial to try and adjudge to punishment persons in military service for such offenses as murder, rape, etc., committed in time of war, was simply to confer a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the state courts under the laws of the state; it being deemed essential to the enforcement of discipline and the protection of citizens that such offenses should be cognizable by a military court. Especially was this true in view of the fact that the efficiency of the service in time of war made it essential that the military authorities should not be required to deliver to the civil authorities soldiers charged with offenses under the laws of a state, and the articles of war have always so in effect provided. But there was no intent to thereby oust the courts of a state of jurisdiction of any person committing an offense under the laws of the state. As was substantially said in People v. Gardiner, 6 Parker Cr. R. (N. Y.) 143, an intention to exclude the jurisdiction of the state courts in such cases should not be inferred except upon the most clear and explicit language.

While, by reason of the right of the military authorities in time of war to retain the custody of one in military service charged with an offense under the laws of a state, and the possible right of such authorities to take such a person from the custody of the civil authorities (see Ex parte King [D. C.] 246 Fed. 868), the state courts might be practically without power to proceed with the trial or punishment of the offender where the prior right was being asserted by the military authorities, the jurisdiction of such courts still existed. There was nothing in the articles of war to prevent the military authorities from delivering the alleged offender to the civil authorities if they saw fit to do so, or from refusing to assert any claim to his custody when held by the state authorities if they so desired. Having his actual custody without any claim therefor on the part of the military authorities, the state could proceed, through its tribunals, with his trial and punishment, if adjudged guilty, in the same way and to the same extent as in the case of any other offender against its laws. The correctness of the views expressed by the United States Supreme Court in 1878 on this subject, in Coleman v. Tennessee, 97 U. S. 509, 24 L. Ed. 1118, which may fairly be said to be the leading case thereon, has never been questioned by any later decision of that august tribunal. As late as 1909, that court, in Franklin v. United States, 216 U. S. 559, 30 Sup. Ct. 434, 54 L. Ed. 615, referred to this case as holding that the articles of war did not confer upon courts-martial exclusive jurisdiction for the trial of a soldier for murder committed in time of war, and declared that undoubtedly the general rule is that the jurisdiction of civil courts is concurrent as to the offenses triable before courts-martial. See, also, People v. Gardiner, supra.

[5] We cannot see that any change in this well-settled doctrine has been effected by the revisions of the articles of war in the years 1913 (Act March 2, 1913, c. 93, 37 Stat. 721) and 1916 (Act Aug. 29, 1916, c. 418, 39 Stat. 619 [U. S. Comp. St. § 2308a]). Prior to the revisions the article conferring jurisdiction on courts-martial for murder, etc., committed in time of war and declaring the punishment, was article 58 (Act March 3, 1863, c. 75, § 30, 12 Stat. 736), which provided that:

"In time of war, * * * larceny, robbery, * * * murder," etc., "shall be punishable by the sentence of a general court-martial, when committed by persons in the military service of the United States, and the punishment in any such case shall not be less than the punishment provided for the like offense, by the laws of the state, territory, or district in which such offense may have been committed."

It was this article and prior provisions substantially the same that were involved in the decisions to which we have referred. Prior to the revision there was no other article relative to the jurisdiction of courts-martial as to the offenses specified. The article conferred the jurisdiction and declared the punishment. When it came to the revisions, the offenses of murder and rape were dealt with in article 92, and other crimes theretofore specified in the old article 58 were dealt with in article 93. In the revision article 92 is as follows:

"Any person subject to military law who commits murder or rape shall suffer death or imprisonment for life, as a court-martial may direct; but no person shall be tried by court-martial for murder or rape committed within the geographical limits of the states of the Union and the District of Columbia in time of peace."

Article 93 simply provides that as to the crimes specified therein "any person subject to military law * * * shall be punished as a court-martial may direct." Appellant's contention that by the revision exclusive jurisdiction was given to courts-martial is based entirely on the change in phraseology from "shall be punishable" in old article 58 to "shall suffer death or imprisonment for life, as a court-martial may direct" in article 92, and to "shall be punished as a court-martial may direct" in article 93, in view of certain language of Mr. Justice Field in Coleman v. Tennessee, supra, when, in holding that the jurisdiction given courts-martial by article 58 was not exclusive, he pointed out, "among other reasons for his conclusion," that the article "simply declares that the offenses shall be 'punishable,' not that they shall be punished by the military courts," saying further that this was merely saying that they may be thus punished. This was only one of the considerations suggested by the learned justice for his conclusion that no clear intent on the part of Congress to confer exclusive jurisdiction on courts-martial in such cases was shown by the articles of war. We think that, even in the entire absence of other considerations, it would be going far beyond any justifiable limit to conclude that by this mere change of phraseology in a revision of the articles more than 30 years after Coleman v. Tennessee was decided, any such radical change was designed. But, in view of other changes made by the revisions, we are satisfied that no change from the well-settled rule in the matter of jurisdiction was designed. Under the revisions, articles 92 and 93 like the many other articles defining and specifying offenses and prescribing penalties, are no longer the articles conferring jurisdiction. The matter of jurisdiction is specially covered by articles 12 to 16, under the heading "Jurisdiction," by which the jurisdiction of the various kinds of courts-martial is specified. Article 12 declares that—

"General courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense made punishable by these articles," etc.

Under the scheme of the revision the office of such articles as 92 and 93 is simply to declare the crimes and offenses punishable by the articles, and to make such provision as was deemed proper for the punishment to be imposed by the court-martial. That article 92 contains an express provision that, as to murder and rape committed in time of peace within a state or the District of Columbia, no person shall be tried by court-martial, does not affect our conclusion as to this. This being the situation, there was no particular significance in the change made in phraseology on which so much reliance is based. Naturally, we look to the articles conferring jurisdiction to ascertain any intent on the part of Congress to make the jurisdiction of courts-martial thereby conferred exclusive, and, certainly, no such intent is to be found in those articles, or, in our judgment, in any part of the articles of war, when the same is considered in connection with the other parts.

[6] We see no force whatever in the claim that article 15, to the effect that the provisions of the articles conferring jurisdiction upon courts-martial shall not be construed "as depriving military commissions, provost courts, or other military tribunals of concurrent jurisdiction in respect of offenders or offenses that by the law of war may be lawfully triable by" such tribunals, shows an intent to exclude the jurisdiction of civil tribunals. This provision was manifestly designed to make it clear that even as to other military tribunals the jurisdiction of courts-martial was not to be considered exclusive with relation to offenders or offenses that by the law of war might lawfully be tried by such other tribunals. It had no relation whatever to the matter of jurisdiction of the civil courts.

[7] Of course, if the jurisdiction of the courts of the state in such a case as this has not been taken away by Congress, the fact that a concurrent jurisdiction exists as to courts-martial or other military tribunals, or that the military authorities could, if they so desired, take the accused from the custody of the state, is immaterial here. As was said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Ex parte Mason, 105 U. S. 696, 26 L. Ed. 1213, concerning a claim somewhat similar in principle:

"Choice of the tribunal by which he is to be tried has not been given to the offender. He has offended both against the civil and the military law."

Conceding the paramount right of the military authorities in time of war to the custody of any person in the military service of the United States, notwithstanding criminal charges against him in the courts of a state, the right is solely that of the military authorities, to be enforced as the best interests of the military service may seem to them to require. In the absence of some showing of a claim by such authorities, no question of want of jurisdiction can arise.

Decisions to the effect that the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States as to offenses committed within the territorial limits of a state, but upon land over which the state has ceded jurisdiction to the United States, is exclusive of the courts of the state, are not in point. The statute applicable in those cases expressly so provided. See Battle v. United States, 209 U. S. 36, 28 Sup. Ct. 422, 52 L. Ed. 670.

Likewise, decisions in cases where the act complained of in the prosecution in the state court was done by one in the proper discharge of his duty as a soldier of the United States or in pursuance of any law of the United States are not in point here. In such a case, the courts of a state are without power to adjudge punishment. And where the facts entitling the accused to exemption from state control are undisputed, the accused will be discharged on habeas corpus in advance of his trial. Such was held to be the situation in Re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 653, 34 L. Ed. 55, and the decision was based on this condition. This, likewise, was the real basis of the decision in Re Wulzen (D. C.) 235 Fed. 362, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 274, relied on by appellant. See, generally, on this subject, United States v. Lewis (C. C.) 129 Fed. 823. Necessarily these cases and the principle therein upheld have no application to the question before us.

We are of the opinion that the claim of appellant that the superior court of Los Angeles county was without lawful jurisdiction in this matter is not well based.

This disposes of all points made for reversal.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

NICKERSON v. SAN BERNARDINO COUNTY et al. (L. A. 4610.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜70(1)—JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE WITH LEGISLATIVE FUNCTIONS.

When the Legislature has committed to a municipal body the power to legislate on given subjects or has committed to it judgment or discretion, as to matters on which it is authorized to act, equity courts will not interfere with the exercise of such legislative or discretionary functions.

2. COUNTIES ⊜23—DISCRETION OF SUPERVISORS—JUDICIAL CONTROL.

Legislative and discretionary power having been conferred upon a county board of supervisors to purchase land for a county hospital, the board's action as to the amount and price and from whom the land was to be purchased is not subject to review or control by any court.

3. COUNTIES ⊜23—DISCRETION OF SUPERVISORS—JUDICIAL CONTROL.

Whether, in the exercise of legislative powers, a county board of supervisors acts wisely or unwisely, does not concern the courts, and they cannot interfere unless the board is exceeding its legislative powers, or if its judgment or discretion is being fraudulently or corruptly exercised.

4. COUNTIES ⊜54—RESOLUTIONS OF SUPERVISORS—ATTACK.

A resolution by a board of county supervisors, authorized to purchase land for a county hospital, that a certain quantity of land is necessary, cannot be attacked, in a taxpayer's suit to recover money paid for the land, by evidence of a member of the board that such quantity was unnecessary.

5. COUNTIES ⊜104—ACTION OF SUPERVISORS—JURISDICTIONAL PREREQUISITES.

Where a county board of supervisors has been authorized to purchase land for hospital purposes, the publication of proper notice of intention to purchase is a jurisdictional prerequisite to the power of the board to act.

6. COUNTIES ⊜104—NOTICE OF SUPERVISORS' INTENTION TO PURCHASE LAND—SUFFICIENCY.

A notice of intention by county supervisors to purchase land for hospital purposes, part of which land was held in common by a husband and wife, mentioning the husband's name only as the party from whom the purchase was to be made, was not insufficient under Pol. Code, § 4041, subdiv. 6, requiring the notice to state the name of the person from whom the purchase is to be made.

7. COUNTIES ⊜104—NOTICE OF SUPERVISORS' INTENT TO PURCHASE LAND — SUFFICIENCY.

That a notice of intention, under Pol. Code, § 4041, subdiv. 6, by county supervisors to purchase land for hospital purposes, disclosed an intent to purchase from a named person, was not defective, merely because such person had died and the property could only be purchased from his estate.

8. COUNTIES ⊜104—NOTICE OF SUPERVISORS' INTENT TO PURCHASE LAND—SUFFICIENCY.

That a notice, under Pol. Code, § 4041, subdiv. 6, given by county supervisors to purchase lands for hospital purposes, gave the acreage to be purchased and the price per acre, was not defective as failing to state the price, merely because the acreage was to be "more or less."

9. COUNTIES ⊜104—CLAIMS AGAINST COUNTY — NECESSITY OF PRESENTATION — RIGHTS OF TAXPAYERS.

Where supervisors had made an order directing payment to be made for land purchased for hospital purposes, a taxpayer cannot raise the point that Pol. Code, §§ 4074, 4075, and 4076, requiring all claims against the county to be presented to the board for allowance, had not been complied with; neither he nor any other taxpayer having been injured.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by A. E. Nickerson against the County of San Bernardino and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Goodcell & Goodcell and Cecil H. Phillips, all of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Ralph E. Swing, Byron Waters, Holcomb & Coy, and T. W. Duckworth, all of San Bernardino, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. The plaintiff, as a taxpayer of San Bernardino county, brought this action against said county and the other defendants, consisting of three members of its board of supervisors, its county treasurer, and county auditor, together with the owners of certain lands, the purchase of which is involved in this suit.

It appears that on September 10, 1914, the board of supervisors of San Bernardino county authorized and called a special election and submitted to the voters of the county the question of incurring a bonded indebtedness in the sum of $150,000, the money raised thereby to be expended "for purchasing necessary county hospital grounds, to construct thereon necessary county hospital buildings, and equip and furnish the same with necessary appliances, furniture and hospital equipment." The bonded indebtedness was favorably voted, bonds were issued and sold by the board of supervisors, the proceeds placed in the hospital improvement fund, and thereupon the said board called for the submission to it of sealed proposals for furnishing tracts of land for a hospital site. In response to said call, C. J. Anderson, one of the defendants, submitted a proposal for the sale to the county of a tract of land containing 93½ acres, the offer stating that the entire tract consisted of several tracts of land owned by said Anderson and several others named in the proposal and in whose behalf the offer was made. The price was stated as $645 per acre.

On June 2, 1915, the board of supervisors, by resolution, declared its intention to purchase the said land and thereupon published a notice of intention to do so. Thereafter and in due course it passed a resolution purporting to consummate the purchase of the land at the price stated, which price was to be paid when a favorable report on the title to the property was made by the district attorney. At the same time it ordered the money to be placed in escrow to pay for the land.

It is then alleged in the complaint that the land so purchased contains more than 60 acres that are not necessary for necessary hospital grounds, and that the board purchased this tract of land of 93½ acres for the purpose of using all of the portion thereof not necessary for hospital grounds for a county farm; that it was the intention of the members of the board of supervisors and those who voted for the purchase of said tract to purchase it for necessary hospital grounds and for use by said county as a county farm; that 30 acres is all the land necessary for necessary county hospital grounds; and that the amount of money which would be left in the treasury after the purchase of said tract of land exceeding 30 acres will be wholly inadequate and insufficient to carry out and fulfill the purpose for which said bonds were issued and sold. It was further alleged by plaintiff that notice was served on the defendants, the treasurer and auditor of the county, that the purchase of said land was illegal, and that neither of them should authorize or pay any money on account thereof, and that each, notwithstanding said notice, paid the sum of $46,968.90 on account of the purchase of said land; that no claim was ever filed with the board of supervisors in the manner required by law for the payment of said money, nor was its payment authorized or allowed by the board of supervisors after the presentation to them of a claim therefor; that unless restrained from so doing said auditor and treasurer intend to pay over the balance of $13,338.60 for the purchase of said property. It is also alleged that $645 an acre, agreed to be paid as the purchase price of said land, is greatly in excess of its value, and that at the time this action was commenced deeds to the land in favor of the county had been made and delivered to it by the various owners of the tracts of land purchased except one. This one consisted of the property of the J. A. Anderson estate. A deed to the county of that land had been executed by all the heirs of said estate except one, whose whereabouts was unknown, and proceedings were then being taken in the estate of said J. A. Anderson to have a probate sale of said Anderson tract made to the county, thus vesting the title in the county against the absent heir; that it was for this Anderson tract for which the $13,338.60 was still to be paid from the hospital fund. The prayer of the complaint was that plaintiff recover from the defendants other than the county of San Bernardino, but for its benefit, the moneys expended and paid for the purchase of the various tracts of land of which conveyances were made to the county; for a decree restraining the payment of any money for the Anderson tract; and for general relief.

The defendants, in their answer, denied all the material allegations of the complaint upon which plaintiff asserted a right of action against any of them, and denied that the land purchased was not necessary for necessary hospital grounds. They averred that a tract of land of 28.5 acres, theretofore used by the county for hospital grounds, was inadequate, and that at the time of the purchase of the land in question the board of supervisors found and determined that the amount of land purchased was necessary for necessary county hospital grounds, and denied that the land purchased, or any part of it, was purchased to provide the county with a county farm, or for any other purpose than as specified in the proceedings authorizing its purchase.

On the issues joined, the cause went to trial, which resulted in a motion of defendants for a nonsuit being granted, and a judgment of nonsuit accordingly entered, from which plaintiff appeals.

Appellant makes several points for a reversal which, however, may be considered under two general heads which are: First, that the court erred in refusing to allow him to introduce certain testimony; and, secondly, in refusing to sustain appellant in his attacks upon the validity of certain proceedings of the board of supervisors and the action of the other county officers defendant.

As to the claim of error in rejecting certain testimony: Appellant called as a witness one of the members of the board of supervisors, who had voted for the purchase of the land in question, and sought to prove by him that the greater portion of said land was purchased for a county farm; that the amount of land purchased greatly exceeded in acreage the amount of land necessary for necessary county hospital grounds; and that the money paid for the land was grossly in excess of its value. The court sustained objections to this line of testimony.

[1-3] It is not necessary to enter into any extended discussion of this assigned error. The ruling of the court was clearly within a well-recognized principle of law controlling the power of courts with respect to the review of proceedings of municipal bodies acting in their legislative or discretionary capacities. When the Legislature has committed to a municipal body the power to legislate on given subjects or has committed to it judgment or discretion as to matters upon which it is authorized to act, courts of equity have no power to interfere with such a body in the exercise of its legislative or discretionary functions. That the power conferred on the board of supervisors by law relative to the purchase of land for a hospital site, the erection of hospital buildings, and their equipment, was both legislative and discretionary in character, is not open to dispute. The law cast upon the board the duty of determining whether in its judgment the public necessity required that the county should acquire a new county hospital and conferred upon it the power necessary to accomplish this if it should so determine. The money to do so was, it is true, to be furnished through the action of the voters of the county; but it was left to the board to determine how much money would be needed to acquire a site and construct the hospital buildings and to determine the quantity of land necessary for such site, to call for proposals of land from which to make a selection, to make the selection and determine the price which should be paid for it, and to adopt and approve the style and extent of the buildings to be erected upon the proposed site. All these matters were committed by the statute solely to the board, and their determination involved both legislative action and the exercise of discretion, neither of which was subject to review or control of any court. Whether, in the exercise of legislative powers, a board acts wisely or unwisely, is no concern of the courts. They cannot enter the board room and substitute their judgment for that of the board, nor interfere at all with its action unless the board is exceeding its legislative powers, or its judgment or discretion is being fraudulently or corruptly exercised. This whole subject is considered in the case of Hopping v. City of Richmond, 170 Cal. 605, 150 Pac. 977, and reference is made to this authority for further discussion of the subject.

[4] There is no fraudulent or corrupt conduct asserted against the board of supervisors in making the purchase of the hospital site. All the allegation respecting it is that the quantity of land purchased is more than is necessary for necessary hospital grounds; that the purchase of the entire tract was made to provide both necessary hospital grounds and land to be used as a county farm; and that it was the intention of the board of supervisors, and its purpose, that all that portion of the entire tract not necessary for county hospital grounds was to be used as a county farm or for other purposes. This is not an allegation of fraud or corruption in legislative action or abuse of discretion respecting the purchase. What is in effect alleged is that all the land purchased was purchased with an intention of using that portion of it that was not necessary for a hospital site for a county farm and that 60 acres was all that was necessary for a hospital site; in short, that the board purchased more land than was necessary for a hospital site with the intention of devoting the surplus to a county farm. Now, it appears from the complaint itself that as to this land purchased the board, by its resolution, declared that this purchase of the entire tract was necessary for county hospital grounds. The truth of this resolution plaintiff sought to attack by the testimony of a member of the board of supervisors which passed it, and his complaint is that he was not permitted to do so. We think, however, the court properly refused to permit the witness to do so. The resolution passed was binding on the board and represented its official action on the subject embraced within it, and the simple secret intention of a member of the board or his extraneous expression concerning the use to which, in the future, some part of the land purchased might be devoted, will not be permitted to impeach the integrity of the official intention and purpose of the board disclosed by its records. There is nothing in the acreage of the tract purchased itself to warrant the slightest inference that it was in excess of the quantity necessary for a hospital site. As such public institutions are to be used by a county indefinitely, the board in providing for them must consider, not only the present, but the future, needs of the county, arising from the certainty of always having the sick and afflicted to care for, with the added certainty that as the population of the county increases this public duty will increase with it. No restriction is placed on the board by the statute as to the quantity of land it shall purchase or the character of the buildings it shall erect for county hospital purposes. That matter is committed entirely to the judgment and discretion of the board and when, in the exercise of such judgment and discretion, it determines that a certain quantity of land is necessary for a site, its conclusion must prevail and is not subject to review or control of the courts.

[5] As to the points made by appellant concerning the validity of certain proceedings on the part of the board of supervisors and the action of the treasurer and auditor of the county: Starting with the proposition which is, of course, true, that the publication of a proper notice of intention to purchase land for a hospital site by the board of supervisors was a jurisdictional prerequisite to the power of the board to act in the matter (Winn v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 631, 25 Pac. 968), it is contended by appellant that the public notice of intention to purchase given in this matter was defective in some essential particulars. Subdivision 6 of section 4041 of the Political Code requires such notice of intention to state, among other things, the price to be paid for the property and the name of the person from whom the purchase is to be made, and, it is claimed by appellant, that as to these matters they were not contained in the notice. While counsel makes this broad claim, it is evident on examination of the record that what he really claims is, not that these matters were entirely omitted from the notice, but only that they were defectively stated. But in this we do not agree with him. The purpose of the law in requiring these matters and others to be stated in the notice is to give the taxpayers, upon whose property the burden of taxation for the future payment of the debt entailed for the purchase of the property would fall, full information of what was intended to be done in order that they might determine whether they would or would not attend the meeting of the board when the time for the consummation of the purchase was set and protest or object to the purchase.

[6] Now, as to the points of appellant: As a matter of fact, the notice contained the names of the persons from whom the board of supervisors declared its intention to purchase as contained in the proposal to sell made by C. J. Anderson to the board in his own and on behalf of the others agreeing to the terms of that proposal earlier referred to in this opinion. It appears, however, that as to one of said tracts offered it was owned as tenants in common by Frank Parmenter and his wife, and the name of the husband was alone mentioned as the party from whom the tract was to be purchased as it was alone mentioned in the proposal to sell. Appellant insists that a failure to mention the name of the wife rendered the notice fatally defective. But this amounted only to a failure to state in the notice the name of one of the owners of this particular tract, and the section does not require a statement of the names of the owners of the property proposed to be purchased to be stated in the notice, but only the names of parties from whom it is its intention to purchase. Non constat but that the husband who had offered the common property for sale had arranged to give good title before making the offer to sell. Anyhow, he was the party who offered the property for sale and was the party properly to be mentioned from whom the board intended to purchase this particular tract. If, when it came to consummating the sale, Parmenter could not give a good title, that was another matter; but it could not affect the validity of the published notice. Considering, too, the nature of the title of the Parmenters, the mention of him as the person from whom the purchase of that tract was to be made would in any event fulfill the purpose of the statute. The notice contained a description of all the property intended to be purchased, including the tract owned by the Parmenters in common. No fraud or imposition could, under such circumstances, possibly be practiced on the taxpayers of the county by the omission of the name of one cotenant in the tenancy. It does not approach a case where there is the omission to at all mention the name of a person from whom a particular tract is to be purchased. It may be that in such a case a description of the property by governmental subdivisions or courses and distances without giving the name of the owner or person from whom its purchase was to be made would not give information to the taxpayer of the exact location of the property as readily or accurately as if in connection with the description the name of the party from whom the purchase is to be made, who is generally the owner, was mentioned in connection with the description.

Here, however, the notice subserved just this purpose. It gave a description of the property and the name of the party from whom it was to be purchased and who was in fact one of the owners. It gave the taxpayer all the information necessary for his guidance in determining what action he should take on the contemplated purchase of the Parmenter tract with the others, and hence constituted a fair and substantial compliance with the statute.

[7] The notice of intention to purchase also contained the name of R. J. Anderson as one of the parties from whom a tract, alleged to be owned by him and which was offered to the board with the other tracts, was to be purchased. It appears that R. J. Anderson was dead at the time and that his estate was unsettled. The property stood on the records as belonging to R. J. Anderson when he died and was property of his estate when it was offered by his representatives through C. J. Anderson, who offered all the tracts. The only omission there was in the notice as to this property was an omission to say that the property contemplated to be purchased was property of the estate of R. J. Anderson. No taxpayer could be misled by this omission. He had sufficient information from its being designated as property of R. J. Anderson to find out all about the particular owners of it if he thought that matter important. In this, as with respect to the Parmenters, we think there was a substantial compliance with the statute and that the omissions complained of were not in any respect fatal to the validity of the notice.

[8] It is further insisted that the notice contained no statement of the price to be paid for the property to be purchased. This is based on the fact that the term "more or less" is used in stating the aggregate acreage of the tract to be purchased. This contention is extremely critical. It is universally held that the use of the term "more or less" in notices of a statement of acreage of real property does not render the description uncertain. This being true, and the amount to be purchased being stated at 93½ acres "more or less," and the price stated at $645 per acre, mere computation on the part of the taxpayer would give him reasonable and satisfactory information as to the price to be paid for the property.

[9] Lastly, it is claimed by appellant that the conduct of the auditor and treasurer, the one in auditing, the other in paying, the several warrants on the hospital improvement fund in the county treasury, was illegal, subjecting each to liability for restoration of the money to the fund. In this regard it is insisted that sections 4074, 4075, and 4076, Political Code, which require all claims against the county to be presented to the board of supervisors for allowance and payment applied to the purchase price to be paid to the several owners of the land purchased. In the proceedings for the purchase of the land the board of supervisors had made an order directing payment of the price of the land to be made to the owners out of the hospital improvement fund as soon as deeds thereto were ready for delivery to the county, and when the deeds were delivered the auditor and treasurer paid over the purchase price thereof without the presentation of any claims to the board of supervisors or further order for their payment other than the general one above referred to. Without discussing the relevancy of the sections quoted to claims of this character, it is sufficient for present purposes to say that appellant is not in a position to raise the point he makes. No possible injury to him or to any taxpayer arose, or could arise, from the payments being made as they were. The county got the land it purchased, and it paid the owners the prices it had agreed to pay for it, and it is immaterial now whether there was a strict compliance with the statute in the method of payment or not. Any deviation from a prescribed method under the circumstances was merely an irregularity and harmless.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊂=290(1) — MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=453(2)—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—ASSESSMENTS—BOARD OF TRUSTEES—INTEREST OF MEMBERS.

Interest of one or all of city board of trustees or other municipal body charged with the making or ratifying of assessments for street or other improvements arising from their ownership of property directly affected by improvement does not create such a disqualification to act as to render their action void as not constituting due process of law.

In Bank.

Application for writ of mandate by the Federal Construction Company against J. E. Curd, Superintendent of Streets of the City of Porterville, Cal., and W. L. Graham, Treasurer of said city. Writ denied.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, and Maurice E. Power, of Visalia (Raymond Benjamin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

Guy Knupp, of Porterville, C. L. Russell, Jr., of Tulare, Geo. G. Murry, of Porterville, and Thomas Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an application for a writ of mandate by which the petitioner seeks to compel J. E. Curd as superintendent of streets of the city of Porterville, Cal., to certify to W. L. Graham, as the treasurer of said city, a list of unpaid assessments upon certain street improvement work alleged to have been done therein by the petitioner, and to direct the said treasurer to issue street improvement bonds thereon, representing the amount of said unpaid assessments. The facts giving rise to this proceeding are practically undisputed, and may be stated as follows:

In the month of July, 1915, the city of Porterville, through its regularly constituted officials, initiated proceedings under the Street Improvement Act of 1911 for the improvement of certain of its streets, and in the course thereof duly entered into 14 certain contracts in writing with the petitioner or its assignors herein, whereby the latter agreed to perform certain street work, therein described, in accordance with certain plans and specifications adopted by the board of trustees of said city. The petitioner alleges, and for the purpose of considering the questions of law raised herein it may be taken to be true, that all of the work required to be done by the petitioner or its assignors under the terms of said contracts was performed and completed by it on December 15, 1915, and was then accepted by the superintendent of streets and his certificate of acceptance and approval duly issued. Thereafter, and during the month of October, 1916, the said superintendent of streets prepared and made assessments, as required by said act, covering the cost of the work performed under each of said contracts, and also prepared, in connection with such assessments, a diagram of the streets on which said work had been done, and thereupon attached to each of such assessments a warrant authorizing the petitioner, as such contractor, to demand and receive from the owners of the property, subject to such assessments, the amounts shown to be due thereon. Each of said warrants was dated on the 28th day of October, 1916. In the preparation of said assessments and warrants the said superintendent of streets made use of loose leaves, especially prepared and intended for insertion in a lock book, also prepared to receive and hold the same; and, as each of said assessments and warrants was completed by said superintendent of streets, it was fastened in said lock book, which was marked and entitled "Street Assessments of the City of Porterville." The diagrams of the streets included in said work were also similarly placed in said book, and the said warrants, assessments, and diagrams as so placed were signed by the superintendent of streets and countersigned by the president of the board of trustees of the said city of Porterville, on October 28, 1916. That thereupon, and on said 28th day of October, 1916, the said superintendent of streets recorded said assessments and warrants in his office, as required by law. Subsequent to the performance of the foregoing acts, and within 30 days thereafter, the said superintendent of streets delivered said assessments and warrants to the said petitioner, pursuant to the requirements of said street improvement act, and between the date of the said receipt thereof and the 21st day of November, 1916, the said petitioner made the demand required by said act upon each of the persons assessed for the amount of their respective assessments, and, having done so, the said petitioner redelivered to the said superintendent of streets each and all of such assessments and warrants, with its return as to such demand duly indorsed thereon, which said return was thereupon indorsed by said superintendent of streets upon the record thereof, as required by law. Thereafter, and on November 25, 1916, a number of the persons whose property had been assessed according to said assessments filed with the clerk of the board of trustees of said city their objection, in writing, thereto, setting forth as a ground of their said objections that the said contractor had not completed its said contracts in accordance with the plans and specifications thereof. Due notice was given of these objections, and the matter of the hearing thereon was fixed for the 4th day of December, 1917. Only three members of said board of trustees were present at the hearing upon said objections. It is alleged by the petitioner herein, and is not controverted, that each of the said three members of said board, so conducting and participating in said hearings and rendering their and each of their decisions upon the same, was an owner or was interested in one or other of the parcels of land upon which such assessments had been imposed and in respect to which said objections had been filed and upon which objections said hearing had been had. It was also alleged, and not controverted, that the attorney for the said protestants was at the time thereof and of the hearings thereon a law partner of the city attorney of said city, who was then directly interested in the outcome of such hearings and was thereby biased and prejudiced against the said contractor and who advised and urged the said board of trustees to sustain said objections. At the time of such hearings the petitioner herein objected to the said members of said board sitting upon the hearings thereon or deciding or determining the matter of said protests, and objected to their determination thereof, but, notwithstanding its said objection, the said board of trustees and the said members thereof proceeded to hear and to determine said objections, and to make and enter the order of said board sustaining the same. Notwithstanding said determination and order, the petitioner herein has demanded of the superintendent of streets that he make and certify to the city treasurer a list of all of said assessments which are unpaid, and has also demanded of the said city treasurer that he thereupon make out and deliver to the petitioner bonds representing such unpaid assessments. Said officials having refused to comply with these demands, this proceeding has been instituted by said contractor, the petitioner herein.

The single question requiring determination in this case relates to the right and power of the city council, acting solely through and by the aforesaid three members thereof, to sit and act as a judicial body in the hearing and determination of the aforesaid appeals and protests of the property owners as to the proper completion of the said work of street improvement in compliance with the contract providing for the same, and as to the validity of said assessments claimed to be due and payable from them thereon. It is the contention of the petitioner herein that the three members of the city council, who assumed to sit and act upon the hearing of said appeals and protests, were disqualified to so sit and act by reason of their, and each of their, interest in property directly affected by such assessments and directly involved in and represented upon said appeals, and that the compulsion which the act imposed upon the petitioner to submit the issues raised upon said appeals and protests as to the sufficiency of its compliance with its said contracts and as to its right to have said assessments levied and collected and said warrants paid, to a tribunal thus composed of persons interested in the determination of such issues adverse to said petitioner, amounted to a denial to it of due process of law. In making this contention the petitioner herein is drawn to the extreme position of claiming that the portions of the act under review which provide for appeals by property owners to the city council for relief from the assessments sought to be imposed upon their property, upon the ground of irregularities on the part of the street superintendent in levying the same, or upon the ground that the contract has not been fully or properly performed, is unconstitutional and void for the reason that no provision is made for the hearing upon such appeals before a judicial body whose membership is not interested in the result of such appeals, and hence that such provisions should be eliminated from the body of the act, and that, being eliminated and the right of property owners to have and take such appeals being thus taken away, the petitioner would be entitled to the writ of mandate which it seeks by this proceeding. To adopt this view would be to deny to property owners any right of appeal to the city council under this act, no matter how irregular the proceedings of the street superintendent, or how incomplete or insufficient the performance of the contract, might be—a consequence quite as disastrous to the property owners in the denial of their constitutional right to due process of law as the alleged denial to the petitioner of the similar right would be. While for this reason alone we would be very reluctant to adopt a view which would lead to such a consequence, and while for the added reason that its adoption would compel the conclusion that the entire act was invalid upon the authority of Hutson v. Woodbridge Protection Dist., 79 Cal. 90, 16 Pac. 549, 21 Pac. 435 (a result which the petitioner herein would probably not relish), we would not wish to adopt it, we think that there are other and sufficient reasons why the contention of the petitioner herein cannot be sustained.

Conceding it to be true, as a rule of ethics, that no person or body of persons should sit in judgment in cases and proceedings in which they are interested parties, and conceding, also, that it has been frequently and properly held that the attempted violation of this ethical rule by persons presiding over causes triable in the ordinary courts of justice amounts to a denial of due process of law to those who are injuriously affected by such denial, yet, to this there are certain exceptions which are said to spring from the necessity of the situation. The statement in general terms of the principle underlying these exceptions is to be found thus stated in 23 Cyc. 581:

"Where disqualification if permitted to prevail destroys the only tribunal in which relief may be sought, and thus effectively bars the doors of justice, the disqualified judge is bound to hear and decide the cause."

The particular application of this principle has been most frequently made to the class of quasi judicial bodies of which the city council of Porterville is an example, such as boards of supervisors, city councils, boards of trustees, boards of equalization, commissioners of irrigation and drainage districts, and the like. While these various bodies are as a rule executive and administrative as to most of their functions, there are certain matters committed by the law of their creation to their judgment and discretion, which matters are judicial in their nature; such as the fixing of water rates, the equalizing of taxes, the determination of benefits, the correction of errors in assessments, and the like. Quite frequently the entire community to which the members of these boards or bodies belong are directly and beneficially interested in the result of the hearing and determination of such matters, and they themselves are therefore interested parties therein. Of necessity, therefore, in many of such matters, unless the members of the body designated by statute as the sole body to hear and determine the same are qualified notwithstanding their interest so to do, they never could be determined without recourse in every instance to actions in regularly constituted judicial tribunals. The state of California, in common with practically every other state in the Union, has committed itself to the more practical plan of relegating all such matters to the local boards, councils or other municipal bodies, and of providing that they shall have jurisdiction to decide them, notwithstanding the fact that some or all of the persons constituting their membership may be more or less directly interested in the result of their action. In the case of Hibben v. Smith, 191 U. S. 310, 24 Sup. Ct. 88, 48 L. Ed. 195, the question was directly presented to that tribunal in an action involving the validity of a street assessment, where the members of the board of town trustees levying the assessment were residents and taxpayers of the town, and where two of their number were owners of lots abutting upon the immediate improvement. The court said:

"The objection to the tribunal constituted by the Legislature of Indiana, which the plaintiff in error makes in this particular instance, is that it results in making a person a judge in his own case, and that hence any judgment of a tribunal thus constituted is absolutely void, and may be attacked, as it is attacked in this case, collaterally. It is said that to impose an assessment, which is the same as a judgment under such circumstances, is to take the lot owner's property without due process of law, and violates thereby the federal Constitution. We think the first objection, that all of the members of the board of trustees were residents of and taxpayers in the town, is wholly unimportant. We have not the slightest doubt of the power of a Legislature of a state, unless hampered by some special constitutional provision, to create a tribunal in a city or town, such as the common council or board of trustees, to make an assessment, and that such assessment would be valid, notwithstanding the fact that every member of the board was a taxpayer of the city or the town. It is a matter of legislative discretion as to how such a board shall be constituted, and we hazard nothing in saying that it is quite common throughout the country for the Legislatures of the states to create a tribunal for levying assessments for local improvements in a manner precisely like the case in question. It is not at all analogous, even in principle, to a judge of a court acting in a case in which he is personally interested.

"To say that no one who was a taxpayer in a city or town could act in imposing an assessment upon property therein is to say that the Legislature is wholly without power, by reason of the federal Constitution, to constitute a tribunal to make an assessment where such tribunal is composed of taxpayers in the city or town. This we do not believe. * * * Whether a judgment obtained in a case like this, where two members of a general board created by statute for the purpose of making it, had some interest in some of the property subject to the assessment, was a void or voidable judgment is a proper question for the state court to decide. A state court has the right to place its own construction upon its own judgments, and where, as in a case like this, it holds that the judgment is not void, and that it cannot be attacked collaterally, we ought to follow that determination. Newport Light Co. v. Newport, 151 U. S. 527, 539 [14 Sup. Ct. 429, 38 L. Ed. 259].

"In Lent v. Tillson, 140 U. S. 316 [11 Sup. Ct. 825, 35 L. Ed. 419], which was an assessment case, it was stated by Mr. Justice Harlan, in delivering the opinion of the court ([140 U. S.] p. 333 [11 Sup. Ct. 832, 35 L. Ed. 419]) as follows: 'Other objections have been urged by the plaintiffs which we do not deem it necessary to consider. For instance, it is said that the mayor of the city of San Francisco, one of the board of commissioners, was himself the owner of a lot on Dupont street, and, for that reason, was incompetent to act as one of the board of street commissioners. * * * In respect to all these and like objections, it is sufficient to say that they do not necessarily involve any question of a federal nature, and, so far as this court is concerned, are concluded by the decision of the Supreme Court of California."

The case of Lent v. Tillson, supra, from which the last above-quoted citation was made, was decided by this court in 72 Cal. 404, 14 Pac. 71, and that decision of this court, to which the above-quoted passage refers, has thus stood as the judicial declaration of the law of this state touching the question now before us, for the past 30 years, during which time practically every existing statute governing the subject of street improvements has been enacted. In the case of People, etc., v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207, wherein the question arose as to whether the members of the board of drainage commissioners were disqualified to act as a tribunal to hear objections to the assessment by reason of the fact that they were landholders within the district, this court held that they were not disqualified by their interest, basing its decision to this effect upon the authority of Hibben v. Smith, supra. It would thus seem to be settled that the interest which one or all of the members of boards of supervisors, boards of trustees, city councils, or other municipal bodies charged with the making or rectifying of assessments for street or other improvements may have, arising from the fact of their ownership of property directly affected by the proposed improvement, does not create such a disqualification to sit or act in the premises as to render their action void as not constituting due process of law. This being so, and the city council having heard the appeals and protests of the property owners and having sustained the same, and the record herein failing to show that any further steps have been taken by the petitioner herein to complete the said work of street improvement or to rectify the assessments therefor in accordance with the decision and determination of the said city council, it follows necessarily that the petitioner has not presented to this court such an application as would be sufficient to require the issuance of a writ of mandate herein, and that the de-murrer of the respondents thereto must be sustained.

Writ denied.

FEDERAL CONST. CO. v. CURD, Superintendent of Streets, et al. (S. F. 8728.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=483(3)—IMPROVEMENTS—RECORD OF ASSESSMENTS AND WARRANTS.

Under Street Improvement Act of 1911, §§ 23, 25, 26, and 37, the recordation of the assessments, warrants and diagrams must be made in the usual way in which other official documents are required to be recorded by copying them at length in a book of records to be kept for that purpose.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=493(2)—IMPROVEMENTS — ASSESSMENTS — WARRANTS —APPEAL TO COUNCIL.

Under Street Improvement Act of 1911, §§ 23, 25, 26, 37, the time within which property owners may appeal to city council does not begin to run, nor does contractor's lien attach until the warrants, assessments, and certificates provided in such sections have been duly recorded by being copied in a book of records kept by street superintendent for that purpose.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=483(3) — RECORD OF ASSESSMENTS AND WARRANTS — SUFFICIENCY—STATUTE.

Acts of superintendent of streets in relation to the recordation of assessments, warrants, and diagrams in a street improvement proceeding held not to constitute a complete recordation thereof, in compliance with Street Improvement Act of 1911, §§ 23, 25, 26, and 37.

Application for writ of mandate by the Federal Construction Company against J. E. Curd, Superintendent of Streets of the City of Porterville, and W. L. Graham, treasurer of said city. Writ denied.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, and Maurice E. Powell, of Visalia (Raymond Benjamin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioner.

Guy Knupp, of Porterville, C. L. Russell and C. L. Russell, Jr., both of Tulare, and Thomas, Beedy & Lanagan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, Judge pro tem. This is an application for a writ of mandate by which the petitioner seeks to compel J. E. Curd, as superintendent of streets of the city of Porterville, Cal., to certify to W. L. Graham, as treasurer of said city, a list of unpaid assessments upon certain street improvement work alleged to have been done therein by the petitioner, and to direct the said treasurer to issue street improvement bonds thereon, representing the amount of said unpaid assessments. The facts giving rise to this proceeding are practically undisputed, and may be stated as follows:

In the month of May, 1915, the city of Porterville, through its regularly constituted officials, initiated proceedings, under the Street Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), for the improvement of certain of its streets, and in the course thereof duly entered into 11 certain contracts in writing with the petitioner herein, whereby the latter agreed to perform certain street work therein described in accordance with certain plans and specifications adopted by the board of trustees of said city. The petitioner alleges, and for the purpose of considering the questions of law raised herein it may be taken to be true, that all of the work required to be done by the petitioner under the terms of said contracts was performed and completed by it on July 8, 1915, and was then accepted by the superintendent of streets and his certificate of acceptance and approval duly issued. Thereafter and during the month of July, 1915, the said superintendent of streets prepared and made assessments as required by said act, covering the cost of the work performed under each of said contracts, and also prepared in connection with such assessments a diagram of the streets on which said work had been done; and thereupon attached to each of such assessments a warrant authorizing the petitioner as such contractor to demand and receive from the owners of the property, subject to such assessments, the amounts shown to be due thereon. Each of said warrants was dated either on the 6th or 7th day of August, 1915. In the preparation of said assessments and warrants the said superintendent of streets made use of loose leaves specially prepared and intended for insertion in a lock book also prepared to receive and hold the same; and as each of said assessments and warrants was completed by said superintendent of streets it was fastened in said lock book, which was marked and entitled "Street Assessments of the City of Porterville." The diagrams of the streets included in said work were also similarly placed in said book, and the said warrants, assessments, and diagrams as so placed were signed by the superintendent of streets, and countersigned by the president of the board of trustees of the said city of Porterville, on either August 6 or 7, 1915. That thereupon and as to each of said assessments, warrants, and diagrams so dated, signed and countersigned on the 6th day of August, 1915, the said superintendent of streets made on the said date the following indorsement thereon: "Recorded August 6th, 1915. Irvin H. Althouse, superintendent of Streets of City of Porterville, California;" and as to each of said assessments, warrants, and diagrams which were so dated, signed, and countersigned on August 7, 1915, the said superintendent of streets made a like indorsement, but as of the date of August 7, 1915. This was the method which had always theretofore been pursued by said superintendent of streets and his predecessors in office for the recordation of such warrants, assessments and diagrams, and no other method was adopted or act done, such as the copying in extenso of such documents in any other book or record in the recordation of the said documents in this particular case. Subsequent to the performance of the foregoing acts, and on the same day of their performance, the said superintendent of streets removed each and all of such assessments from the lock book in which the same had been placed, and delivered the same to the said contractor pursuant to the requirements of said street improvement act, and between the date of the said receipt thereof and the 10th day of August, 1915, the said contractor made the demand required by said act upon each of the persons assessed for the amount of their respective assessments; and, having done so, the said contractors, on the 10th day of August, 1915, redelivered to the said superintendent of streets each and all of such assessments and warrants with its return as to such demand duly indorsed thereon; which said return was thereupon indorsed by said superintendent of streets as recorded on said August 10, 1915, and thereupon, and on said August 10, 1915, each of said assessments and warrants was replaced by him in said lock book, where they thereafter remained. On December 27, 1915, a number of the persons whose property had been assessed according to said assessments, filed with the clerk of the board of trustees of said city their objection, in writing, thereto, setting forth as the ground of their said objections that the said contractor had not completed its said contracts in accordance with the plans and specifications thereof. Due notice was given of these objections, and the matter of the hearing thereon was fixed for the 4th day of December, 1917. Only three members of said board of trustees were present at the hearing upon said objections. It is alleged by the petitioner herein, and is not controverted, that each of the said three members of said board so conducting and participating in said hearings and rendering their and each of their decisions upon the same, was an owner or was interested in one or other of the parcels of land upon which such assessments had been imposed and in respect to which said objections had been filed and upon which objections said hearing had been had. It was also alleged, and not controverted, that the attorney for the said protestants was at the time thereof and of the hearings thereon a law partner of the city attorney of said city, who was then directly interested in the outcome of such hearings, and was thereby biased and prejudiced against the said contractor, and who advised and urged the said board of trustees to sustain said objections. At the time of such hearings the petitioner herein objected to the said members of said board sitting upon the hearings thereon or deciding or determining the matter of said protests and objected to their determination thereof, but notwithstanding its said objection the said board of trustees, and the said members thereof, proceeded to hear and to determine said objections and to make and enter the order of said board sustaining the same. Notwithstanding said determination and order the petitioner herein has demanded of the superintendent of streets that he make and certify to the city treasurer a list of all of said assessments which are unpaid, and has also demanded of the said city treasurer that he thereupon make out and deliver to the petitioner bonds representing such unpaid assessments. Said officials having refused to comply with these demands, this proceeding has been instituted by said contractor, the petitioner herein.

[1] The first legal question presented upon the face of the foregoing proceedings is the question as to whether or not there was a proper or sufficient recordation of the said assessments, warrants, and diagrams, above referred to, to satisfy the requirements of the street improvement act. The provisions of the improvement act in relation to such recordation is found in section 23 thereof, which reads, in part, as follows:

"Said warrant, [diagram] and assessment, together with the certificate, if any, of the city engineer of the quantity and character of the work done, shall be recorded in the office of said superintendent of streets. * * * When so recorded the several amounts assessed shall be a lien upon the lands, lots, or portions of lots assessed, respectively, for the period of two years from the date of said recording, unless sooner discharged; and from and after the date of said recording of any warrant, assessment and certificate, all persons shall be deemed to have notice of the contents of the record thereof."

The said street improvement act, in section 37 thereof, further provides as follows:

"The superintendent of streets shall keep a public office in some convenient place within the municipality, and such records as may be required by the provisions of this act. The records so kept and signed by him, shall have the same force and effect as other public records, and copies therefrom duly certified, may be used in evidence with the same effect as the originals. The said records shall during all office hours, be open to the inspection of any person wishing to examine them, free of charge."

There is also contained in section 26 of said improvement act the following provision:

"The owners, whether named in the assessment or not, the contractor, or his assigns, and all other persons directly interested in any work done under this act, or in the assessment, feeling aggrieved by any act or determination of the superintendent of streets in relation thereto, or who claim that the work has not been performed according to the contract in a good and substantial manner, or having or making any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment or other act, determination, or proceedings of the superintendent of streets, shall, within thirty days after the date of the warrant, appeal to the city council, as provided in this section, by briefly stating their objections in writing, and filing the same with the clerk of said city council."

The last above quoted provision of the said street improvement act is the one which gives point to the petitioner's contention that the acts of the said superintendent of streets, done as above stated, in relation to the recordation of the said assessments, warrants, and diagrams, constituted and completed the recordation thereof in compliance with the provisions of said act, and hence that the said appeals and protests of the property owners affected by said assessments, not having been filed within 30 days after the dates of the recordation of said warrants, were ineffectual for any purpose, and that the said board of trustees had, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain, hear, or determine the same; and hence said appeals and protests being too late, and the said hearing and determination by said board being illegal and void, the petitioner was entitled to have the demands which it subsequently made upon the defendants herein complied with, and upon their refusal so to do is entitled to this writ. On the other hand, if it should be concluded that the said acts of the said superintendent of streets did not constitute a proper or legal recordation of said assessments, warrants, and diagrams as required by the terms of said act, these documents have never been recorded at all, and hence the demand upon the property owners for the payment of their assessments was never legally made; and hence, also, the time within which said property owners might make and file their appeals and protests has never commenced to run; and hence, of course, the petitioner is not entitled to this writ. It is conceded that the time within which property owners affected by assessments made and warrants issued under the terms of the said street improvement act may make their appeals and protests to the board of trustees of the city begins to run from the date of the due recordation of said warrants, and that from and after the date of said recording of said warrants all persons shall be deemed to have notice of the contents of the record thereof. Sections 23 and 26, supra; Cotton v. Watson, 134 Cal. 422, 66 Pac. 490. It is clear that the vital and in fact the only question involved in this case is the question as to whether the aforesaid acts of the superintendent of streets, done in relation to the recordation of the assessments, warrants, and diagrams in question, amounted to a due recordation thereof, within the proper construction of the foregoing provisions of the street improvement act of 1911.

In the consideration of this question it may be noted at the outset that while the street improvement act of 1911 does not contain any express direction as to how the superintendent of streets shall proceed to perform his duty in the matter of the recordation of the documents in question, it does contain certain clauses which impliedly point to the manner in which this duty shall be performed. Section 37 of the act above quoted requires the superintendent to keep, in a public office at some convenient place within the municipality, "such records as may be required by the provisions of this act," and that such records "shall, during all office hours, be open to the inspection of any person wishing to examine them, free of charge." The act also, in section 23 thereof, makes a distinction between the warrant and assessment and certificate and the diagram, in that as to the first three of these original documents they are to be "recorded," while the "diagram" is only required to be "filed," which would go to indicate that the mere filing of the warrant, assessment, and certificate would not, of itself, be sufficient to constitute a recordation thereof. This section of the act also provides that, "after said warrant, assessment, and certificate are recorded, the same shall be delivered to the contractor for the purpose of making the demand for the payment of the assessments in accordance with the provisions of the following section of the act. Section 25 of the act provides that the warrant so delivered to the contractor shall be returned to the superintendent of streets within thirty days after its date, with a return indorsed thereon verified by the contractor or some person in his behalf, stating the nature and character of the demand which has been made and whether any of the assessments remain in whole or in part unpaid; the section then provides that "thereupon the superintendent of streets shall record the return so made, in the margin of the record of the warrant and assessment." The section further provides that the superintendent of streets "is authorized * * * to receive the amount due upon any assessment list and warrant issued by him, and give a good and sufficient discharge therefor." Finally, the section provides that, in case any warrant is lost, "upon proof of such loss a duplicate can be issued," etc.

These various excerpts from the sections from the street improvement act immediately relating to the record of the warrant and assessment point clearly to the conclusion that the recordation of these documents must be made in the usual way in which other official documents are required to be recorded; that is to say, by copying them at length in a book of records to be kept for such purpose. This conclusion becomes the more imperative by particular attention to the uses to which the originals of these documents are to be put after their due recordation has been accomplished. The statute, as we have seen, provides that "after said warrant, assessment and certificate are recorded the same shall be delivered to the contractor," and shall constitute his authority to make demand upon the property owners for the payment of the sums due thereon. The contractor, or his agents, may retain these originals for 30 days before making his return thereon, during all of which time they are of course, out of the possession and control of the street superintendent, who would, therefore, during that period have no record whatever in his office of their contents unless he had made the recorded copies of them after the usual manner of recording such original documents as a recorder is not to retain. During such period, also, the superintendent of streets, unless he had made such record copies of this document, would have no official data upon which to compute the amount due upon any of these outstanding warrants and assessments upon which payments were sought to be made, nor from which to make a duplicate of any warrant which might have been lost.

[2, 3] These considerations most strongly argue, in favor of the contention of the respondents herein, that until the warrant, assessment, and certificate provided for in the street improvement act have been duly recorded by being copied in a book of records to be kept by the street superintendent for such purpose, the time within which property owners may make their appeal to the city council does not begin to run, nor does the lien of the contractor attach. This contention also gains considerable support from the early case of Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441, wherein it was held that the act of a street superintendent in copying an assessment, warrant, and diagram in a book kept in his office for that purpose, but without affixing thereto his signature and certificate of recordation, did not suffice to create a lien upon the property affected thereby.

In answer to this contention the petitioner places his reliance, first, upon section 1170 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"An instrument is deemed to be recorded when, being duly acknowledged or proved and certified, it is deposited in the recorder's office, with the proper officer, for record."

This section of the Civil Code has direct reference only to the recordation of Transfers of property and like instruments by official recorders, and can only inferentially have a bearing upon the present controversy; but, even so, it is to be read in connection with the provisions of section 1213 of the Civil Code in order to determine its effect as affording constructive notice of the contents of the instrument. This court, in the case of Cady v. Purser, 131 Cal. 552, 63 Pac. 844, 82 Am. St. Rep. 391, had occasion to construe both of these sections of the Civil Code together, and it was there held that, in order that constructive notice of instruments required to be recorded might be given to subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, the Legislature must have intended something in addition to depositing the instrument in the recorder's office for record, and that the provisions of these sections of the Civil Code are not satisfied until the instrument has been recorded by being transcribed in a proper book. When so transcribed and certified, it operates to give constructive notice of its contents, by relation to the date of its filing for record, and thus these two sections of the Civil Code are to be harmonized. It will be seen, however, that this conclusion affords no consolation to the petitioner in the instant case. The petitioner further contends that the case of Bentley v. Hurlburt, 153 Cal. 796, 96 Pac. 890, is authority for its insistence that its lien attached, and the time for property owners to file their appeal before the city council began to run from the filing for record of the warrants and assessments in question, even though the same were not recorded by him by copying in a book, and even though the originals were removed from his office for the purpose of making the statutory demand. In that case, however, the question involved was the sufficiency of the filing for record of a plat or map of a subdivision. The statute did not require that, in the case of such maps or plats, they should be copied in a book, but merely required that the original map or plat be filed with the recorder and be by him posted in a book of maps. The court in that case held that the act of filing was sufficient as applied to that class of documents to constitute a due recordation thereof, and hence that its subsequent withdrawal for some temporary purpose did not destroy the consummated effect of its recordation by that means. The distinction between that case and the case at bar is obvious. The case of Bernard Co. v. Los Angeles, 18 Cal. App. 626, 124 Pac. 88, is also cited and relied upon by the petitioner; but that case also referred to the recordation of a diagram, and is thus distinguishable from the case at bar. The conclusion which we have therefore arrived at is that the acts of the superintendent of streets in the instant case, in relation to the recording of the warrants and assessments in question, did not amount to a due recordation thereof so as to set in motion the time within which the respondents herein, as property owners affected by such assessments, might make their appeal to the city council. This being so, they were not too late in making such appeal, and hence the city council had jurisdiction to hear and determine the same.

It is not necessary to consider, in this decision, the question discussed at length in the briefs of counsel herein as to the propriety or validity of the action of the members of the city council in undertaking to hear and determine said appeals, since that subject is fully discussed and determined adversely to the petitioner's contention in the case of Federal Construction Co. v. Curd et al., L. A. No. 8727, 177 Pac. 469, decided this day, and to which reference is made for our conclusions thereon.

The writ is denied.

KREITZER v. SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO.

(Civ. 1898.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 15, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 13, 1919.)

1. DEATH ⊂=58(1)—PRESUMPTION—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Where a night watchman on a railroad bridge was found dead in a sitting position beside a water barrel, held that it could not be presumed that he went to sleep and was struck by a passing train, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 4, as to presumption that a person takes ordinary care for his own concerns.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=286(14)—INJURIES TO SERVANT—JURY QUESTION.

Whether a railroad company engaged in interstate commerce was negligent in failing to provide a safe place of work for a night watchman on its bridge, who was killed by a passing train, held, under the evidence, for the jury.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=289(25) — INJURIES TO SERVANT—JURY QUESTION.

Whether a night watchman on a railroad bridge of an interstate carrier was guilty of gross negligence in failing to select a place which was designed as a refuge for persons on the bridge when a train was passing, and whether, when placing himself in the position selected, he failed to take ordinary precautions, held, under the evidence, for the jury.

4. NEGLIGENCE ⊂=136(9) — EVIDENCE — JURY QUESTION.

The rule is that negligence is a question of fact for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions upon the subject can be rationally drawn from the evidence.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=265(4)—DEFENSES —BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of establishing the defense of assumption of risk, in an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665), is upon the master.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=204(1)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

In an action for death under Federal Employers' Liability Act (U. S. Comp. St. §§ 8657–8665), held that a servant has the right to assume that the master has used due diligence to provide suitable appliances, and he does not assume the risk of the employer's negligence in performing such duties, except where the defect is known, or is so patent as to be readily observable.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=288(12)—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—JURY QUESTION.

Whether a night watchman on a railroad bridge trestle used in interstate commerce assumed the risk attendant upon the performance of his work for the reason that the failure of the company to provide a suitable place for him to avoid passing trains was obvious held, under the evidence, for the jury.

8. TRIAL ⊂=142—JURY QUESTION—SPECULATIVE VERDICT.

While a jury ought not to be permitted to speculative, in the sense of guess between causes when no reasonable explanation of injury can be found in the testimony, yet, in the absence of direct testimony, the simple suggestion of theories by defendant does not reduce the jury to mere speculation, and disqualify it from determining the cause of an injury complained of.

9. DEATH ⊂=99(4)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

An award of $7,500, to be apportioned between a widow and minor children of defendant's deceased employé, engaged in interstate commerce, who had a probable earning capacity of $900 for 17.4 years, held not excessive, on the theory that it assumed that the deceased would devote his entire earnings to the support of his family.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; W. H. Langdon, Judge.

Action by Rose Kreitzer, as administratrix of the estate of Andrew Kreitzer, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. H. Gould and W. C. Fitch, both of San Francisco, E. H. Zion, of Modesto, and Arthur Levinsky, of Stockton, for appellant.

Griffin, Carlson & Boone, of Modesto, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiff's decedent was employed by the defendant, on or about January 5, 1916, as night watchman to guard or watch the bridge or trestle belonging to defendant, crossing the Tuolumne river at a point about 1 mile south of the station at the city of Modesto. He had discharged his duties as watchman for four or five days when, as is alleged in the first amended complaint, on January 11, 1916, between the hours of 6 p. m. and 12 o'clock midnight of said day, and while in the performance of his duties as such night watchman of said railroad bridge, he "was struck upon the head and body by one of the cars of a freight train which was crossing said railroad bridge" while traveling in a southerly direction, and was killed; that said railroad bridge "was and now is unsafe for any person to walk upon or travel over, due to the negligence of said defendant," because of the manner in which it is constructed, describing it; that there was and is no place on said bridge where deceased "could stand and remain at the same time that a train was crossing said bridge"; that the only places "in the nature of safety stations" were certain platforms about 25 yards apart, "upon which a person could step from said bridge proper"; that barrels filled with water were placed on these platforms, and "occupied most of the room or space upon each of said platforms"; that the spaces between said barrels and trains or cars passing over said bridge "were of such a narrow width that it was impossible for the said deceased, at the time he was so struck by said car of said freight train, or at any other time, to remain on said platform while a train was passing"; that deceased was killed by said freight train while on the second one of said platforms from the northern end of said bridge; that deceased had no notice or warning of the said approaching extra freight train; that at the time deceased was killed the defendant was engaged in interstate commerce, and deceased was employed in such commerce, and claims the benefit of the act of Congress approved April 22, 1908, and acts amendatory thereof, relating to the liability of common carriers; that in the course of his duties it became necessary, and he was so instructed by defendant, to go upon said bridge and to walk upon the top of said bridge for its entire length.

The answer is a specific denial of the averments of the complaint, and alleges that the death of deceased "was caused solely by and through a risk assumed by him in the course of his employment," and, furthermore, that his death "was caused by his own carelessness and negligence in failing to observe the approach of defendant's train while said train was upon the bridge referred to in plaintiff's complaint herein."

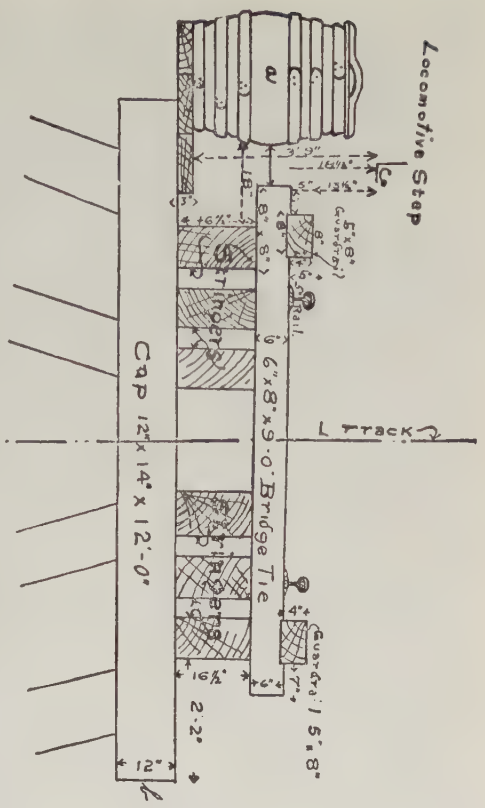
The cause was tried by the court with a jury, and a verdict was awarded as follows: For the plaintiff in the sum of $7,500 apportioned as follows: To the widow, age 52 years, $3,750; to the child Helen, age 16 years, $227.30; to the child Mary, age 14 years, $454.50; to the child Clara, age 7 years, $1,250.50, and to the child William, age 5 years, $1,818.20. Judgment was accordingly entered. Defendant appeals from the judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

Witness Coburn held the position of track foreman on construction work for defendant, and was foreman on the section including Modesto and the bridge or trestle where the accident occurred. He testified:

"At the time that I arranged with decedent to go to work for the railroad company I went over to his house I think, to see him. I told him I wanted to hire a man to protect the bridge, and I wanted to put a watchman on there at night; that we had found dynamite underneath it, and that I wanted to put a white man there that I could depend upon. I told him the wages would be $2 a night, and that he would have to work from 6 to 6. I told him to use no arms, in case he met with some accident down there not use any arms. He said, 'All right; I will do it.' I never saw him down there at work."

No other or further instructions were given deceased. He had worked for other railroad companies, and had previously worked for defendant company on that section, "doing ordinary track repairing, putting in new switches and changing rails, and one thing and another like that, and changing ties." He had been employed by defendant on that section for several months, in 1915, and in the course of his employment crossed this bridge two or three times a week on a hand car.

He was an active man, quick in his movements, in good health, and possessing all his faculties. He was about 5 feet 4½ inches in height and weighed about 140 pounds. He went to his work on the night of January 11, 1916, as usual, and appellant claims he was last seen alive about 7 o'clock. Witness Dodd, watchman on the county bridge which crosses the Tuolumne river about 60 feet from the railroad bridge, testified that from his house he had a clear view of the railroad bridge. He testified:



"I remember an occasion when some one purported to have found dynamite underneath the railroad bridge. After that, there was a night watch there. I saw him upon the bridge in the night. I remember the occasion when the body of Mr. Kreitzer was found. I went out to see the body on the bridge, and helped get the body out. The night before that, I saw a person with a lantern upon the bridge between 8 and 9 o'clock. My usual hour of retiring is from half past 8 to 9 o'clock, sometimes a little bit after, owing to what I have got to do. Just before I retired, I came out and looked around and went back to bed. I saw a man upon the railroad bridge with a lantern. This was the night before I saw the body. I saw the man with the lantern just before I got ready to go to bed. The man with the lantern was about 200 feet from me, going south."

It appeared that the trains passing through Modesto, south-bound, were: Passenger train 50, which arrived at 8:37 p. m. and departed at 8:41 p. m.; the next was the second section of No. 50, which arrived at 8:47 and departed at 8:49 p. m. The next train south-bound which passed the station was an extra engine, 2435, without stopping, at 9:03 p. m. The trains passing south after midnight were: One arriving at 3:30 and departing at 3:50; the next was an extra, 1656, going south, which arrived at 5:30 and departed at 5:50; the next was an extra, 1801, going south, arrived at 6:30 and departed at 7:40. It was testified that it was not unusual that extra trains passed in the night, "it is an everyday occurrence."

Witness Wood, coroner and public administrator for Stanislaus county, arrived at the scene of the accident between 7 and 8 o'clock the morning following the death of deceased. He testified:

"I saw Mr. Kreitzer's body on the railroad bridge, at the end toward Modesto, on the left-hand side or east side of the bridge, the up-river side. The body was between the end of the timber and a water barrel. It was between 200 and 300 feet from the west (north) end of the bridge, and wedged in between the end of the timbers that projected out under the track and the water barrel that was resting on the extreme end of the timber, wedged in between the end of this timber and the water barrel. It was sitting in a crouched position, his feet drawn up under him and his head was leaning to the—toward the south, toward the river; that is, toward the south. I took the body out and took it to my place of business. I found marks or bruises on the right-hand side of the head. The bruises were near the front, but on the right-hand side. There were no other marks upon the body. There was nothing on his person except a pipe and something of those things. On the ground underneath there was a great deal of blood, also a lantern and his hat. These were lying directly under him, on the ground below. A lunch pail was found. The lunch was not eaten. I think Mr. Davis, the sheriff, found it. His back was up against the barrel, his head turned toward the south. He was hit upon the right-hand side of the head. The distance between the barrel and the end of the timbers that were against his breast was about 16 or 17 inches. The tie was against his breast and the barrel against his back. He was touching both barrel and tie, so close that we had to shove the barrel off in order to remove his body from between the tie and the barrel. The barrel was not attached to the timber. It was full of water, and with some effort we succeeded in shoving it off onto the ground. * * * His face was facing the railroad ties and the rails. When I took the body out, he was dressed heavy. It was cold as the present weather, except it was foggy weather. He had on winter underwear, ordinary shirt and coat, and heavy storm coat and vest."

Witness Davis, sheriff of the county, helped to remove the body. He testified that:

The body was about 250 or 300 feet from the Modesto end of the bridge. "His head was leading to the south, and his face toward the railroad track; his back was wedged in between the barrel and the timbers, in a squatting position. We had considerable trouble getting him out."

The bridge structure consists of a steel bridge proper crossing the Tuolumne river for about 150 feet at the south end and a trestle thence northerly for about a quarter of a mile, the roadbed being about 28 feet above the river bottom land. The structure is graphically shown by a sketch attached to appellant's brief, which appears to illustrate correctly the situation at the location of the accident and the general construction of the trestle. Figure I is a cross-section of the trestle at the cap where deceased met his death, showing the barrel, "a"; the end of the cap without any barrel, "b"; the location of the lowest step of a locomotive with relation to the bridge ties, "c." The plan of construction is given by witness Coburn, foreman of defendant's construction work:

"First, piles were driven, four in number in each set. The sets were 15 feet apart, center to center. Each set was driven in crosswise of the track. Across the top of each set of piles was placed a timber 12 inches by 14 inches in diameter and 12 feet in length. On top of this cap were placed six stringers, three under each rail. These stringers are 8 inches in thickness, 16½ inches vertical, and are about 30 feet in length and run parallel with the track. The distance from the outer end of the cap to the outer side of the outer stringer is 2 feet and 2 inches on each end. On top of these stringers are placed ties 8 inches horizontal by 6 inches vertical, and 9 feet in length, and placed 4 inches apart. On top of these ties are placed the steel rails, which are 4 feet 8½ inches apart, and midway between the rail and the outer end of the tie is the guard rail, a small timber 8 inches horizontal by 5 inches vertical, running parallel to the rail and mortised into the tie about 1 inch. Upon the end of every tenth cap, on each side of the trestle, is a small platform, and on this platform is placed a barrel filled with water for use in case of fire. Between the barrel and the end of the ties is a space of 16 or 17 inches. The platform upon which the barrel is placed is just large enough to set the barrel on. About 150 feet of the extreme southern end, where the bridge crossed the river, was made of steel and had no barrels."

The evidence was that the construction of this trestle was in accordance with the plans prevailing throughout the Southern Pacific System. The contention of plaintiff is that the defendant was negligent in failing to provide a safe place for the decedent to take refuge from passing trains. In other respects we do not understand that there is objection urged to the general construction of the bridge. So far as the public is concerned there was no obligation upon the railroad company to provide safety stations. There was, however, a duty to make such provision for its employés, and its contention is that the ends of these caps, occurring on both sides of the track every 15 feet, furnished such places of safety. Witness Burgess, supervisor of bridges and buildings for the defendant corporation, testified:

"I am familiar with the methods employed by railroad men in getting out of the way on bridges of this kind when trains are passing. They simply get down on the cap, and sit there until the train passes, steadying themselves with a hand on the guard timbers at the end of the tie. That position involves no danger for a railroad man or for any man of ordinary activity with his faculties. A man can remove himself from the surface of the bridge, such as this, and seat himself on the tie as I have suggested in not over 10 seconds, I should judge. I have done this, and that is the way that I in my practice as a railroad man adopt of removing myself from the platform of a bridge to a place of safety when trains are passing, and that is the ordinary way that railroad men in this section of the Southern Pacific take care of themselves when trains are passing on long bridges of this character. The ties are 4 inches apart, and the top of the tie is 8 inches. There is no difficulty in walking at an ordinary rate of speed over these ties. The practice of placing a barrel upon a cap is for fire protection. I never observed any man under my supervision while working on these bridges attempt to take refuge when a passing train came along on a platform on which the barrel is situated. I never attempted it."

He testified that:

The distance from the end of the tie to the end of the cap is a foot and a half. "I would not want to stand there, to stand up. I would not call that a safety station in that position; not standing up."

The distance from the top of the cap to the steps of a locomotive (see figure I) is 4 feet, showing that in a sitting position a man would be safe. The witness, Coburn testified:

"Whenever the train comes along, these caps are located about 15 feet apart, and we would scatter out and get on top of the caps that would be underneath the track like, sat on there while the train was passing over. I never had but one man that could not get down on the caps. No one ever made any objection to the method of getting down. * * * That method of escaping from passing trains has been in use ever since my knowledge, that is for 30 years, and all that time it has been a safe method for escaping trains."

He was asked whether the railroad men took refuge at any time between the barrels on the caps, and answered:

"No, sir. Neither myself or the other men employed in fixing the track would go for safety upon these places where the barrels were when the trains were passing. There is some room there, but you take chances in getting there. The space was too narrow. I know, however, that a man the size of the decedent could, if he had sat upon the cap where the barrel sat, with his legs hanging down, escape any possible injury from the car if he had kept his head in the proper place. I say that because when he gets down on the cap, he is below the top of the rail if he stoops his head down a little bit."

Speaking of this as a place of safety, he testified:

"A man could get in between on the station where the barrels were, and if he got down, he would be perfectly safe if a train went over. He would have to be a small man, understand; I don't mean a great big man. I mean a small one, and get his head down in order to get in the clear. I wouldn't like to get in there unless I had my head down."

As before shown, the decedent was a small man. Witness Burgess, on cross-examination testified that since the accident they had raised the platform even with the ties and extended it so that the barrels are now 3 feet from the end of the ties. They were formerly 11 inches from the end of the ties. He testified:

"The purpose for which they were put in was to make a place for the water barrel more accessible in the case of fire. That is the reason they were built; not for safety stations."

Witness Coburn testified:

"The barrels are about 38 inches in height, and are located on alternate sides of the track, first on the right side and then on the left side, and are about 75 feet apart."

Witness Foulks, telegraph operator of defendant company, testified:

"There is a set of block signals at the curve leading to the bridge east of Modesto, a short distance, that should be in plain sight of the bridge. During the night there is a light; when it is safe, it is a green light, and the arm extends downward in a slanting position; that is when there is no train in the block coming from the west. When the train enters the block coming from the west, the signal arm goes up, becomes horizontal, and the green light disappears, and a red light is shown. * * * The train would ordinarily whistle five different times passing through this town from the west before it reaches the bridge. No whistle is given for the bridge."

It was testified that there is a whistling post a quarter of a mile from the bridge.

Witness Coburn testified that:

"When engines are coming from the north whistles can be heard upon the bridge when they are in the block, and the ringing of bells can be heard as they pass through the town. The headlight of an engine approaching can be seen from the northern end of the bridge for about a half a mile, very near a half a mile."

The testimony of the engineer and fireman of engine No. 2435, that passed Modesto at 9:03 p. m., was that it was on a trial trip, and traveling as an extra without cars other than the tender; that they were on the lookout in passing through Modesto and crossing the bridge; that the engine bell was ringing as they crossed the bridge; that they saw no man on the bridge, and were quite sure if they had struck deceased they would have seen it.

Witness Osborne, car foreman of defendant company, testified, as did witness Coburn, to the effect that the end of the cap was a safe place of refuge during the passing of trains, and that he could not see "that there would be any difference getting down in the nighttime than it would in the daytime, if he had a lantern." He testified that it would not be as easy for a person to get down on the cap the first time in the night as it would be in the daytime. The record states:

"Here a model of a portion of the bridge is offered in evidence, consisting of a cap, the stringer nearest to the cap in position, several ties placed on the stringer and the guard rail. The jury inspected the same, went upon the top, experimented in getting down from the top of the ties and guard rail on to the cap. The witness illustrated how he could sit upon the ends of the ties, place his feet upon the cap, and then go down upon the cap upon one knee and one foot."

It was stipulated that if the engineers and firemen of the trains passing over the bridge between 6 p. m. and midnight of January 11, 1916, were present, they would testify that they crossed the bridge in the usual manner, giving the customary signals by bells and whistles; that the trains were not operated at over 10 miles an hour and had powerful electric headlights by which objects within 250 feet were plainly visible; that they kept careful watch, and saw no man on the bridge and no light at or near any barrel, and "that neither his engine nor his cars struck or killed the deceased."

We have at considerable length endeavored to state the evidence and to show the condition existing at the time of the accident. Defendant advances the following contentions:

"First. That defendant was not negligent in failing to provide a safe place for the decedent to perform his work.

"Second. That the sole cause of the injury to the decedent, if it was caused by a passing train, was the gross negligence of decedent in failing to select places on the bridge which were designed for and were perfectly safe, and also because he did not, when placing himself in position selected, take ordinary precaution to protect himself, in which event he would have been safe.

"Third. The danger attendant upon decedent's manner in performing his work was open, obvious, and plainly apparent. He made no objections thereto and continued in the performance of his work after having had full opportunity to observe and appreciate the surrounding conditions. He therefore assumed the risk attendant upon the performance of the work which he undertook.

"Fourth. Even assuming that defendant was negligent in failing to provide a safe place to work, there is no evidence which discloses that such failure was the approximate cause or had anything to do with the death of decedent.

"Fifth. The damages awarded were excessive."

[1-4] Deceased had never before done any work for defendant at night, and this was his first service as watchman. So far as appears, his knowledge of the construction of this bridge and trestle was such only as he may have acquired in riding over it on a hand car to and from his work elsewhere two or three times a week for some months. It is not shown, nor is it claimed by defendant, that he knew anything about the provisions made for men working on the bridge to avoid passing trains, except such knowledge as he had acquired in the two or three nights he had served as watchman before he was killed. What course he pursued during these nights, if he happened to be on the bridge when a train passed, we do not know. He may have been at one end of the bridge when the two regular trains passed not long before the extra engine 2435 came along. It is reasonably clear that he met his death by being struck by some part of an engine or car while endeavoring to protect himself by taking refuge on the platform where a barrel stood on the east side of the trestle, 200 or 300 feet from the north end. The position of the wound caused by the blow which crushed his skull and the position of the body left little doubt of the cause of his death. There were no trains before midnight except the two regulars a few minutes before 9 p. m. and the extra engine 2435 a few minutes after 9 o'clock. The next trains going south were after 3:30 a. m. His lunch was not eaten, which would indicate that the accident occurred before midnight, for it is reasonable to assume that he would have eaten it before 3:30 a. m. The testimony of the county bridge watchman justifies the inference that he saw the deceased about the time engine 2435 passed through Modesto, and not far from where he was killed. If he had been standing on the platform when the blow struck him, it would almost certainly have knocked him off, and he would have been found on the ground below. Dr. Hennemuth, who made the autopsy, testified:

"I found the right frontal bone and the right temporal bone of the skull caved in, and a fracture extending down through the base through the petrous portion of the temporal bone. I think there were two cuts on the head; that is, the scalp was cut or ripped open. There were no bruises on any other portion of the body that I remember at the present time."

If he had been standing, the blow would have struck him on his side below the shoulder. Sitting or crouching as the body was found, the step of locomotive 2435 (figure I) could have struck his head. Doubtless the blow, and the involuntary movements of the body as a result of the blow, would cause it to take the cramped position in which it was found. There were no trains after this locomotive passed until 3:30 a. m., and it is suggested by appellant that after the engine had passed there were no trains due on regular time for several hours, and deceased may have seated himself by this barrel and fallen asleep and allowed his head to drop forward and thus come in contact with some part of an engine or car. But this assumption cannot be indulged, for it involves a violation of duty, which cannot be presumed. Besides, there is a presumption "that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns." Code Civ. Proc. subd. 4, § 1963; Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. M. Co., 168 Cal. 501, 506, 143 Pac. 714. It is conceded that the floor of the bridge is a place of danger when trains are passing over it, and that the only place of escape is either on the end of the caps or at the platforms where barrels are situated. The evidence was that it is the custom of men working on the floor of the bridge in the daytime to take refuge on the caps when trains are passing. No such custom is shown as to nighttime, for repair work is not then done. Witness Coburn, who testified to this custom, stated that he had one man on a crew who could not get down on a cap. Standing on the cap was considered unsafe. While the evidence was that the platforms built for barrels may not have been built with special reference to furnishing a means of escape from passing trains, they had that appearance, and could be so used, and to one going on the bridge as watchman, not familiar with the means of escape from passing trains, and not knowing the exact space between the barrel and the projecting steps or parts of cars, would naturally, we think, in the nighttime, resort to one of these platforms rather than to one of the caps of whose relation to the engine or cars he had no more knowledge and which are not so readily accessible.

Deceased was told to watch the bridge, but was not instructed how to do it. It is claimed that he could have performed his duty by walking on the county bridge, which is parallel to the company's bridge and 60 or 100 feet distant from it; or he could have walked underneath the bridge, thus avoiding any danger from passing trains. It seems to us that when told to watch the bridge deceased would naturally assume that he was to patrol it, and to do this efficiently he must go upon it. If, as is claimed, ample provision was made to escape passing trains, it was not a place of danger. If there was danger from lack of such provision or from provision likely not to be comprehended by deceased, he should have been warned of the danger and instructed how to avoid it. The suggestion that he should not have gone on to the floor of the bridge implies danger and lack of provision to escape it. Appellant cannot consistently urge that deceased ought not to have gone over the bridge and at the same time urge that it was entirely safe, for, if the bridge was a safe place, there is no reason why the deceased should have avoided going on to it in the discharge of his duty.

It is not to be overlooked that after this accident the defendant raised the platforms for the barrels even with the ties, and extended them so that the space between the barrels and the ends of the ties is 3 feet, whereas formerly this space was but 18 inches. The present platforms are quickly accessible, and afford a perfectly safe place of refuge. The change may not establish the fact that the former platforms were unsafe, but it shows very clearly that at small cost a safe place has been provided, and might have been provided before the accident occurred, and would have avoided it. It is also to be considered that a working model of a section of the bridge was introduced, and the jurymen were allowed to make an experiment of getting down to the caps from the ties, and the operation as railroad men used the caps for that purpose was illustrated by a witness.

Whether or not defendant was negligent in failing to provide a safe place for the decedent to work; whether decedent was guilty of gross negligence in failing to select a place which was designed for safety and was safe; whether, when placing himself in the position selected, he failed to take ordinary precautions to protect himself—were questions which, under the evidence, could not be taken from the jury and decided by the court as matter of law, but were proper questions for the jury. In Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 229, 53 Pac. 651, the court said:

"The rule is, that negligence is a question of fact for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions upon the subject can be rationally drawn from the evidence" (citing cases).

[5-8] Appellant contends that deceased assumed the risk attendant upon the performance of the work which he undertook, for the reason that his manner in performing the work "was open, obvious, and plainly apparent"; that "he made no objections thereto, and continued in the performance of his work after having had full opportunity to observe and appreciate the surrounding conditions." The burden of establishing the defense of assumption of risk is upon the defendant. Kanawha & Michigan Ry. Co., v. Kerse, 239 U. S. 576, 36 Sup. Ct. 174, 60 L. Ed. 448. "The question of assumption of risk is quite apart from that of contributory negligence. The servant has the right to assume that the master has used due diligence to provide suitable appliances in the operation of his business, and he does not assume the risk of the employer's negligence in performing such duties. * * * This rule is subject to the exception that where a defect is known to the employé, or is so patent as to be readily observed by him, he cannot continue to use the defective apparatus in the face of knowledge and without objection, without assuming the hazard incident to such a situation. Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 67, 124 Sup. Ct. 24, 25 (48 L. Ed. 96). Appellant relies upon the exception to the rule. The evidence does not compel the inference that deceased had knowledge of the danger attending resort to the platform as a place of safety where he was killed, or that the risk was so patent as to be readily observed by him. On the contrary defendant's witnesses testified that if he was sitting down, as in fact he was when found, and had "kept his head down a little," there would have been no danger. There was no evidence that he knew there was not sufficient space between the barrel and the steps of a passing locomotive or parts of the cars, to make the place one of safety. He may not have had occasion to use a platform when trains were passing on any previous night, or he may have used it and not been hit. He cannot be presumed to have known the exact limit of safety in occupying a platform; knowledge of the exact width of the engines or cars or the distance they extended beyond the rails cannot be imputed to him. He resorted to what the jury believed he had a right to assume was a place of refuge. The presumption is that he took a position on the platform that offered security from injury. In Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. M. Co., supra, 168 Cal. at page 506, 143 Pac. 716, the court said:

"Where death is occasioned under circumstances such as this, without eyewitnesses, the law comes to the aid of the plaintiff who is pressing a suit for damages for the death, and that law is found in the presumption of the Code of Civil Procedure, namely, that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns (citing cases). This is a controvertible presumption, it is true, but until controverted it is evidence in accordance with which the jury is bound to decide."

See Boyle v. Coast Imp. Co., 27 Cal. App. 714, 722, 723, 151 Pac. 25. In the case of Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Swearingen, 196 U. S. 51, 25 Sup. Ct. 164, 49 L. Ed. 382, track No. 1 ran over a scale in the yard at El Paso. Two feet beyond the scale box was track No. 2, parallel with No. 1, and beyond this two other tracks, Nos. 3 and 4. The space between a ladder on the side of a freight car when running on track 2 and the scale box was shown to be 19½ inches. The scale was in plain view, and plaintiff knew of its location, but did not know of its dangerous proximity to track 2. In considering the contention that plaintiff assumed the risk the court said:

"The Court of Appeals was of opinion, and rightly we think, that the dangerous contiguity of the scale box to track No. 2, and the extra hazard to switchmen resulting therefrom, was not so open and obvious on other than a close inspection, as to justify taking from the jury the determination of the question whether there had been an assumption of the risk. The plaintiff was entitled to assume that the defendant company had used due care to provide a reasonably safe place for the doing by him of the work for which he had been employed; and, as the fact that the defendant company might not have performed such duty in respect to the scale box in question was not so patent as to be readily observable, the court could not declare, in view of the testimony of the plaintiff as to his actual want of knowledge of the danger, that he had assumed the hazard incident to the actual situation. Choctaw, O. & G. R. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 68 (48 L. Ed. 96, 100, 24 Sup. Ct. 24)."

An objection was made to an instruction given by the trial court that plaintiff knew the location of the track scale box and the track 2 on which he was riding in reference to the scale box; that the location was open and obvious to plaintiff's view, and as an experienced brakeman he was charged with notice that riding on the cars as he did was dangerous, and that he assumed the risk, and the court should have so charged the jury. In commenting upon this contention the Supreme Court said:

"This assignment but reiterates contentions made in connection with the assignment based on the alleged error in overruling the motion for judgment. As we have already decided that knowledge of the increased hazard resulting from the dangerous proximity of the scale box to the north rail of track No. 2 could not be imputed to the plaintiff because he was aware of the existence and general location of the scale box, it was for the jury to determine, from a consideration of all the facts and circumstances in evidence, whether plaintiff had actual knowledge of the danger."

In the case of Choctaw v. McDade, supra, the court said:

"Upon this question the true test is not in the exercise of care to discover dangers, but whether the defect is known or plainly observable by the employé."

As to appellant's fourth point, we think the evidence was sufficient to justify the submission of the question to the jury whether the alleged negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of decedent's death. We have stated very fully the facts and circumstances attending the death of decedent and need not repeat them. "Doubtless," as we said in Wabash Screen Door Co. v. Black, 126 Fed. 721, 61 C. C. A. 639, "a jury ought not to be permitted to speculate, in the sense of guess, between causes, when no reasonable explanation of the injury can be found in the testimony. * * * But, in the absence of direct testimony, the simple suggestion of theories by the defense does not reduce the jury to mere speculation, and disqualify it from determining the cause of the injury complained of." We feel quite satisfied that there was sufficient evidence to warrant the submission of the question to the jury.

[9] It is claimed that the verdict was excessive for the reason, as given in appellant's brief:

"The uncontradicted testimony showed deceased received $75 per month. No allowance at all was made for any cost of living, clothing, or shelter of the deceased."

The life expectancy of deceased was 17.4 years. He had a probable earning capacity of $900 per year for 17.4 years, or $15,336. The plaintiff was awarded $7,500 to be apportioned between herself and her minor children as above shown. We may assume that the jury took into account the items mentioned by appellant, since they reduced decedent's gross earning capacity nearly one-half.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

HARTIGAN v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (Civ. 2683.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 26, 1918.)

1. MANDAMUS ⟸154(4) — PLEADING—RIGHT OF PETITIONER—COMPLIANCE WITH RULES.

Property owner's petition for writ of mandate requiring gas company to furnish service is defective, in absence of allegation that petitioner has complied with rules and regulations formulated by Railroad Commission under Public Utilities Act.

2. MANDAMUS ⟸154(10)—ORIGINAL APPLICATIONS—LEAVE TO AMEND—WHEN DENIED.

Where counsel for petitioner for writ of mandate admitted client's noncompliance with rules of Public Service Commission, compliance being prerequisite to issuance of writ, leave will not be granted to amend the petition, so as to allege compliance.

3. MANDAMUS ⟸9—RIGHT TO REMEDY—PREVIOUS APPLICATION IN LOWER COURT.

Where writ of mandate was applied for in the superior court, and demurrer was sustained to the petition, whereupon petitioner dismissed the proceeding and applied in the appellate court for the same writ, the appellate court will not entertain jurisdiction.

Petition by William Hartigan for writ of mandate against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. Demurrer sustained, and writ dismissed.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Leo H. Susman, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Petition for writ of mandate, commanding the respondent to furnish to the petitioner its service of gas and electricity.

[1, 2] The court is of the opinion that the petition for the writ is deficient in its failure to state that the petitioner had complied with the rules and regulations formulated by the Railroad Commission under the Public Utilities Act of this state (St. 1911 [Ex. Sess.] p. 18); the commission being given statutory control of the subject-matter involved in this particular proceeding. For that reason the demurrer to the petition will be sustained, and leave to amend will not be granted, in view of the admission of counsel for the petitioner that the petitioner has not complied with such rules and regulations. It would be idle to grant leave to amend, because, the fact not existing, the petition could not be amended so as to truthfully allege it.

[3] Aside from this, it has been disclosed upon the hearing of the application that this writ was applied for in the first instance to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and that, upon an issue of law being joined in that proceeding by the interposition of a demurrer to the petition, the court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, upon which, and before the entry of judgment, the petitioner dismissed the proceeding in that court, so that he might apply here for a similar writ to enforce the same alleged right. Under those circumstances this court will not entertain the application.

For the reasons first given the demurrer is sustained, without leave to amend, and for the reason last given the writ is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. VOTAW. (Cr. 628.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 21, 1918. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 20, 1919.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1071—APPEAL—APPLICATION.

Points that facts stated in information do not constitute a public offense, and that judgment of conviction is uncertain and void, are referable solely to judgment roll, and may be raised at any stage of proceedings, although not included in the statement of points and grounds of appeal filed in the lower court as required by Pen. Code, § 1247.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1071—APPLICATION FOR APPEAL — CONSIDERATION OF ADDITIONAL POINTS.

Where the people cannot be prejudiced by consideration of additional points raised by appellant, but not stated in points and grounds of appeal filed in trial court under Pen. Code, § 1247, statement filed being sufficient to give jurisdiction of appeal, Appellate Court will not decline to consider such additional points.

3. SEDUCTION ⟸37—INFORMATION—STATUTE.

Information held to charge crime of seduction under promise of marriage, denounced by Pen. Code, § 268, particularly in the absence of objection except on appeal.

4. SEDUCTION ⟸45 — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, denounced by Pen. Code, § 268, evidence held sufficient to justify conviction.

5. SEDUCTION ⟸46 — CORROBORATION OF PROSECUTRIX.

Corroboration of prosecutrix is not required by law of California to support conviction of seduction under promise of marriage.

6. SEDUCTION ⟸50(1)—INSTRUCTION.

In prosecution for seduction, instruction held not erroneous as misleading in making it possible for jury to find defendant guilty if act was result merely of meretricious bargain.

7. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1137(3) — APPEAL — INVITED ERROR—INSTRUCTION.

Appellant from conviction of seduction cannot complain of instruction on ground it made it possible for jury to find him guilty, though act was result of meretricious bargain, where definition of offense in instruction was substantially identical with that embodied in one requested by appellant and given.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸757(7)—INSTRUCTION — INVASION OF PROVINCE OF JURY.

Instruction, that witness false in one part of his or her testimony must be distrusted in others, held not erroneous as invading province of jury.

9. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸829(1)—INSTRUCTIONS—REPETITION.

In prosecution for seduction, action of trial court in striking out parts of instructions given at defendant's request held not erroneous, where parts stricken, so far as correct, were substantially embodied in other instructions given.

10. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸1206(3) — JUDGMENT WITH INDETERMINATE SENTENCE—OFFENSE BEFORE LAW.

Judgment of conviction for seduction was not void because providing for indeterminate sentence, though offense was committed at time before taking effect of indeterminate sentence law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Gavin W. Craig, Judge.

Vernon J. Votaw was convicted of seduction, and from the judgment and an order denying his motion for new trial he appeals. Case remanded to the superior court, with instructions that such steps be taken as may be necessary to bring the defendant before it and to pronounce judgment upon him under the law as it stood at the time the crime was committed.

Owens & Wingert, of Los Angeles, Ralph F. Graham, of Whittier, and Frank F. Oster, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of seduction under promise of marriage, as denounced by section 268 of the Penal Code, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1, 2] The defendant urges upon this appeal three points which were not included in the statement of points and grounds of appeal filed by him in the court below under the provisions of section 1247 of the Penal Code. They are as follows: (1) The facts stated in the information do not constitute a public offense. (2) The district attorney was guilty of misconduct during the trial prejudicial to the defendant. (3) The judgment is uncertain and void. The statement filed by the defendant in the court below was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of section 1247 to give this court jurisdiction to consider the appeal. Of these additional points, the first and third are referable solely to the judgment roll and are points which may be raised at any stage of the proceedings; the second is, in our opinion, inconsequential. Inasmuch as we cannot see that the respondent can be in any way prejudiced by our consideration of these additional points at this time, we shall not decline to consider them.

[3] The defendant earnestly contends that the facts stated in the information are insufficient to constitute a public offense. The information is as follows:

"The said Vernon J. Votaw is accused by the district attorney of and for the county of Los Angeles, state of California, by this information, of the crime of seduction under promise of marriage, a felony, committed as follows: That the said Vernon J. Votaw on or about the 19th day of May, 1917, at and in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, did willfully, unlawfully and feloniously have and accomplish an act of sexual intercourse with one Laura S. Newton, who was then and there an unmarried female of previous chaste character, said act of sexual intercourse being accomplished by him, the said Vernon J. Votaw, under and through promise of marriage then and there made by him, the said Vernon J. Votaw, to her, the said Laura S. Newton, contrary to the form, force and effect of the statute in such cases made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the people of the state of California."

The offense in question is defined by section 268 as follows:

"Every person who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has sexual intercourse with an unmarried female of previous chaste character, is punishable," etc.

Defendant calls our attention to the words "seduces and has sexual intercourse," and contends that under this section something more is required than merely having sexual intercourse under promise of marriage. It is pointed out that a mere bargain between a man and a woman, whereby the woman barters her virtue in exchange for the man's promise of marriage, would not constitute seduction. Defendant contends that the information in this case charges nothing more than such a bargain; that in order to constitute a public offense it should charge, in addition, such facts as would amount to a seduction. Respondent replies, in effect, that seduction is the leading away of a chaste woman from the path of virtue, accomplished by any one of several different means, as, for example, by flattery, or false promises, or artifice, or urgent importunity, or undue influence, or the like; and that the information in this case charges in ordinary and concise language a seduction accomplished by the particular means of a promise of marriage.

The Supreme Court of this state, in a civil case (Marshall v. Taylor, 98 Cal. 55, 60, 32 Pac. 867, 869 [35 Am. St. Rep. 144]), has approved the following definition:

"The word 'seduction,' when applied to the conduct of a man toward a female, means the use of some influence, promise, art, or means on his part, by which he induces the woman to surrender her chastity and her virtue to his embraces. There must be something more than a mere reluctance on the part of the woman to commit the act, and her consent must be obtained by flattery, false promises, artifice, urgent importunity, based on professions of attachment, or the like, for the woman, and that relying solely on said promises or professions of flattery or artifice or importunity, she surrendered her person and chastity to her alleged seducer." (Italics ours.)

In People v. Krusick, 93 Cal. 74, 77, 28 Pac. 794, a prosecution under this section, the court said:

"In order to convict the defendant of the crime defined in this section, it is necessary for the state to prove that the person seduced was an 'unmarried female of previous chaste character,' and that she consented to sexual intercourse with the defendant upon the sole consideration of his promise to marry her."

In People v. Wallace, 109 Cal. 611, 612, 42 Pac. 159, the court said:

"The charge was seduction under promise of marriage, and, of course, the gist of the offense is the accomplishment of the act by means of such promise as the inducing cause of the consent of the one seduced." (Italics ours.)

In People v. Kehoe, 123 Cal. 224, 227, 55 Pac. 911 (69 Am. St. Rep. 52) the court said:

"The law is designed to protect female chastity. * * * If a previously chaste woman submits herself to the embraces of a man under promise of marriage from him, upon which she in fact relies, the conviction, generally speaking, may not be avoided by proof that the promise was not legal and binding."

In People v. Jensen, 15 Cal. App. 220, 222, 223, 114 Pac. 585, 586, the court states the facts of that case from the testimony of the prosecutrix as follows:

"That some time previously to the time at which she first became immorally intimate with the defendant, the latter and she became engaged to be married; that subsequently, for some reason, said engagement was broken; that during the period of said engagement the defendant did not have sexual relations with her; that, thereafter, she resumed keeping company with the defendant, and it was then that he began coaxing her to yield to his lust and submit to his embraces. She testified that she did not submit to his entreaties in this regard until he had promised her that if she would do so he would marry her, and that, finally, relying upon said promise, she consented to and did have sexual connection with him. * * * The direct testimony of the prosecutrix, as we must view it, warranted the verdict, if the jury believed it, as evidently they did." (Italics ours.)

Considering the information in this case in the light of these definitions, we do not think it can be said that it would fail to convey to a defendant of ordinary intelligence the information that he was charged with the crime of seduction under promise of marriage as denounced by this section of the Code. It may be that it would have been vulnerable to a demurrer for uncertainty, if such demurrer had been interposed; but no question was raised as to the sufficiency of the information, either by demurrer or objection or motion, until the case had reached this court. Of course, if the information is, as defendant now contends, insufficient to state a public offense, that objection was not waived by defendant's failure to demur or to object to the introduction of the evidence or to move in arrest of judgment; but the fact that no such objection was made is strongly persuasive to the conclusion that the defendant was not in any way misled to his prejudice by what he now conceives to be a defect in the information. We are of the opinion that these circumstances and considerations bring this case, in this respect, within the rule followed in People v. Brown, 173 Pac. 621, and People v. Griesheimer (Sup.) 167 Pac. 521, 522.

[4, 5] Defendant contends that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. It appears from the testimony of the prosecuting witness: That she and the defendant, who were fellow students in college, became engaged to be married as the culmination of a courtship which extended over a period of about two years. That about three weeks thereafter "he came to call on me in the evening and Perrys retired about 9 o'clock, and after they had retired he told me that he thought that I was the same as his wife and he was the same as my husband, and that it would be all right for us to have sexual intercourse. And I said, well, I did not know as it was exactly the same as his wife, because if anything should happen to me I would be ——— and he said, well there would not be anything happen, and we would take precautions and there would not be anything happen, and I consented." She further testified that she would not have consented if the promise of marriage had not been made. There was no question as to her previous chaste character, and it was testified by many witnesses that the defendant was the only man with whom she "kept company." The defendant did not deny the acts of intercourse, but did deny that there was ever any promise of marriage between them. The evidence of the prosecutrix was, if true, sufficient to present a perfect case of seduction under promise of marriage; not only a perfect case, but an exceedingly flagrant one. The jury, after a fair trial, found it to be true, and the court approved that finding by denying the defendant's motion for a new trial. Some point is made of the alleged circumstance that there is no corroboration of the testimony of the prosecutrix as to the promise of marriage. Defendant's counsel concede that no such corroboration is required by the law of California. It may be said in passing, however, that such corroboration does appear inferentially from many of the facts and circumstances in the record, and particularly from the letters in evidence which passed between the two.

[6, 7] Defendant complains of the giving by the court of instruction numbered H, as follows:

"If the jury believes from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that Laura S. Newton and the defendant, Votaw, had and accomplished an act of sexual intercourse as charged in the information, and that at the time of such act or prior thereto the defendant had promised to marry said Laura S. Newton, and that she was then an unmarried female of previous chaste character, and that but for such promise of marriage said Laura S. Newton would not have consented to said act of sexual intercourse, then you should find the defendant guilty as charged, notwithstanding the fact that other promises and representations were made as to the means and method by which such act should be accomplished."

The objection to this instruction is substantially the same as the objections to the information, namely, that it leaves out of consideration the question of seduction and makes it possible for the jury to find the defendant guilty, even though the intercourse was the result merely of a meretricious bargain between the parties. What we have said with respect to the sufficiency of the information applies here. It may be added that, even if it be conceded that the instruction was faulty in this respect, it could not have misled the jury in this case to the defendant's prejudice, because there was not a scintilla of evidence tending to show any such meretricious bargain. Furthermore, the definition of the offense contained in this instruction is substantially identical with that embodied in instruction numbered 6, which was given by the court in this case at the request of the defendant.

[8, 9] The court also instructed the jury that "a witness false in one part of his or her testimony must be distrusted in others." Defendant contends that this instruction invaded the province of the jury. This can scarcely be regarded as an open question in this state at this time. Complaint is also made of the modification of certain instructions given by the court at the request of the defendant, by striking out certain portions therefrom. An examination of these instructions discloses that the parts stricken out, in so far as they were correct statements of the law, are substantially embodied in other instructions given by the court.

[10] Defendant contends that the judgment in this case is void because it provides for an indeterminate sentence and the offense was committed at a time prior to the taking effect of the indeterminate sentence law. This error does not render the judgment void. Ex parte Lee (Sup.) 171 Pac. 958; People v. Lee, 172 Pac. 158, 162; People v. Booth, 174 Pac. 685.

Following the practice adopted in People v. Hill, 172 Pac. 1114, the case is remanded to the superior court, with instructions that such steps be taken as may be necessary to bring the defendant before it and to pronounce judgment upon the defendant under the law as it stood at the time his crime was committed.

KIMBALL v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 2637.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 25, 1918. Rehearing Denied Dec. 23, 1918.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸34—CLAIMS — TRANSFER — RIGHTS UNDER GRUBSTAKE AGREEMENT.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 856, 2243, persons who purchased mining claim in good faith and for valuable consideration are not responsible to plaintiff, who had rights in such claim under grubstake agreement.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸80(1)—PRESUMPTION — LAWS OF TERRITORY.

In absence of proof to contrary, it is presumed that laws of Alaska are same as those of California.

3. WITNESSES ⟸21 — REFUSAL TO ANSWER IMMATERIAL QUESTIONS—CONTEMPT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2065, and section 1209, subsecs. 5, 10, witness in case involving mine was not guilty of contempt when he refused to answer immaterial questions relating to title of third person, a subject not in issue.

4. WITNESSES ⟸21—REFUSAL TO ANSWER QUESTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2065, and section 1209, subsecs. 5, 10, witness in action involving mine was guilty of contempt of court for refusing to answer question as to how much gold he had seen defendant and his employés clean up, which was pertinent to issue.

Application for writ of review by Charles E. Kimball against the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the City and County of San Francisco and others to annul a judgment of contempt. Judgment affirmed in part; otherwise annulled.

Clarence G. Atwood, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Wilson T. Hume, of Portland, Or., for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an application for a writ of review brought by the petitioner to have a judgment of contempt annulled. The alleged contempt arose in certain proceedings had in the case of Heim v. Wilson. In the amended complaint, in that case, on which the parties went to trial, it was alleged that Wilson held title for the plaintiff, Heim, of and to certain properties acquired by the defendant Wilson, under and by virtue of a grubstake agreement theretofore entered into by and between the plaintiff, Heim, and the defendant, Wilson. In the said amended complaint, Charles E. Kimball, this petitioner, John S. Kimball, and the Wilson-Kimball Mining Company (a corporation), were not made parties or, if they were, judgment was entered in their favor. A part of the property involved was a mine in Alaska. The trial court found for the plaintiff as to the existence of the trust and entered an interlocutory decree, in which it ordered that an accounting be had. The findings are silent as to what is the law of Alaska on the subject of trusts or on any other subject. There is no finding as to the title, if any, of J. S. Kimball (deceased), of Charles E. Kimball (this petitioner), or of the Wilson-Kimball Mining Company (a corporation), or whether either "purchased it in good faith, and for a valuable consideration." Civ. Code, § 2243.

[1-4] In short, as the case was made in the trial court, it presented the simple issue as to what Wilson had obtained and acquired under the grubstake—nothing more. Wilson's vendees, who purchased in good faith and for a valuable consideration, are not responsible to the plaintiff, Heim. Civ. Code, §§ 856, 2243; Estate of Lyon, 163 Cal. 803, 805, 806, 127 Pac. 75; Kowalsky v. Kimberlin, 173 Cal. 506, 160 Pac. 673. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it is presumed that the laws of Alaska are the same as in California. Navajo County Bank v. Dolson, 163 Cal. 485, 126 Pac. 153, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787; Hobbs v. Tom Reed Mining Company, 164 Cal. 497, 129 Pac. 781, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1112; Fox v. Mick, 20 Cal. App. 599, 602, 129 Pac. 972. The witness was adjudged guilty of contempt for refusing to answer questions 1, 2, 3, 15, 18, 28, 32, 33, 34, and 35. All of those questions, except No. 18, related to the title of J. S. Kimball, a subject that was not an issue in the case. Such questions were therefore immaterial, and the petitioner was not guilty of contempt when he refused to answer immaterial questions. Code Civ. Proc. § 2065, and section 1209, subs. 5 and 10; Ex parte Zeehandelaar, 71 Cal. 238, 240, 12 Pac. 259; Rogers v. Court, 145 Cal. 88, 91, 78 Pac. 344. Question 18 was an inquiry as to how much gold the witness had seen J. L. Wilson and his employés clean up. That question was directly pertinent to the issue on trial and should have been answered. For refusing to answer question No. 18, the judgment of contempt should be affirmed; but the judgment of contempt should be annulled as to all of the other questions. In re Rogers, 129 Cal. 468, 470, 62 Pac. 47.

It is so ordered.

CROSARO et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2566.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 25, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸417(7)—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—REVIEW.

Where Industrial Accident Commission had power to hold hearing, to take evidence, and to make findings thereon, its findings, though erroneous, are binding on the Court of Appeal, under St. 1913, p. 318, § 84; court's only power being in case where commission exceeds its authority.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Angelo Crosaro and another for compensation for death of Guiseppe Crosaro. Order of Industrial Accident Commission refusing petitioners any allowance, and petitioners apply for writ of review to have order annulled. Affirmed.

I. F. Chapman, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Chris. M. Bradley and Barry J. Colding, both of San Francisco (Theodore Hale, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an application by the petitioners for a writ of review to have annulled an order of the Industrial Accident Commission refusing the petitioners any allowance as dependents under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The commission had regular hearings and made a full set of findings. From the latter it appears that the petitioners are, respectively, the surviving father and mother of Guiseppe Crosaro, who was killed in an accident in the early part of 1918; that Guiseppe was 23 years of age at the time of his death and had never been married. There is an express finding that neither of the petitioners was, at the time of the death of Guiseppe, "wholly nor partially dependent upon the employé for support." In their application the petitioners aver that said last-mentioned finding is not supported by the evidence, and they ask that the order of the commission refusing them an allowance as dependents be annulled.

We think the prayer of the petitioners cannot be granted. The commission took evidence on the subject of dependency, and the evidence shows that the petitioners could have lived, and did live, on the earnings of the father; and, as the commission had the power to hold the hearing, to take evidence, and to make findings thereon, such findings are, under these facts, binding on this court. True, the petitioners allege that "the findings are not supported by the evidence," but their real contention in this behalf is that the commission erred in its conclusions based on the evidence. Not intimating that the commission erred, yet if it did no court has power to correct mere errors of the commission. Stats. 1913, p. 279, § 84. It is only excess of power that can be examined into by the courts. As an abstract proposition, power to hear and determine is power to determine it wrong as well as right. McFarland v. McGowen, 98 Cal. 331, 33 Pac. 113.

The order of the commission is affirmed.

PRETTY v. WARDEN et al. (Civ. 2584.)

1. TAXATION ⟸707—SALES—NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR DEED—SERVICE—AFFIDAVITS.

Under St. 1909, p. 1072, § 24, providing for notice of a tax sale, purchaser's intention to apply for a deed, and for an affidavit of service, an affidavit of service on the occupant, "an agent of the owner," was insufficient as showing no personal service on the owner or of due diligence to accomplish such service.

2. TAXATION ⟸701—TAX SALE—NATURE—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

Proceedings calculated to deprive an owner of his property under the taxing power are in invitum, and the requirements of the statute as to notice of application for tax deed must be strictly complied with.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Suit by Elizabeth A. Pretty against Julia P. Warden and another to quiet title. From a decree for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. Irving McKenna and Catherine A. McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

James M. O'Brien and Luther P. Spalding, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. Defendants appeal from a judgment against them quieting plaintiff's title to certain property in the city of Los Angeles as against the claim of defendants under a deed issued by the board of public works of said city to defendant Julia P. Warden after a failure of the plaintiff to redeem from the lien of a delinquent assessment previously levied against said property for public park purposes.

[1] Appellants concede that the title is in the plaintiff, except as it may have been divested by the deed above mentioned and which was issued pursuant to proceedings had under the Park and Playground Act of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 1066). Section 24 of this act provides that the purchaser must, at least 30 days before he applies for a deed, serve upon the owner of the property, and upon the occupant thereof, if occupied, a written notice of his intention to apply for a deed, and must also file with the board of public works an affidavit or affidavits showing that such notice has been given as required; or, if the notice was not served upon the owner personally, that due diligence was used to find said owner. The affidavit of service here in question, so far as it is here material, is to the effect that affiant, as agent for the purchaser, served such notice "by delivering a true copy of the attached notice to redeem to Mrs. Charles Greenburg, the occupant of said property and the agent of the owner of said property." It is manifest that here was no showing of personal service upon the owner, or of due or any diligence to accomplish such service.

Appellants argue that the evidence establishes the fact that Mrs. Greenburg, the occupant of the property, was also the duly authorized agent of the owner of the property, and that therefore the service of notice upon such duly authorized agent was a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute, or was at the least sufficient evidence of due diligence in the effort to serve such owner. This appeal is taken under the so-called alternative method; typewritten transcripts being filed. The appellants have wholly failed to print in their brief any of the testimony to which they refer, in violation of the express mandate of section 953c of the Code of Civil Procedure. This court cannot be expected to search through typewritten transcripts for evidence which the litigants have neglected to present, in the manner prescribed by law, for its consideration. California Savings & Commercial Bank v. Canne, 34 Cal. App. 768, 169 Pac. 395, and cases there cited. However, appellants do print in their brief what they assert to be the substance of the testimony on these points, and from their statement of this testimony it clearly appears that Mrs. Greenburg, on whom the notice in question was served, was not the agent of the owner of the property and sustained no relationship toward said owner other than that of landlord and tenant. It is therefore unnecessary to consider here the question whether or not service upon the duly authorized agent of the owner would be a sufficient compliance with the requirements of said statute.

[2] It is elementary that proceedings calculated to deprive an owner of his property under the taxing power are in invitum, and that all the requirements of the statute respecting the same must be strictly complied with. Here the appellants wholly failed to comply with the express requirement of the statute for service of notice upon the owner of the property, and failed to use due diligence or any diligence in the effort so to do. There is no merit in this appeal.

An examination of the record here, as presented by appellant, constrains us to the conclusion that this is a frivolous appeal taken solely for the purpose of delay. It has resulted in unjustly clouding the title to plaintiff's property for a period of 3½ years.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed, with an award of $50 damages to the respondent.

CELLA v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (Civ. 2570.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 25, 1918.)

MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃393½—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION—MEDICAL CARE—RIGHT TO AWARD.

Where workman, directed by master to one hospital, went to another and was refused care, he was not entitled to an award for medical services under St. 1913, p. 290, § 19, subd. (b).

Application by Rafaelo Cella, sometimes known as R. Lee for writ of review to annul an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, denying an award in petitioner's behalf in his proceeding for workmen's compensation opposed by the Producers' Hay Company, employer, and the Ætna Life Insurance Company, insurer. Order of the Commission affirmed.

I. F. Chapman, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Chris M. Bradley and E. L. Stockwell, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an application for a writ of review for the purpose of having annulled an order made by respondents refusing to make an award in behalf of the petitioner covering hospital charges.

⊂⊃For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

About November 9, 1917, Rafaelo Cella was injured while in the employment of Producers' Hay Company (which is hereinafter referred to as the company). On the 16th he was told by the company's physician to go to the St. Francis Hospital. The petitioner did not do so, but went to St. Joseph's Hospital, and now claims that he did so through ignorance. In this behalf he alleges that he is an Italian, and can neither read, write, nor speak English. However, the fact was clearly established that the petitioner was directed to go to the St. Francis Hospital and the address was given in writing. These facts do not show any neglect or refusal on the part of the company to furnish the petitioner hospital service. Yet it is clear that the commission could not make an award to petitioner for such services except it be first shown that the company had neglected or refused to furnish such service. Stat. 1913, p. 279, § 19, subd. (b). The respondent commission did not exceed its jurisdiction in refusing the petitioner an award. Its order is therefore affirmed.

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊜152(12)—APPROPRIATION—CONFLICTING CLAIMS—REVIEW.

In an action to determine conflicting claims to the waters of a stream as between appropriators under Civ. Code, § 1416, whether under conflicting evidence the different acts of appropriation were sufficient in character and were consummated within a reasonable time was for the trial court.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊜131—APPROPRIATION — HOLDER OF POSSESSORY RIGHTS.

The waters of a stream may be appropriated for use upon lands held under a possessory right only.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊜140—APPROPRIATION — PRIORITY AS BETWEEN APPROPRIATORS.

One who obtains the right to occupy public lands riparian to a stream the waters of which have at a prior time been appropriated by another takes such right subject to those of the prior appropriator.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Sherwood against I. A. Wood and another. From a judgment for plaintiff and denial of a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Trippet, Chapman & Biby and Ward Chapman, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

S. E. Vermilyea and S. L. Carpenter, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. This action was brought for the purpose of determining conflicting claims to the waters of a stream called Birch or Summit creek, which has its course in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in the county of Inyo. The court determined that, as between the parties plaintiff and defendants, both being appropriators, the right of the plaintiff was the better, and entered judgment accordingly. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff and defendants both claimed to be entitled to use the waters of the creek for agricultural purposes upon lands occupied by them, with this difference: That the lands of the plaintiff did not lie upon or along the stream, but were situated several miles distant therefrom. In order to obtain water from the creek, the plaintiff was obliged to construct a ditch and conduct the water over and across the intervening elevations of land. Under the plan adopted by the plaintiff, the water, after passing through such a ditch, would fall into the bed of a dry creek, which water course extended to the plaintiff's land. The lands of the defendants did lie upon Birch creek below the point of diversion selected by the plaintiff. In June, 1910, the plaintiff obtained from the appropriate federal department a permit to use 150 acres of land, the permit providing that the purpose was to allow the plaintiff to clearly establish the fact that the land was chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes, preliminarily to the land being listed as open to entry. Prior to that time plaintiff had gone upon the land and had secured a federal permit to enable him to construct a water ditch to the property, commencing at a point on Summit creek, hereinbefore mentioned. On the 17th of May, 1909, plaintiff had posted and filed notice of water appropriation on Summit creek, claiming all of the water flowing in the stream, to the extent of 200 inches measured under 4-inch pressure. The form of notice and posting were all in full compliance with the terms of section 1415, Civil Code. Plaintiff testified that he began the work of constructing the ditch in January, 1910, and completed the ditch and turned the water into it prior to April of the same year; that at that time the water ran through the ditch into the dry wash mentioned and through the dry wash to the land occupied by the plaintiff; that he used the water there in the year 1911, made a small garden, planted seeds of plum and peach trees and some vegetables, which he irrigated with the water; that the water continued to run until the latter part of May or the first of June at that time; and that, in addition to the crops mentioned, alfalfa and potatoes were planted. None of these crops matured, however, as the water was turned off at the instance of the defendants, who refused to allow the plaintiff to further divert it and claimed that they had appropriated all the waters of the stream to their use. It seems that the defendants made application for leave to use approximately 135 acres of land to the forestry department of the United States in May, 1911, and that they received a special-use permit dated July 17, 1911. This permit was of similar kind to that theretofore granted to the plaintiff covering the lands sought to be used by him for agricultural purposes. On the 22d of May, 1911, the defendants posted and recorded notice of water appropriation on Summit creek, under which appropriation they asserted the right to take the full flow of the stream. It was at this time that they asserted the claimed right as against the plaintiff and refused to allow the plaintiff to take any of the water of Summit creek through the ditch theretofore constructed by him. It appears further that homestead filing was made by defendants in November, 1912, on the land occupied by them. It does not appear that any such filing was made by the plaintiff; neither does it appear that his possessory right to the land so occupied by him had been disturbed. It is by this time apparent that the controversy was mainly one as between different appropriators of water, one appropriation being of date prior to the other; and that, so far as the posting and recording of notice is concerned, the plaintiff was first in point of time. If the simple question suggested depended alone upon a showing of relative dates when the claims of the adversaries were made, this discussion could be here brought to an end, for section 1414, Civil Code, provides that, "as between appropriators, the one first in time is the first in right"—the section being expressive of the old maxim, "Qui prior est in tempore potior est in jure." The further claim is made, however, that the plaintiff never did complete the acts necessary to a valid appropriation by putting the water to the intended use. It is insisted that the ditch constructed by the plaintiff was not of such a character as would or could carry the water for the distance described; that it was constructed through rocks and gravel, and the water flowing therein would and did escape from the ditch from the sides thereof and was absorbed by the gravelly bed of the ditch; that plaintiff was neglectful in making repairs to the ditch, allowed the water to escape, and did not use diligent efforts to subject it to the use designed; and that such neglect worked an abandonment of the right. The plaintiff's testimony was that from the time of the construction of the ditch in 1910, which brought the water to his land, he made no particular use of the same until early in 1911, when he planted some crops and irrigated them with the water; that he had the water running on his land in January, 1911; and that he was making use of it for irrigating purposes at the time the appropriation was attempted to be made by the defendants, who thereafter prevented any water from coming into the ditch at plaintiff's intake.

[1] The effect of the court's finding was that the plaintiff had perfected his appropriation, and we think that it must be said that there was evidence to sustain the finding; and that it was for the trial judge to determine as to whether the different acts of appropriation were sufficient in character and were consummated within a reasonable time. Quoting from Senior v. Anderson, 115 Cal. 503, 47 Pac. 456:

"We do not hold that the Hines appropriation is limited by the quantity of water he could put to a useful purpose upon his land the first or second year, but to such quantity as he could put to a useful purpose upon his land within a reasonable time by the use of reasonable diligence. 'To entitle the defendant, however, to the benefit of such an appropriation, he should, within a reasonable time, apply the water to such beneficial use. As fast as he could reasonably put his homestead into cultivation, he is entitled to divert and use the water for that purpose.'"

The evidence did show that the work of constructing the ditch was commenced and completed within the limits imposed by section 1416, Civil Code. It is true that there was evidence tending to show that the plaintiff allowed his ditch to fall into disrepair and also evidence tending to show that the ditch was not reasonably adapted to convey the water for the great distance required; but, in view of the conflict existing upon these points, the facts must be resolved in support of the findings of the court.

[2, 3] Defendants make the further claim that the court failed to find upon issues presented by their answer, which raised the question of their riparian rights in the waters of the stream. Respondent replies that no such rights were sufficiently pleaded and that no findings were necessary to determine any such issue, citing Riverside Water Co. v. Gage, 89 Cal. 410, 26 Pac. 889, and San Luis Water Co. v. Estrada, 117 Cal. 168–182, 48 Pac. 1075. While we have examined the text of the opinions in those cases and while they tend strongly to support the contention of respondent, we think that more facts were pleaded by the defendants than were found in the cases cited, as tending to show that the lands of defendants were riparian to Summit creek, and that all of the water of that creek was necessary for use thereon for agricultural purposes. However, we fail to see how any prejudice could result to defendants by reason of the failure of the court to make a finding upon that issue. Even had the court determined in favor of the defendants that their lands were riparian to Summit creek and that all of the waters of that creek were reasonably necessary to the proper irrigation thereof, such finding would not have compelled a judgment in their favor, for reasons which we will state: The defendants, at the time they made their attempted appropriation of the waters of Summit creek, held possessory rights only in the lands upon which the waters were to be used. That the appropriation of water may be made for use upon such lands so held, there is no question. However, one who obtains the right to occupy public lands riparian to a stream the waters of which have, at a prior time, been appropriated by another, takes such right subject to those of the prior appropriator. This proposition has been established from the beginning of the cases. Irwin v. Phillips et al., 5 Cal. 140–147, 63 Am. Dec. 113; Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 136; Osgood v. El Dorado Water, etc., Min. Co., 56 Cal. 571; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 355, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; Hargrave v. Cook, 108 Cal. 72–78, 41 Pac. 18, 30 L. R. A. 390; Senior v. Anderson, supra.

There was evidence tending to show that the amount of water claimed under the appropriation made by plaintiff was reasonably necessary for the purposes to which it was sought to be applied.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

MILLS v. LAING et al. (Civ. 2549.)

1. JUDICIAL SALES ⟸54—PURCHASER—EFFECT OF REVERSAL OF JUDGMENT.

The title of a stranger, purchasing lands at a judicial sale under a judgment which is erroneous, but not void, will not be defeated or impaired by a subsequent reversal of the judgment, under Code Civ. Proc. § 957; but, where a party to the decree purchases, he and his grantees acquire a defeasible title only, under section 347.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION ⟸58—ESSENTIALS—HOSTILE CLAIM.

The essence of adverse possession is that the holder claims the right to his possession, not under, but in opposition to, the title to which his possession is alleged to be adverse.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Laura J. E. Mills against Charles D. Laing and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Arthur H. Barendt, of San Francisco (Geo. H. Pippy, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

F. H. Dam, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action in ejectment to recover the property described in the complaint, which was acquired by one of the defendants from the plaintiff under a decree of sale in an action for specific performance, and was occupied by her for more than five years before this action was commenced. The facts constituting the basis of the case are briefly as follows:

In January, 1903, Laura J. E. Mills, the plaintiff, was the owner and holder of the property here involved. Thereafter Charles Wesley Reed entered into a contract for its purchase, but, being unable to pay Mary A. Fritz the balance of certain money which he had borrowed from her, he assigned his contract of purchase and the cause of action based thereon to her as security therefor. Mrs. Fritz was subsequently substituted as plaintiff in that action in the place of Reed, and on the 29th day of May obtained judgment against Mrs. Mills, providing in part for a sale of the property. On July 14, 1908, the clerk of the court, pursuant to the judgment, executed a deed in the name of Mrs. Mills, conveying the property to Mrs. Fritz. The next day the deed was recorded. Thereafter, and on the 30th day of September, 1908, Mrs. Fritz sold the property to Isabella Laing, the only defendant in interest here, under a contract by which payment was to be made in installments. Mrs. Laing went into possession of the premises on the 3d day of October, 1908, and with her husband occupied them continuously down to the date of trial, and was in possession at the time of the commencement of this action, December 4, 1915, having theretofore, to wit, in September, 1915, made the last payment under her contract of purchase. However, after the judicial sale of July, 1908, and after Mrs. Laing had gone into possession of the premises under her contract, to wit, on the 1st day of December, 1908, Mrs. Mills appealed from that judgment, without filing any bond staying execution. December 3, 1909, the judgment was reversed. Fritz v. Mills, 12 Cal. App. 113, 106 Pac. 725. Upon a second trial of the action, judgment went for Mrs. Mills, denied the plaintiff therein specific performance, and this judgment was, so far as we are here concerned, declared final in effect by the Supreme Court on June 21, 1915. 170 Cal. 449, 150 Pac. 375. During this litigation Mrs. Mills paid no taxes on the property; they, by the terms of the contract of purchase between Mrs. Laing and Mrs. Fritz, being paid by the latter.

[1] One of the questions in the case requiring consideration is: What effect did the reversal of the judgment in favor of Mrs. Fritz have upon the conveyance by her to Mrs. Laing? It is settled law that the title of a stranger, purchasing lands at a judicial sale under a judgment which is erroneous, but not void, will not be defeated or impaired by a subsequent reversal of the judgment. If a judgment is so far valid that it is necessary for the party against whom it is given to resort to an appeal to avoid its effect, he must, in order to prevent execution, stay proceedings by giving a sufficient undertaking on appeal. If he omit to do this, strangers to the suit may purchase at the sale, and in that event their title is valid, whether the judgment is affirmed or reversed. It is said that this is so for the reason that public policy requires that all persons should have confidence in the title to be derived from such sale; otherwise, few would take the risk of purchasing, and the property would almost invariably be sold at a grossly inadequate price. Upon the reversal of the judgment after such sale to a stranger, the defendant must seek redress from the plaintiff. Freeman on Executions (3d Ed.) §§ 345, 346; Code Civ. Proc. § 957. But where a party to the decree purchases he acquires a defeasible title only, which fails upon a subsequent reversal of the judgment. Id. § 347. And we think, under the weight of authority, that the grantee of one who purchases under an erroneous decree in his own favor necessarily receives the title subject to the condition under which it was held by his vendor. Id. § 347; 2 Dembitz on Land Titles, § 164; Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 667, 681, 76 Am. Dec. 459; Di Nola v. Allison, 143 Cal. 106, 112, 76 Pac. 976, 65 L. R. A. 419, 101 Am. St. Rep. 84.

In the case of Marks v. Cowles, 61 Ala. 299, the facts were identical in principle with those of this case. The purchasing plaintiff sold the land to a third person, a stranger to the action. After the conveyance the judgment under which the property was sold was reversed. The court held that the defendant was entitled to restitution of the land upon the ground that the purchaser from the plaintiff was chargeable with notice of the defeasible character of the title of his grantor, saying:

"The judgment or decree must be shown necessarily as an indispensable element of the title of the party, on the face of the title papers. And when it is shown, the defeasible quality of the title appears, of which the vendee is bound to take notice. * * * The right of a party, aggrieved by an erroneous judgment, to a restoration to the condition in which he was when it was rendered—the prohibition against the use of such judgment by his adversary, so as to derive advantages he cannot restore, would be of little avail, if through the mechanism of an alienation to a party bound to know that the right and prohibition exists, it could be defeated."

[2] The only other question in the case worthy of detailed consideration is as to whether or not it can be said under the facts of the case that Mrs. Laing acquired title to the property by prescription. It will be noted that she went into possession of the premises in the month of October, 1908, and remained therein for more than five years, to wit, about seven years, at the time this action was commenced. We will not attempt to answer all of the points made by defendant on this phase of the case. We think it sufficient to say that the evidence in this case sustains the view that Mrs. Laing did not establish title by prescription in failing to show that she held the property in hostility to the title of the true owner, and under a claim of right. If the possession is consistent with or in subordination to the title of the real owner, it is not adverse. Any evidence of the recognition of the title of another is always admissible to show the real character of the possession. Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 593, 49 Am. Rep. 100; 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 796; 2 Corpus Jur. 131, §§ 224, 225. It is said in McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 636:

"To render possession adverse, so as to set the statute of limitations in motion, it must be accompanied with a claim of title; and this claim, when founded 'upon a written instrument as being a conveyance of the premises,' must be asserted by the occupant in good faith, in the belief that he has good right to the premises, and with the intention to hold them against all the world. The claim must be absolute—not dependent upon any contingencies—and must be 'exclusive of any other right'; and to render the adverse possession thus commenced effectual as a bar to a recovery by the true owner, the possession must be continued without interruption, under such claim, for five years."

The essence of adverse possession is that the holder claims the right to his possession not under but in opposition to the title to which his possession is alleged to be adverse. Farish v. Coon, 40 Cal. 33, 57.

As we have seen, Mrs. Laing was bound to know, and in fact did know, the condition of the record upon which the title of Mrs. Fritz rested. The contract of purchase provided in part for a return of the money paid on account of the purchase price in the event that Mrs. Fritz was unable to tender Mrs. Laing a perfect title. After the reversal of the judgment in favor of Mrs. Fritz on the first appeal, and on April 30, 1910, Mrs. Laing evidently became apprehensive concerning the condition of Mrs. Fritz's title, and as a result a second contract was entered into between them, which provided, among other things, as follows:

"In case the seller is not able to tender the purchaser a perfect title, * * * or if the purchaser should be at any time ousted from the possession of said premises, then in any of said events, at the option and upon the demand of the purchaser, the seller shall return all of the moneys which the purchaser shall have paid to the seller, less $45 a month rent for the said premises for the time they have been occupied by the purchaser, plus the interest hereinafter stated."

The new agreement further provided:

"The seller further agrees * * * in all respects to save purchaser harmless in all matters relating to said title and to his occupation of said premises."

Shortly after the decision of the Supreme Court on the second appeal, affirming the judgment of the trial court denying Mrs. Fritz a specific performance of the contract in her action against Mrs. Mills, and on September 4, 1915, Mrs. Laing wrote to Mrs. Fritz, calling attention to this decision, and, construing it, said:

It "means, as I understand it, that the property belongs to Laura J. E. Mills, and that you have not, and never have had, any title to convey to me."

In November, 1915, Mrs. Laing again wrote to Mrs. Fritz, and, after quoting certain provisions of the contract of purchase, demanded the return of the money she had paid on account of the purchase, less a certain sum per month during the period she had occupied the premises, whereupon, she said, "I will, of course, * * * immediately vacate the premises." Approximately a month after this action was commenced Mrs. Fritz and Mrs. Laing entered into a supplemental agreement, reaffirming certain provisions of the contract of April, 1910, and providing further that Mrs. Fritz would assume and pay all attorney's fees, costs, damages, and expenses which might be incurred by or imposed upon Mrs. Laing by reason of the litigation over the property. Mrs. Laing in part testified:

"Q. You expected to get a deed when you had the property paid for, and did not expect to become the owner in any other way than through a deed from Mrs. Fritz; isn't that correct? A. Yes, sir."

She also testified that her attorney in this case was employed by Mrs. Fritz.

In view of what has just been said, we are convinced that it cannot be held that Mrs. Laing held possession of the property in hostility to the title of Mrs. Mills. Mrs. Laing did not enter into possession of this property and hold it under a claim of title exclusive of any other right. It is true that the two contracts made by Mrs. Fritz and Mrs. Laing, two and eight years after the contract of purchase, might have been entered into under such circumstances as would warrant the conclusion that they were contracts of indemnity only. But it must be remembered that Mrs. Laing was bound to know, and did know, the doubtful condition of the title when she entered into the contract of purchase. In her letter of November, 1915, she quoted certain provisions of that contract, according to which, under the decision of the Supreme Court, she seemed to believe that she ought to vacate the premises, and that upon doing so she was entitled to the return of the payments made by her, less a certain monthly sum covering the period of her occupation, to be considered as rental of the premises. Much of what was done by Mrs. Laing was done to protect the interests of Mrs. Fritz. All through the transaction Mrs. Laing appears to base her claim to the property upon the title of Mrs. Fritz, and to hold the possession thereof in submission to the title of Mrs. Mills.

The judgment is affirmed.

FURMAN v. BREWER et al. (Civ. 1864.)

1. HOMESTEAD ⟸81 — HOMESTEAD DECLARATION.

A trustee, having not only actual possession of land which was subject to a trust but a beneficial interest therein, is entitled to protect not only that interest but any other interest which she may have in the land as against creditors, by impressing the entire parcel with a homestead declaration.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⟸315(6) —DECREE OF DISTRIBUTION—EFFECT.

A decree of distribution determining the rights of the beneficiaries under a will from which no appeal was ever taken is conclusive as to the provisions of the will.

3. JOINT TENANCY ⟸1 — NATURE OF ESTATE.

The properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is fourfold, unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession, in other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Joint Tenancy.]

4. TENANCY IN COMMON ⟸1—NATURE OF.

Tenants in common are those who hold by unity of possession.

5. HOMESTEAD ⟸84 — TENANCY IN COMMON ⟸1 — NATURE OF INTEREST — HOMESTEAD DECLARATION.

A widow who with her deceased husband had been the owner of community estate held not a tenant in common with children of the marriage, who were entitled to interests in the land under the will of the husband, and hence the widow's homestead declaration while she was in possession of the land was valid.

6. HOMESTEAD ⟹154—RELEASE AS TO TRUST PROPERTY—EFFECT.

Where the trustee, who was not only in possession of the land but also had a beneficial interest and title to a part of it, filed a homestead declaration on the property, the homestead declaration was not destroyed because of the release of the homestead as to the land subject to the trust.

7. WILLS ⟹792(4) — ACTS CONSTITUTING ELECTION—ACTING AS EXECUTOR.

The husband of a decedent who had filed a homestead declaration on land is not estopped from maintaining an action to quiet title to the property because he qualified as executor of the will of his deceased wife by which instrument the property was devised to others, etc.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Francis Marion Furman against Henry S. Brewer and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, the first-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Cosper & Watkinson, of Hanford, for appellant.

Francis Cunningham, of Hanford, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was brought to quiet the title of plaintiff to the south half of the northwest quarter of a certain section of land in the county of Kings. Judgment was in his favor, and the appeal is by the defendant, Henry S. Brewer, from said judgment.

In August, 1889, Samuel G. Brewer was the owner of the entire northwest quarter section, the south half of which is in controversy here, said quarter section being the community property of Samuel G. Brewer and his wife, Phoebe Brewer. Samuel G. Brewer died on August 29, 1889, leaving a will of which his wife and Samuel A. Brewer, a son, were appointed executors. The fourth clause of said will reads as follows:

"I give and devise all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, real and personal, of every name and nature whatsoever, owned by me at the time of my death, to my wife, Phoebe Brewer, and my son, Samuel A. Brewer, to be by them held in trust for my sons, Daniel G. Brewer, Samuel A. Brewer, Charles Brewer and Henry Brewer, for the maintenance of my wife, Phoebe Brewer, and our children who may then be less than twenty-one years of age and unmarried, until all of said children shall have attained unto the age of twenty-one years; and I hereby direct and order that when the youngest living child hereinbefore named shall have reached the age of twenty-one years, that my said estate so devised and bequeathed in trust to my wife, Phoebe Brewer, and to my son, Samuel A. Brewer, shall be sold by them or by their successors in trust, and that the proceeds of such sale be divided share and share alike among my sons, Daniel G. Brewer, Samuel A. Brewer, Charles Brewer, and Henry Brewer."

Said will was probated and a decree of distribution was entered, on May 6, 1892, containing this clause:

"To the said Phoebe Brewer, the surviving wife of said deceased, the one-half of the residue of said estate absolutely and the other half of the residue of said estate to Phoebe Brewer until the youngest child of said deceased becomes twenty-one years old according to the terms of the last will and testament of said deceased."

Then follows a description of certain personal property and the northwest quarter of said section of land.

In November, 1897, Phoebe Brewer became the wife of Francis Marion Furman, the plaintiff herein, and, on the 23d of December, 1898, she filed a declaration of homestead upon the said quarter section.

Certain deeds were introduced in evidence, and certain others were referred to by counsel for the respective parties, showing that, in 1905, Phoebe Furman became the sole owner of the south half of said quarter section, the land in dispute.

Phoebe Furman died on October 19, 1905, leaving a will in which she bequeathed to her husband the land in question "to have and to hold for his natural life," and upon his death half thereof to go to her daughter, Ada Harper, and half to her son, Henry S. Brewer, the defendants herein.

[1-6] The principal question presented for decision is as to the validity or invalidity of the homestead declared by Phoebe Furman (formerly Brewer) upon the property in dispute after her marriage to the plaintiff, the homestead being for their joint benefit. The importance of the controversy thus brought to us lies in the fact that Phoebe Furman, upon her death, left a will whereby she gave to her surviving husband, the plaintiff, a life estate in the property in dispute, with a remainder over to two of her children by her former marriage, one of whom is the appellant here, and that the court found and adjudged, obviously by virtue of section 1474 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the plaintiff is the owner in fee of said property.

The contention of the appellant is that, inasmuch as at the time of the filing of the declaration of homestead the property was held by her and her children as joint tenants or tenants in common, the homestead is invalid. On this proposition, the respondent contends that the declaration of homestead was filed under the statute of 1868 relating to homesteads (Stats. 1867–68, p. 116), the first section of which reads:

"Whenever any party entitled to a homestead under the laws of this state shall be in exclusive occupation of any parcel or tract of land, having the same inclosed, and shall select and record and reside upon the same as a homestead, such party so selecting and claiming shall be entitled to such homestead, and to all rights and exemptions provided by the general law relating to homesteads, to the extent of such claimant's interest in such homestead property, although such land be held in joint tenancy, or tenancy in common, or such claimant own only an undivided interest therein."

It is argued by the respondent that the above section has never been repealed by subsequent legislation relating to homesteads, and that therefore the declaration of homestead is valid, even if it be true that Phoebe Brewer and her children, the beneficiaries named in the trust clause of the will of the deceased and also referred to in the decree of distribution in the estate of said deceased, are cotenants of the real property upon which the homestead declaration was filed. On the other hand, the appellant contends that the statute of 1868 has been repealed by the subsequent legislation upon the subject of homesteads. See section 1237 et seq., Civ. Code.

The present law relating to homestead, in all substantial particulars, is as it was enacted by the Legislature of 1873–74. Stats. 1873–74, p. 228 et seq. There is no express provision in the present law repealing the act of 1868, and therefore, if the act of 1868 has been repealed, the repeal has been effected by implication arising either from an irreconcilable inconsistency between the law as it now stands, as found in the sections of the Civil Code above named, and the act of 1868, or from an indication irresistibly deducible from the general tenor of said law that the Legislature intended that it should supersede as a scheme for allowing homesteads that which was established by the Legislature of 1868. This precise question has never, so far as we are at present advised, been passed upon by the higher courts, and it is probable that the proposition has never been put squarely up to those courts. There are comparatively recent decisions, however, which distinctly hold "that a homestead cannot be created upon land held in cotenancy, or tenancy in common, in favor of one of the cotenants." Rosenthal v. Merced Bank, 110 Cal. 198, 202, 42 Pac. 640; In re Carriger's Estate, 107 Cal. 618, 40 Pac. 1032; Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 148 Cal. 548, 549, 83 Pac. 999. The last-named case comes nearer than any other to which our attention has been called to holding that the effect of the enactment of the sections of the Civil Code relating to homesteads and above referred to was to repeal the act of 1868, for it is therein said:

"The decisions under the present and former laws holding that a homestead cannot be created out of lands held in cotenancy, violate no well-established rule of law. They merely construe statutory provisions conferring upon householders rights of exemption not otherwise enjoyed. Five sessions of the Legislature have been held since the last decisions were promulgated. If the legislative department had not been satisfied with the judicial interpretation as to the extent of the right conferred, there has been ample opportunity to amend the statute so as to give in unmistakable language the right withheld by the decisions. In view of these circumstances, and without expressing any opinion concerning the soundness or unsoundness of the decisions in question, we are of the opinion that they should be adhered to, leaving it to the Legislature to extend the right of the homestead to cotenants if it shall see fit."

In Swan v. Walden, 156 Cal. 195, 103 Pac. 931, 134 Am. St. Rep. 118, 20 Ann. Cas. 194, the grants of three several lots were to Edward Walden and his wife, Luella Walden, in joint tenancy. The wife filed a declaration on all of two lots, which were conveyed to the parties by a single deed or grant. The court held that the homestead was valid, inasmuch as the whole land held by the husband and wife in joint tenancy was impressed with the homestead characteristic, which she could do as to her own interest, which was her separate property, and which she could do as to her husband's interest, "since she has the power to declare a homestead upon the husband's separate property." The Walden Case is differentiated from the Schoonover and other preceding cases, in which the right of a cotenant to impress real property held in cotenancy with the homestead characteristic is denied, in the fact that in the latter cases, unlike the Walden Case, the cotenants were not husband and wife, the cotenancy being between the husband or his wife and third persons, and consequently the holding of the wife or husband not capable, from the very nature of the tenancy, of being delimited or its limits definitely marked out and fixed. The Schoonover Case and the cases followed by it are also to be distinguished from the case where the husband owns an undivided interest in land, as a tenant in common with others, and is living on the entire tract with his family, for in that case it has been held that the wife may claim a homestead on it to the extent of the husband's undivided interest, and to the extent in value of $5,000. Higgins v. Higgins, 46 Cal. 260.

The present case comes within the rule of the Schoonover and other cases which it follows, and not within the rule established by the case of Swan v. Walden; for here, as the evidence shows, the homestead claimant, when filing the homestead, lived on and had actual possession of the entire tract of land, including her undivided one-half thereof as well as the undivided one-half which she held in trust. It also differs from all the cases above named because, as shown, Phoebe Brewer had a beneficial interest in the trust estate.

But it is not necessary for us to decide whether the enactment of the existing Code sections resulted in the repeal of the homestead statute of 1868, or whether the decisions so hold, since we are unable to perceive how it can be worked out that Phoebe Brewer and her children, named as beneficiaries in the trust clause of the will of the deceased and which clause is by reference made a part of the decree of distribution of the latter's estate, hold the property in cotenancy.

It may first be observed that, since the evidence discloses that all the estate of Samuel G. Brewer, deceased, was community property—that is, acquired during the coverture of Samuel G. and Phoebe Brewer (later Furman)—it was, of course, not within the legal competency of Samuel G. to dispose of her community interest by testament. This, though, as we construe his will, he neither intended nor attempted to do; but in disposing of that portion of the estate which he had the right to make testamentary disposal of, he made Phoebe Brewer, with their children named in the trust clause of the will, a beneficiary thereof; that is to say, he provided therein that the interest so disposed of should be for her maintenance until the youngest living of their children named as beneficiaries under the trust clause of the will should attain the age of 21 years. Her trusteeship was therefore coupled with an interest. That, as trustee, she should have exclusive actual possession of the land which constituted the corpus of the trust, we doubt not was the intention of the testator. Indeed, as above shown, the evidence shows that she did have actual possession of and occupied the real property during the period of the existence of the trust, which, it seems to be admitted, though not clearly shown by the record, terminated in November, 1905, the youngest of the children having then attained the age of 21 years. Thus it appears her right to the possession of the property during the existence of the trust was never challenged or questioned. At any rate, having not only the actual possession of the trust property, but a beneficial interest therein—that of maintenance—she was entitled to protect not only that interest, but any other interest she had in the land as against creditors by impressing the entire tract with a homestead characteristic, unless, as is the contention, she and the other beneficiaries of the trust held the property as cotenants, to which question we will now give our attention and as to which we have this to say: That at no time was the property held in cotenancy unless it can properly be said that Samuel A. Brewer, named in and appointed by the will of the deceased as cotrustee of Phoebe Brewer, and the last named by virtue of their joint trusteeship, became cotenants of the trust estate. But, assuming, without deciding or conceding, that Samuel A. Brewer and Phoebe Brewer, as cotrustees, held the joint property in cotenancy under the will of the deceased, it nevertheless transpires that by the decree of distribution entered in the estate of the deceased six years before the filing of the declaration of homestead in question, and from which decree no appeal was ever taken, Phoebe Brewer was given the entire estate of the deceased in severalty —an undivided one-half absolutely and an undivided one-half to her in trust, to be disposed of by her according to the terms of the trust clause of the will of the deceased. The decree of distribution is conclusive as to the provisions of the will and the intention of the testator, and therefore under the decree Samuel A. Brewer ceased to be a trustee of the trust estate, and it follows, of course, that if ever he was a cotenant of Phoebe Brewer of the property, he was not such at the time of the filing by her of the declaration of homestead thereon.

Nor were the children of the deceased, named as beneficiaries, etc., either joint tenants or tenants in common with Phoebe Brewer of the property. "The properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is fourfold; the unity of interest, the unity of title, the unity of time and the unity of possession; or, in other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one, and the same time, and held by one and the same individual possession." 2 Black. Comm. 181. Tenants in common are those who hold by unity of possession.

There is absolutely no semblance of a joint tenancy in the estate created by the testator in the property or in the whole or any part of the property. Nor was there a tenancy in common thereby created. The estate created by the will is wanting in at least two of the unities essential to constitute it a joint estate, viz. the unity of interest and the unity of possession, and the absence of the latter unity leaves it without the distinguishing characteristic of a tenancy in common. As seen, the testament or the trust clause thereof expressly provides that, when the youngest of the living children named as beneficiaries shall have attained the age of 21 years, the trust property shall be sold and the proceeds of the sale divided share and share alike between said children. Thus it will be noted that there is no provision that said children should at any time have possession of the property. Of course, they had a vested or present interest in the estate, but the actual enjoyment of such interest was postponed to a future time, not by possession of the corpus of the trust itself, but by receiving their respective shares of the proceeds realized upon the sale of the property as provided by the will and in the decree of distribution. As a matter of fact, the said children were nearer legatees than devisees, although up to the happening of the contingency upon which the trust property was to be sold the corpus of the trust would strictly be treated as land rather than as personalty. But, however that may be, it is very clear that it was not intended by the deceased that the said children should have actual possession of the trust property at any time, but that such possession should be enjoyed exclusively by Phoebe Brewer until the happening of the condition which would terminate the trust.

As above stated, the evidence does not directly show when the youngest child reached the age of 21 years. It is stated in the brief of counsel for the respondent, and not denied by the appellant, that that event occurred in November, 1905. It also appears from the evidence, however, that on the 7th day of November, 1905, Phoebe Furman (formerly Brewer), as "the distributee of all the estate of Samuel G. Brewer, deceased," and "Samuel A. Brewer, named as trustee under said will, but not mentioned in the decree of distribution of said estate," conveyed to Charles N. Brewer, one of the named beneficiaries under the trust clause of said will, all of the N. W. ¼ of section 28, township 19 S., range 22 E. M. D. B. and M., the same being the quarter section described in the will and the decree of distribution; that on the 8th day of November, 1905, Phoebe Furman (formerly Brewer) conveyed by deed all of said quarter section to the said Charles N. Brewer; that on the same day (November 8, 1905), the said Charles N. Brewer conveyed to Phoebe Furman (formerly Brewer) the south half of said quarter section. It was, perhaps, to those conveyances that counsel for the plaintiff refer when they say in their brief that in the month of November, 1905, the youngest child arrived at the age of 21 years and that thereupon a division of the property was effected. The record, as it is presented before us, does not make a clear or satisfactory disclosure of what action was taken by the trustee in the final disposition of the portion of the estate subject to the trust provisions of the will. This, however, is not material to the decision of the question above considered, and our conclusion as to that question is, as must be manifest from the foregoing discussion, that the homestead challenged here was and is perfectly valid. Mrs. Furman, as seen, was at all times in exclusive occupation of the whole of the quarter section and living and paying the taxes thereon. It cannot be doubted that a party is entitled to protect by a homestead any interest he has in land which may be coveted by creditors, if no conditions exist which, under the statute, as construed by the courts, prevent the acquisition of a homestead right. See Kilmer v. Garlick, 185 Ill. 406, 56 N. E. 1103; Bailey v. Dunlap Mer. Co., 138 Ala. 415, 35 South. 451; Arendt v. Mace, 76 Cal. 317, 18 Pac. 376, 9 Am. St. Rep. 207; Orr v. Shraft, 22 Mich. 260. And it may be added that the effect of the homestead on the south half of the quarter section—the land in question here—was not destroyed because of the release of the homestead as to the part of the tract subject to the trust clause of the will. Dickey v. Gibson, 113 Cal. 26, 45 Pac. 15, 54 Am. St. Rep. 321; Estate of Fath, 132 Cal. 609, 64 Pac. 995; Aldrich v. Thurston, 71 Ill. 324.

[7] Another point is made by the appellant, and that is that the plaintiff is estopped from the maintenance of this action because he qualified as executor of the will of his deceased wife, Phoebe Furman. There is no merit in the point. Sulzberger v. Sulzberger, 50 Cal. 385, 387, 388; Estate of Firth, 145 Cal. 236, 239, 78 Pac. 643.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

SHIELDS v. RANCHO BUENA VENTURA.

(Civ. 2524.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 21, 1918. Hearing denied by Supreme Court Jan. 20, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃70(3)—WAGES—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—"PROCEEDS."

Under contract giving ranch manager certain compensation only if such amount could be made out of net proceeds, the term "proceeds" embraced, not only money received from actual sales of produce, but the increase in value of stock or produce.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Proceeds.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃80(6)—WAGES—ACTION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In ranch manager's action for compensation under contract making compensation for each year contingent on net proceeds of the particular year and requiring manager to render account for each year, burden was upon manager to show right to compensation for certain year by proof that net proceeds for the particular year entitled him thereto.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃80(10)—ACTION FOR WAGES—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In ranch manager's action for several years' compensation under contract making compensation for each year contingent upon net proceeds of particular year and requiring manager to render an account for each year, evidence of a net balance at end of several years of management, without showing of net proceeds of any particular year, was insufficient to support verdict for manager.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸80(6)—ADVANCEMENTS—ACTION FOR—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Ranch manager, suing for compensation and for money advanced in operation of ranch, has burden of showing specific payments made and facts upon which his right to reimbursement depends.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸80(10)—ACTION FOR ADVANCEMENTS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In such case evidence held insufficient to show manager entitled to reimbursement for money paid during year of sale, where such payments were not distinguished from payments during previous years.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by A. J. Shields against the Rancho Buena Ventura, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Short & Sutherland and Carl E. Lindsay, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Frank Kauke and George Cosgrave, both of Fresno, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover the sum of $7,988.48, alleged to be due him for labor and services and for money advanced, with some added interest. Four counts were set out in the complaint, the first being for services for which, with interest, the sum of $4,320.34 was claimed, and the second for the sum of $3,217.66 for money had and received. The aggregate of these two sums forms the total demand. The third count sets out a cause of action for the same aggregate amount, based upon allegations that the plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract, by which the plaintiff was employed to manage a large ranch owned by the defendant, and that while so employed there became due to him from the defendant a sum in excess of $4,000 as compensation for his services; that this sum was not paid to him, but that he allowed it to be retained by the defendant and invested in the business of the ranch, together with additional sums advanced by him, making up the aggregate of the first and second counts; and the fourth count represents the whole sum demanded as having been loaned to the defendant upon a promise to repay it with interest.

The cause was tried by a jury, and resulted in a verdict for the sum of $7,069.94. It is difficult to determine from the record just how this precise sum is arrived at, but respondent has assisted us in solving this problem, and states in his brief that it is made up as follows:

"His (plaintiff's) salary at the rate of $1,500 per annum, computed from January 1, 1910, to October, 1912, amounted to $4,250, and the money advanced and not repaid amounted to $3,000 additional, which with some other small items of account added, left a balance after sundry credits of $7,069.94."

Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff for this amount, and defendant appeals. The record discloses no motion for a new trial; and in support of the appeal the only point made is that the verdict and judgment are without any support whatever in the evidence, and defendant asks that the judgment be reversed, and that the trial court be ordered to enter judgment in its favor.

The record shows that the defendant was the owner of a stock ranch, consisting of between 2,000 and 3,000 acres, in Shasta county, known as the Rancho Buena Ventura, the operation of which constituted the sole business of the corporation. The entire capital stock of the company, outside of one or two qualifying shares, was owned by Frank H. Short, who was president of the corporation, A. J. Shields, the plaintiff—who was also its vice president—and one Hoxie. Shields, at the time this controversy arose, owned a little more than one-fourth of this capital stock, and of the remainder Short was the owner of the major part. For several years the ranch was managed by the plaintiff, the proceeds being devoted to its operating expenses, its further improvement, and in payment of the services of the plaintiff. In its undeveloped state the proceeds were insufficient to meet these expenses, and the deficit was contributed by these three stockholders, and additional capital stock issued to each in proportion to such contribution. Finally, this course of procedure not proving satisfactory, an agreement was entered into between the corporation and the plaintiff, by which the latter undertook to manage and operate the ranch at his own expense, with a contingent arrangement for his compensation. The condition of affairs which led to entering into this agreement is referred to in a letter written by Mr. Short to the plaintiff, in which he says:

"When you were down some months ago I mentioned that I thought it would be more satisfactory to all of us for it to be arranged that you should handle the ranch and personal property on some sort of annual leasing arrangement, in which we would be protected against taxes or expenses and possibly allowed some small return on the investment, and I thought with the ranch in its better developed state and with quite an acreage of producing alfalfa you ought to be able to handle it and make something out of it for yourself and keep us at least free from expenses."

This contract, while actually entered into on April 15, 1910, was to govern the relations of the parties from January 1st of the same year. The part of this agreement material to the questions here involved is as follows:

"Whereas the party of the second part [plaintiff] for several years past, as the representative of the party of the first part, has been in charge of the ranch and property of the party of the first part near Cottonwood, Shasta county, California, and whereas it is desired to enter into a definite arrangement with regard to the operation, use and management of said property, being said ranch and the improvements, stock and personal property thereon.

"Now therefore, this agreement witnesseth that the party of the second part agrees to take charge and management of said property on his own account and at his own expense, and from the date hereof to conduct and manage said property upon his own credit, account and expense, upon the following terms and conditions, to wit:

"The said party of the second part is to have charge and use of said ranch, together with the improvements and crops growing thereon, together with the horses, cattle, farming utensils and personal property thereon or used or connected therewith, and will manage and conduct said ranch in a thoroughly good and farmerlike manner, and take proper care of the trees, vines, alfalfa, and other crops growing thereon, and in proper season and in a good and farmerlike manner plant, cultivate, farm and look after said ranch and pasture or dispose of the pasture lands thereon for as good rental as can be obtained therefor * * * and in like manner carefully look after, care for and feed all of the stock upon the said premises and the increase thereof, and manage and care for all of the same in the best manner and to the best advantage possible, and harvest and dispose of all crops grown on said premises.

"The party of the second part is to keep full and correct books of account, showing all receipts and expenditures by him received, incurred or made in connection with said ranch, all business and the products thereof, and all of the same, and on the first day of January of each year the party of the second part will render a complete, full and correct statement of his accounts and transactions, receipts and expenditures as aforesaid, and shall pay and discharge at his own account and expense all of the expenses of conducting, farming and managing said ranch and property, and everything done or to be done under or in accordance with the terms of this lease, and will pay all taxes; * * * and the proceeds of said ranch shall be first applied upon and in or toward the satisfaction thereof, and after all of said charges and expenses are first paid, the second party shall have and receive for his use and benefit and as full compensation for his services, fifteen hundred dollars for each year, or a like amount for the fractional portion of any year during which he shall remain in possession and charge of said premises, and all of the rest, residue and remainder of said proceeds of said ranch in excess of the expenses thereof as aforesaid shall be paid over on or before the first day of January of each year by the party of the second part to the party of the first part.

"It is the understanding and intention that the household and living expenses of the second party and his family shall, as heretofore, be considered a part of the expenses of running and maintaining said ranch, and shall be charged and paid for out of the proceeds thereof as heretofore, but not otherwise; and it is the understanding and intention that in the event of a sale of said premises and property, or any substantial part of said real property by the party of the first part, that this agreement shall immediately cease and determine and be at an end, and the party of the second part shall be entitled to if necessary remain in possession of said premises so that he can receive the credits and income thereof for the year during which said sale occurs, or else the party of the second part shall be entitled to receive and shall receive fair and just compensation and allowance for expenses incurred in connection with the planting, care and cultivation of any crop or crops that have not been by him harvested and disposed of, so that upon such termination of said lease all rights and interests of the respective parties hereto shall be equitably and fairly settled."

The contract also contained a provision by which either party could terminate it by giving 30 days' notice preceding the first day of January of any year, and, if not sooner terminated, its duration was to be five years from January 1, 1910.

The plaintiff, by virtue of this contract, continued in the management and operation of the ranch until about the end of October, 1912, when the entire ranch and all personal property upon it, including farming implements, hay, and stock, were sold for the sum of $115,000. In the meantime, the annual account required by the contract had not been rendered in spite of frequent and urgent requests on the part of the company's president, and it was not until November, 1914, more than two years after the sale took place, that the plaintiff rendered an account. We set the account out in full. It is as follows:

[1-3] There can be no doubt that the plaintiff was required by his contract to render an account annually; and it is apparent that without this annual account there was no basis upon which a settlement could be arrived at between the parties. The plaintiff's compensation of $1,500 per annum was contingent upon this amount being earned by the operation of the ranch during the year. There is nothing in this account nor elsewhere in the record to show what the proceeds of the farming operations were for the year 1910. The same is true for the year 1911. The fact that the single account rendered purports to show a gain for the entire period covered by the plaintiff's operations under the contract affords no inference that there were any net proceeds for the year 1910, nor for the year 1911, out of which the plaintiff's compensation for those years could be paid. It is quite possible that for the year 1910 there were no net proceeds. If so, the plaintiff was not entitled to any compensation. And, of course, the same is true of the following year. We do not mean to intimate that the net proceeds referred to in the contract means actual cash arising from sales of produce of the ranch. We think a proper construction of this contract, having in mind the conditions under which it was entered into and its objects and purposes, would treat as proceeds, not only money received from actual sales of produce, but the increased value of stock or produce on hand at the end of a given year over the value of stock or produce on hand at the end of the preceding year; for it was the duty of the plaintiff, under his contract, to manage the business prudently and for the best interests of his employer, and it would not be to that interest that he should, in anticipation of the closing of the annual period, make hasty and ill-advised sales of produce merely for the purpose of having money on hand applicable to the payment of expenses and his own compensation; but, as we have said, there is nothing in the record to show what was the result of the plaintiff's operations for any year covered by the contract. It is quite possible, and indeed probable, that the facts existed entitling the plaintiff to some payment for the years 1910 and 1911; but, if so, the burden was upon him to show it. This was the view taken by the trial court. In its instructions to the jury the court advised that body that the plaintiff must recover, if at all, under and in accordance with the terms of the written agreement; that he was to present his accounts and settle annually with the defendant; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any part of the compensation of $1,500 per annum unless during said year he had received and obtained an amount in excess of the expenses of operating and conducting the ranch. The court also instructed the jury, and correctly, that the operation by the plaintiff of the ranch was as to each year a separate and distinct transaction, and not a continuous transaction for the entire period. The jury, in the condition of the evidence upon which the cause was submitted, had no means of knowing whether for the years 1910 and 1911 there was anything due from the defendant to the plaintiff under the terms of his contract. Its verdict, therefore, by which it awarded to him the sum of $125 per month for this period is against the evidence, and cannot stand.

[5] Coming now to the year 1912, the contract provided that in the event of a sale during any year the contract should immediately terminate, and the plaintiff should be "entitled if necessary to remain in possession of said premises so that he can receive the credits and income thereof for the year during which said sale occurs, or else, the said party of the second part shall be entitled to receive and shall receive fair and just compensation and allowance for expenses incurred in connection with the planting, care and cultivation of any crop or crops that have not been harvested or disposed of, so that upon such termination of such lease all rights and interests of the respective parties hereto shall be equitably and fairly settled." This clause of the contract, construed with relation to its object and purpose, required the parties to reach a settlement for the operations of the year 1912 upon an equitable basis. The record does not disclose that any effort to this end was made by the plaintiff, nor does it contain the facts upon which the court could arrive at an equitable adjustment. The plaintiff in his complaint treated this part of the period of his employment in the same way as the first two years, and asked to be allowed compensation at the same rate of $125 per month, and to be reimbursed his expenses without regard to any equitable considerations, such as the profit accruing to the defendant as the result of his labors. This part of the plaintiff's case seems to be in much the same situation as that already considered; he neglected to place in evidence the facts upon which his right to recovery depended.

The respondent, however, contends that his consent to the sale of the ranch was only given upon the condition that certain sums, amounting to about $3,000, claimed to have been paid out by him in the purchase of cattle for stocking the ranch, and therefore coming within the designation of expenses of conducting and operating it, should be paid to him. The evidence upon this point is that an offer of $115,000 (the sum for which it was ultimately sold) had been made for the ranch, including the whole amount of personal property used in connection with it and the live stock. This offer was at variance with that made by the company, which did not include certain live stock; and upon its receipt the president of the corporation sent the following telegram to the plaintiff:

"Moore is ready to close, but understood all personal property was included and went with ranch. I had supposed he had your list and understood that part of property only went with sale, but as he is ready to close and sale will be net to us, and others may fall down as heretofore, I prefer to close including all personal property. Either telegraph approval or come down without fail. Lease to be canceled but Moore wants to arrange for you to continue on ranch. Answer quick."

To this telegram the plaintiff replied as follows:

"Gave Avus typewritten list of all personal property ever offered for sale with ranch when he asked for an inventory of all personal property on ranch which I gave him, which I wrote you. The difference between the first and second inventory means about four thousand dollars to me personally and must be protected. That being understood, approve sale."

Mr. Short, the president, replied to this telegram, asking what the plaintiff meant by the expression "to me personally," to which the plaintiff sent the following reply:

"Four thousand dollars represents about what it will take for labor, taxes and a balance on some cattle I bought. This explains to you what personally to me means. Am in favor of sale."

The sale was thereupon closed at the figure of $115,000 for the entire property.

The contention of the plaintiff is that this exchange of telegrams, followed by the sale, constituted an undertaking by the defendant to reimburse to the plaintiff an amount approximating $4,000, including a sum undetermined, which the latter had paid out for cattle, which were included in the sale of the ranch. It is quite evident that the object which the plaintiff has in view in reserving part of the live stock from the sale was that it might be sold separately, and a fund thus created which would be in his control and which he could apply to the payment of expenses incurred by him, including the purchase of cattle, in the operation of the ranch. But such reimbursement could only be made in accordance with the terms of the contract; and to this reimbursement, according to those terms, the plaintiff was entitled, irrespective of whether the funds for that specific purpose passed through his hands or not. Whether the reserved live stock was sold separately or as a part of the entire ranch, they were still "proceeds" applicable to the payment of his demands. The value of this live stock was readily ascertainable; and its amount, deducted from the $115,000, was proceeds from the operation of the ranch out of which the plaintiff's expenses and outlays were payable, the balance of the $115,000 representing the price of the ranch itself. We may further observe as to this matter, without desiring to place much emphasis on what follows: First, that it is by no means clear that the consent of the plaintiff was necessary to effect the sale upon the terms proposed; second, that although the first telegram of the plaintiff above set out gives his consent to the sale conditionally, the second telegram ends with the words, "Am in favor of sale," without referring to the condition; and, third, testifying as to what these outlays were for which he was desirous of reserving the live stock in question from the sale, he stated:

"It was what I was personally responsible for anyhow, that I had given my collateral and so forth for when I bought the ranch. I owed those bills, and I was trying to provide a way, and I told you distinctly that if that was gone (referring to this live stock) then I had nothing to pay with. * * *"

But it appeared elsewhere in the testimony that capital stock in the company had been issued to the plaintiff for all claims existing up to January 1, 1910, a time long subsequent to the purchase of the ranch, and, if the plaintiff was still indebted to the persons from whom he bought this live stock for its price, that was no concern of the defendant, and the plaintiff would not have been entitled to pay this debt from the proceeds of the defendant's property. However, we think it better to place our decision as to this point upon the broad ground that the inclusion in the final sale of the live stock in question did not deprive the plaintiff of any rights which he possessed against the defendant. The live stock was the property of the defendant, although the money for its purchase might have been advanced by the plaintiff; and at the trial of this case it was not contended otherwise.

Considerable emphasis is laid by the respondent upon what he terms the lack of equity shown by the defendant in resisting his claim. A perusal of the record will show, however, that the plaintiff, if he had produced the evidence which was probably at his disposal, had no need to resort to any considerations of equity for a recovery, but could have stood upon his strict legal rights; and it will show that the equities were not all on his side, for the president of the company, Mr. Frank H. Short, for years attended to the business, financial and legal affairs of the corporation, including the time covered by the contract here under consideration, and was himself instrumental in procuring the sale of the ranch, all of which he did without any compensation whatever from the defendant. The record also shows that from the time when the first account of the plaintiff was due to the time it was actually rendered by him—a period of nearly three years—the president of the company continually urged upon the plaintiff the necessity of rendering his accounts. He neglected to do this without any excuse other than that he was busy with the affairs of the ranch. An ordinary compliance with simple business procedure, under a contract the terms of which are extremely simple and unambiguous, would have avoided all the trouble of this litigation, not only to himself but to others, who were in no way responsible for the plaintiff's delay and neglect.

We think it clear from the foregoing that as to none of the various amounts making up the verdict of the jury was there any evidence upon which it could be based. The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

38 Cal. App. 739

JORDAN v. SCOTT et al. (Civ. 2587.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Nov. 23, 1918.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸208(1) — SALE AND TRANSFER BY TENANT—RELEASE.

Sale and transfer of lease held by tenant, even with landlord's consent, does not release him from liability under lease covenants.

2. NOVATION ⟸7 — ASSENT OF THREE PARTIES.

There could be no novation between landlord, tenant, and tenant's assignees, in absence of assent of the three parties.

3. RELEASE ⟸13(2)—RELEASE OF TENANT—ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE—"CONSIDERATION."

Where tenant, two months after he had assigned, gave landlord instrument of assignment to assignees in consideration of parol agreement by landlord to release him from liability for rent, tenant was not released, under Civ. Code, § 1541; there having been no new "consideration" for landlord's parol agreement as defined by section 1605, but mere performance of a legal obligation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Consideration.]

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸79(1) — TRANSFER OF ENTIRE TERM BY TENANT—"ASSIGNMENT."

Where tenant transfers entire interest in either whole or part of demised premises, legal effect is "assignment" and not subletting, by whatever kind of instrument or conveyance term is disposed of.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Assignment.]

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸208(4) — ASSIGNMENT OF TERM—LIABILITY BY PRIVITY OF ESTATE.

Where tenant demised portion of leased premises for term one day longer than his own, legal effect being assignment, and assignee sold to one who went into possession, latter became liable by privity of estate to pay landlord share of rental reserved in lease in proportion with part of premises occupied.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by C. E. Jordan against F. T. Scott and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

George H. Woodruff and Clyde C. Shoemaker, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eugene A. Tucker and Harriman & Ryckman, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action to recover rent due and unpaid under a written lease of a certain storeroom in the city of Los Angeles. On December 1, 1911, plaintiff's assignor, Marsh, leased the premises in question to defendant Scott for a term which, as extended by a supplemental agreement in writing, expired January 31, 1915, and Scott entered into possession thereunder. November 30, 1912, Scott, by a written agreement which was in form and terms a sublease, but which plaintiff contends was in legal effect a pro tanto assignment, demised a specified portion of the leased premises to one Ostrow for a term one day longer than his own term, to wit, until February 1, 1915, and Ostrow entered into possession of that portion of the premises.

On January 1, 1913, Scott sold, assigned, and delivered to Gaudreau & Wilson his lease from Marsh and his lease or contract with Ostrow, and Gaudreau & Wilson thereupon entered into possession. On March 19, 1913, Ostrow sold and assigned to defendant Tuck her sublease or agreement for a specified part of the premises, and Tuck entered into possession thereof.

No part of the rent was paid to plaintiff or his assignor subsequent to June, 1913, but defendant Tuck paid in full the rent reserved under his contract for a portion of the premises so long as he continued in possession thereof, to defendant Gaudreau. This was paid at the rate of $55 per month, which plaintiff alleged and produced evidence to prove was the proportionate share of the rent of the whole premises chargeable to the portion thereof occupied by Tuck. The foregoing facts were all found by the court, except that it made no finding as to the proportionate rental value of the premises occupied by Tuck. The court held that Tuck's contract was a sublease and that he was therefore not liable to the plaintiff.

[1] As to the defendant Scott, the court found that on March 1, 1913, two months after he had sold and delivered his lease-hold interest to Gaudreau & Wilson, the landlord, Marsh, released him from the covenants of his lease by an agreement made at that time. The sole question in this connection is whether or not the finding is supported by the evidence. It is well settled that a sale and transfer of his leasehold by a tenant, even with the consent of the landlord, does not have the effect of releasing him from his liability under the covenants of the lease. Bonetti v. Treat, 91 Cal. 223, 27 Pac. 612, 14 L. R. A. 151; Brosnan v. Kramer, 135 Cal. 36, 66 Pac. 979; Schehr v. Berkey, 166 Cal. 157, 135 Pac. 41; Henne v. Summers, 23 Cal. App. 763, 139 Pac. 907.

[2] The court further found that thereafter Marsh recognized and accepted Gaudreau & Wilson as his tenants, received and collected rents from them, and at no time thereafter recognized Scott as a tenant, or demanded rent from him, prior to the bringing of this suit. But no claim is here made of a novation, and there could be none, because the assent of three parties is requisite to such a contract and there is no evidence of such assent on the part of Gaudreau & Wilson.

The substance of the testimony of defendant Scott in support of the finding of a release (reduced to narrative form) is as follows:

"I had a talk with Marsh in March, 1913. He said he wanted me to make the transfer over to the other parties, the parties in possession, and I agreed to do it. He said at the present time he was not situated to collect the rents from them, and they would like to have the matter fixed up so they could recognize the other parties and accept their rents. And he said that he would give me a release from the original lease that I held, had held, and he brought out papers, and I signed them and gave them back to Mr. Marsh. He said that if I signed those papers I would be absolutely released from the payment of any other moneys."

The paper which he then signed was as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., 3/1, 1913.

"In consideration of one dollar, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, I hereby transfer, assign and set over unto Gaudreau & Wilson all my right, title and interest in the within lease, subject to all its terms and conditions. This transfer does not consent to any further transfers of the within lease. F. T. Scott."

[3] This testimony was corroborated by another witness and denied by Marsh; but it was, of course, amply sufficient to support the finding, if such a parol agreement under those circumstances could have the legal effect of a valid release. Section 1541 of the Civil Code provides:

"An obligation is extinguished by a release therefrom given to the debtor by the creditor, upon a new consideration, or in writing, with or without new consideration."

Here there was no release in writing, and it remains only to consider whether there was "a new consideration."

Consideration is defined by Civil Code, § 1605, as follows:

"Any benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor, is a good consideration for a promise."

As was well said by the Supreme Court of New Jersey in Conover v. Stillwell, 34 N. J. Law, 54, at page 57:

"It must be either such as deprived the person to whom the promise was made of a right which he before possessed, or else conferred upon the other party a benefit which he could not otherwise have had. Thus, part payment of a debt overdue is not a valid consideration for an agreement to postpone or discharge the payment of the residue (citing cases). So a promise to pay increased compensation for services which the party was under a prior legal obligation to render is not valid" (citing cases).

Was Scott deprived of any right, or did he suffer or agree to suffer any prejudice on this occasion? We think not. The only thing he did or promised to do was to sign the written assignment of lease to Gaudreau & Wilson. He had already, two months previously, sold, assigned, and delivered said lease to them, and they had entered into possession thereunder. The sale and delivery of the lease transferred all his interest, and left nothing remaining in him thereafter to be transferred. If further paper evidence of the transfer was of any value, it was his duty to furnish it.

A similar question arose in the case of Sullivan v. Sullivan, 99 Cal. 187, 33 Pac. 862. Michael Sullivan had died owing $854 to the estate of his deceased brother John. He left a policy of life insurance payable to his widow, Margaret, the policy being among the papers of John's estate in the possession of his executor. It was necessary for Margaret to obtain the policy in order to collect thereon. She entered into a written contract with the executor whereby he agreed to search for, find and deliver the policy, in consideration of which she agreed to pay the $854 out of the proceeds thereof. He performed the contract on his part, and she, after collecting the money, refused to pay, whereupon he sued on the contract and recovered judgment. The Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment for lack of consideration to support the contract, said:

"It is well settled that neither a promise to perform a duty, nor the performance of a duty, constitutes a consideration of a contract."

In Estate of Casner, 1 Cal. App. 145, 81 Pac. 991, Jane Casner had conveyed certain property to her daughter and son-in-law upon their agreement to support her during her natural life. Thereafter she assigned certain other property to them upon the same consideration. This court, in holding the latter assignment void for want of a consideration, said:

"Support which they were already bound to give her could hardly form a consideration for the further assignment of property by Jane Casner to the appellants."

So, too, in Heim v. Butin, 109 Cal. 500, 42 Pac. 138, 50 Am. St. Rep. 54, where the mortgagee in foreclosing a mortgage agreed with the mortgagor that, if the latter would suffer his default to be taken and would not bid at the sale, he would not take a deficiency judgment, and, the mortgagor having defaulted and remained away from the sale, the mortgagee, in violation of the agreement, procured a deficiency judgment against him, the Supreme Court held the agreement void for want of consideration because the mortgagor had no defense to the action, and therefore suffered no prejudice because of the default.

Applying the doctrine of these decisions to the facts here, it is apparent that Scott suffered no prejudice by reason of signing and delivering the written assignment. It remains only to consider whether or not any benefit was conferred on Marsh thereby.

It is apparent that Marsh acquired no right thereby which he did not already possess. The written assignment conferred upon him no right of action as against either Gaudreau or Scott. His right to recover the rents from Gaudreau grew out of the latter's occupancy of the premises by reason of privity of estate. Bonetti v. Treat, supra; Baker v. Maier, 140 Cal. 530, 74 Pac. 22. No privity of contract between Marsh and Gaudreau could be created by the act of Scott. As this court said, with respect to a somewhat similar situation, in Lutton v. Rau, 173 Pac. 1111:

"We do not think that * * * the production of such an assignment would aid the plaintiff in making out his claim against the defendant for rent which accrued subsequent to the date of the transfer of possession of the premises from respondent to the last holder."

We conclude that the release in question, being neither in writing nor upon a new consideration, was of no legal effect, and that the finding of the trial court upon this point is therefore contrary to the evidence.

[4, 5] As between appellant and the defendant Tuck, the correctness of the judgment depends upon the single question whether or not the contract between their respective assignors was a sublease or an assignment of the term as to a portion of the premises demised. If it was the former, the judgment is correct; if it was the latter, it was erroneous. As stated above, the instrument purported to be and in form and terms was a sublease, but it was for a term one day longer than that demised by the principal lease.

Questions similar to this have frequently arisen in the courts, and there is an apparent conflict in the decisions which can be in the main resolved by separating those cases wherein the controversy arose between the original tenant and his lessee or assignee from those wherein the controversy was between the original landlord and the lessee or assignee of his tenant. In the latter class of cases (and the case at bar comes within that class) the clear preponderance of authority is to the effect that where a tenant transfers his entire interest in either the whole or a part of the demised premises, the legal effect thereof is an assignment and not a subletting, and that it is immaterial by what kind of an instrument or conveyance the term is so disposed of. 24 Cyc. 972 to 976, and cases cited; 18 A. & E. Encyc. of Law (2d Ed.) 656, 657, and cases cited; 1 Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 151; Wood on Landlord and Tenant, § 69; Smiley v. Van Winkle, 6 Cal. 605; Jeffers v. Easton, Eldridge & Co., 113 Cal. 345, 352, 45 Pac. 680.

The legal effect of the contract between Scott and Ostrow was to create an assignment of the term with respect to that portion of the premises described therein. Defendant Tuck, having entered into possession thereunder, thereby became liable by privity of estate to pay to the lessor Marsh a proportionate share of the rental reserved in the lease. 24 Cyc. 1180; Taylor on Landlord and Tenant, § 443; Wood on Landlord and Tenant, § 311; Ellis v. Bradbury, 75 Cal. 234, 17 Pac. 3. It is obvious that this liability could not be discharged by the payment of rent to Gaudreau, who is not claimed to have been an agent for Marsh.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

CHRISTIE v. McCALL. (Civ. 2233.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, California. Dec. 12, 1917. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(1)—COLLISION ON STREET—PLEADING.

Allegation that defendant neglected and omitted to operate his automobile, so as to prevent it from running into plaintiff and injuring him, was sufficient as against a demurrer.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1040(10)—HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADING.

In action by bicyclist for injuries in a collision with defendant's automobile, overruling a demurrer to complaint on ground of uncertainty, in that it could not be told whether defendant was charged with exceeding rate of speed prescribed for one approaching a sharp curve or that applying to a crossing of intersecting street, was not prejudicial, where case went to trial and facts were all fully developed.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5)—COLLISIONS—NEGLIGENCE.

In an action by a bicyclist for injury in a collision with defendant's automobile, evidence held to sustain a finding that defendant was negligent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; George D. Murray, Judge.

Action by Melville Christie against W. E. McCall. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Pierce H. Ryan, of Eureka, for appellant.
Coonan & Kehoe, of Eureka, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision between the defendant's automobile and the plaintiff upon his bicycle, alleged to have occurred through the negligence of the defendant in the operation of his vehicle.

[1] The first point made by the defendant for a reversal of the judgment is that the court erred in overruling his demurrer to the complaint. The complaint is in two counts, the first of which is attacked on the general ground of lack of facts, and further on the grounds of ambiguity and uncertainty in its failure to specify the particular acts constituting the negligence complained of. In this behalf this count of the complaint merely in effect alleges that the defendant neglected and omitted to operate his automobile so as to prevent it from running into the plaintiff and injuring him. Under the authorities in this state, this is a sufficient allegation of negligence, for they hold that it is sufficient to charge negligence by a general averment that the defendant negligently did the particular act which resulted in the damage to plaintiff. Rathbun v. White, 157 Cal. 248, 254, 107 Pac. 309; Arbunich v. U. R., 28 Cal. App. 291, 152 Pac. 51; Smith v. Buttner, 90 Cal. 95, 99, 27 Pac. 29; Stein v. U. R., 159 Cal. 368, 113 Pac. 663.

[2] A demurrer on the same grounds is entered against the second count of the complaint. This count includes all of the allegations contained in the first count, and an additional allegation that the defendant was turning at the intersection of two streets at a greater rate of speed than one mile in four minutes. This is the rate of speed prescribed by the Motor Vehicle Act for observance by the driver of an automobile when approaching a sharp curve, while when traversing intersecting streets no specific limit of speed is prescribed, but the driver is held down to that rate "which is reasonable and proper having regard to the traffic then on such highway and the safety of the public." As it also appears from this count of the complaint that the accident occurred at the intersection of two streets, the uncertainty and ambiguity aimed at by the special demurrer is as to whether the complaint is charging the defendant with exceeding the rate of speed prescribed for one approaching a sharp curve, or that applying to the crossing of intersecting streets. But since the case went to trial and the facts were all fully developed, we think this case falls within the rule followed in the case of Stein v. U. R., supra, where, in dealing with the same question, namely, whether it was error to overrule a demurrer for uncertainty, the Supreme Court said:

"Even if it were error * * * to overrule the demurrer for uncertainty, it was error without prejudice unless the demurring party was misled by defects in the pleadings and the case was not fairly tried on the merits. Here it appears that the issues were fully, fairly, and understandingly tried."

[3] The main contention of the appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury. The facts are briefly as follows: In the city of Eureka, C street runs north and south, and Cedar street runs east and west, intersecting C street but terminating on the east side thereof. On the day of the accident, plaintiff was riding a bicycle southerly along the westerly (right) side of C street, and when he came to the northerly line of Cedar street he deflected his course so as to proceed diagonally in a southwesterly direction in order to reach the sidewalk at the southwest corner of C and Cedar streets. As he neared this corner, the defendant was on Cedar street approaching C street from the west, and was about half a block away, and being late for an engagement was driving "pretty fast." When the plaintiff, propelling his bicycle at a slow rate of speed, had reached a point three or four feet from the curb at the corner indicated, the defendant, without reducing the speed of his car, in attempting to turn said corner, collided with plaintiff's bicycle, and plaintiff sustained the injuries for which he recovered in this action. From the force of the blow plaintiff was rendered unconscious, and was unable later when testifying as a witness to say that he had looked down Cedar street to learn whether or not he could cross the intersection of said streets in safety before attempting to do so; but from the testimony of a disinterested witness, who was near the scene of the collision at the time of its occurrence, it appears that immediately before it happened the plaintiff recognized and bowed to her, and in doing so was looking in the general direction from which defendant was approaching, and doubtless saw him, and must have believed that he would so operate the car as to avoid colliding with him. The defendant's view of the plaintiff was unobstructed, and there is no good reason why he should not have done so. In fact, the defendant admitted that he saw the plaintiff in plain view before the accident, but said that he was late for an engagement and was hurrying to keep it. He did not sound his horn or give any other warning of his hurried approach, and there is some intimation in the record that he became excited and lost control of his machine. If plaintiff saw the defendant approaching, he evidently believed that if he intended to turn into Cedar street and proceed southerly he would so operate his car as to avoid running into him. In any event, we think the evidence was sufficient to leave it to the jury to say if the collision was caused by the negligence of the defendant, and, they having so determined, we will not interfere with their conclusion.

RICHMOND WHARF & DOCK CO. v. BLAKE. (Civ. 2515.)

1. DAMAGES ⟸120(3)—BREACH OF CONTRACT—CONTRACT TO FILL IN LAND.

In action for breach of contract to build sea wall around submerged land and fill it in, measure of damages is difference between contract price and reasonable cost to owner of having work completed.

2. DAMAGES ⟸175—BREACH OF CONTRACT—EVIDENCE.

In action for breach of contract to build sea wall around submerged land and fill it in, consideration to be paid defendant contractor having been one-half of land after it was filled, evidence should have been admitted showing value of such full consideration, so that such sum could be deducted from cost of work to reach measure of damages.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸93(1)—VESTED RIGHTS—PATENT TO SUBMERGED LANDS.

Title of patentee of submerged land from tideland commissioners under legislative authority was vested right which could not be divested by subsequent legislative act, conveying land to city and giving it power to prosecute actions for recovery of possession from private owners.

4. CONTRACTS ⟸328(1)—ACTION FOR BREACH—DEFENSE—IMMATERIAL MATTER.

Where patentee of submerged lands contracted to have sea wall built and filling in done, which should have been completed under the contract in 1911, contractor could not defend action for breach by patentee's assignee on any ground that in 1913 state, by statute, divested patentee's title, so that he could not convey half the land in payment.

Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff, who is the assignee of the rights of one A. S. Macdonald against the defendant herein.

In 1906 Macdonald was the owner of certain submerged land in the city of Richmond, which land is known as "Tide Lot No. 16," and lies under the waters of the Bay of San Francisco. The outer boundary line of said land runs about along the line of what is known as the bulkhead harbor line in the Bay of San Francisco as established by the United States government. The defendant was at that time the owner of the uplands lot lying back of Macdonald's land. Macdonald and the defendant entered into a contract under which the defendant was to do certain work, such as building a sea wall around and filling in the land owned by Macdonald, and when such work was completed Macdonald was to convey to the defendant an undivided one-half interest in said land. Five years' time was given to complete the work, and time was made of the essence of the contract. The defendant failed to complete the work; Macdonald assigned his rights to plaintiff, who sues for damages for breach of contract.

The chief point made by appellant is that the court erred in excluding evidence as to what would have been the value of the land if it had been filled and walled, because such value of one-half of the land was the consideration moving to defendant for the work to be done upon the land, and defendant should be credited with such amount when he is charged with the cost of doing the work which he contracted to do.

[1] The measure of damages upon a breach of a contract like the one under consideration is the difference between the price at which the contractor agreed to do the work and the reasonable cost to the owner of the property of having such work completed.

[2] Evidence was admitted showing the reasonable cost of doing the work as contracted for. The consideration to be paid defendant was one-half of the land after it was filled. He was to receive not unfilled land and be credited with the cost of filling the same, but he was to receive filled land and to receive the benefit, if any, of having such filled land contiguous to other filled land, the property of the plaintiff. To every part of this consideration, or its money equivalent, he was entitled, having in theory performed his contract by paying the plaintiff in damages the amount necessary to perform it. We think evidence should have been admitted showing the value of this full consideration to be paid, so that such sum could be deducted from the cost of doing the work.

The method employed by the trial court in measuring the damages is not the same in theory, and may or may not be the same in practice. It may be that if evidence of the value of the filled land had been considered by the court, it might have found that the plaintiff was not damaged, and was entitled merely to nominal damages. The contract specially provided that after the work on the land was completed, and not before, then the plaintiff should convey to the defendant a one-half interest in the filled and walled land. The plaintiff should have recovered the exact amount necessary to do the work contracted for, which is virtually a fulfillment of the contract by the defendant, and thereupon the defendant should receive what he was to receive for such fulfillment of the contract, or its equivalent in money value, in the way of a set-off. The contract provided that the defendant was to receive one-half of the land after it had been filled. Therefore evidence as to the value of one-half of the land if filled was improperly excluded, and the judgment will have to be reversed on that ground.

The defendant in his answer, after denying the allegations of the complaint, set up as a separate defense that the plaintiff did not have title to the land involved in the contract, and could not have performed his part of the contract by conveying to defendant an undivided one-half interest in fee, and that the contract was void as against public policy, as it was a contract to trespass upon lands held in trust by the state for all its citizens.

Defendant bases his argument upon the act of the Legislature of June 11, 1913 (St. 1913, p. 605), which conveyed the land in question, among others, to the city of Richmond, and gave the city power to prosecute all actions for the recovery of possession of the same from private owners. This act recited that all tidelands were held in trust by the state for the benefit of its inhabitants for the purposes of navigation, commerce, and fishing, and that the state has not the general power of alienation of such lands, but may, when the interests of commerce, navigation, and fishing require it, convey to municipalities limited and defined areas of such lands, with the power to govern, control, improve, and develop the same in the interest of all the inhabitants of the state. The plaintiff held his title through mesne conveyances, by virtue of a deed from the tideland commissioners.

[3, 4] Prior to the passage of the act of 1913, a patent by the tideland commissioners, issued under the same legislative acts under which the patent here was issued, and by the same board of tideland commissioners, was upheld in the case of Knudson v. Kearney, 171 Cal. 250, 152 Pac. 541. In that case the court discussed the matter fully, and pointed out that the acts under which the patent was issued provided that the boundaries of navigable waters should be fixed, and the water front line delineated, and, in effect, that the land not required for docks, piers, slips, or other purposes should be subject to sale outright. Under this, and the other decisions referred to in this case, we think the title to this property was a vested right in the plaintiff, and could not be divested by this subsequent legislative act. But even conceding that such title could be divested, defendant would be in no better position in regard to his contention, for, as stated in the brief of respondent, if the contract had been fulfilled by the defendant, the work would have been completed in 1911, and the plaintiff would have been bound to convey the one-half interest in this land at that time. That was two years before the act relied upon by appellant was passed. The defendant would therefore have gotten his title free from any cloud created by this act, and if later a cloud was cast upon the title to his property, that would be his misfortune, and would be a matter in which the plaintiff would have no concern, having conveyed the title free and clear of all incumbrances at the time the conveyance was due. We, therefore, think that the demurrer to the separate defense was properly sustained.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

TISDALE v. BRYANT et al. (Civ. 1892.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 23, 1918. Rehearing Denied Dec. 23, 1918.)

1. CONTRACTS ⟸95(1)—DURESS.

An agreement between plaintiff and defendants, whereby the latter were to join in a partition of lands, to refrain from questioning the validity of a certain deed, and to pay a certain indebtedness, was not void for duress merely because defendants were financially embarrassed and plaintiff took advantage of their necessity for the lawful purpose of obtaining a promise to pay a debt which they actually owed.

2. CONTRACTS ⟸95(1)—DURESS.

An agreement, whereby defendants were to assume and pay a certain obligation from which plaintiff had promised to release them, was not procured by duress on his part merely because he had refused to execute the release, leaving defendants the alternative of enforcing the promise or executing the agreement, which they were forced to do by reason of financial embarrassment.

3. DEEDS ⟸17(1)—CONSIDERATION—SUFFICIENCY.

A promise in good faith by grantee to pay one-half the upkeep of the property, contribute a certain sum to his parents, and to send one of grantor's sons to school, take him into partnership after graduation, and to leave him the practice on retirement, constituted a sufficient consideration for the deed.

4. DEEDS ⟸70(1)—FRAUD—FAILURE TO PERFORM CONSIDERATION FOR CONVEYANCE.

A mere failure to perform an agreement which constitutes the consideration for a deed does not amount to fraud, although it may form the basis for an action for breach of contract.

5. CONTRACTS ⟸277(1)—PERFORMANCE—NECESSITY OF DEMAND—TIME FOR DEMAND.

Where no term is specified for the doing of an act other than the payment of money, a demand of performance made within a reasonable time is necessary in order to put the promisee in default.

6. CANCELLATION OF INSTRUMENTS ⟸34(1)—CONSIDERATION—PERFORMANCE—LACHES.

Where land was conveyed in consideration of the purchaser's promise to keep up the property and to do certain other things, but no demand was made for performance for more than 10 years after execution, and action to set aside the deed was not instituted until nearly four years thereafter, the right to set the deed aside was barred by laches; no excuse being shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kings County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by Lieuella Tisdale against Melodile Bryant, Calhoun Bryant, and others, with cross-complaint by the named defendants. From a judgment for plaintiff, the named defendants alone appeal. Affirmed.

Kottinger & Shepardson, of Oakland, for appellants.

Jordan & Brann, of San Francisco, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was for the partition of some 480 acres of land in Kings county, it being alleged in the complaint that the plaintiff and the defendant Melodile Bryant each owned an undivided one-half interest in the land. The other defendants had liens on the property, and they made no contest; but appellants in their answer denied that respondent had any interest whatever in the land, and they claimed that Melodile Bryant was the sole owner thereof. They also filed a cross-complaint, seeking thereby to set aside a certain agreement, attached to their pleading and marked "Exhibit B," of the date of September 1, 1915, executed by them on the one part, and by respondent and Edgar R. Bryant, now deceased, on the other. Their attack upon the agreement is based upon the claim that said respondent and Edgar R. Bryant coerced them into signing said agreement, by taking advantage of their financial necessities and embarrassment in connection with securing the money with which to pay off a $3,500 mortgage on appellants' $80,000 Modesto ranch, which mortgage was about to become due and could not be renewed. They sought also to have a deed executed by appellants to Edgar R. Bryant, the predecessor in interest of respondent, on the 5th day of July, 1901, set aside on the ground of fraud in procuring the same.

In addition, they brought an independent suit to accomplish the same purpose, alleging in their complaint substantially the same facts as appear in the cross-complaint herein. It is admitted that these two pleadings involve the same legal principles and the decision as to one will cover and determine the other.

[1] In this agreement of September 1, 1915, appellants promised "to join in an equal division of the lands" involved in the partition suit and "never again to question the validity of the deed executed by Melodile Bryant and Calhoun Bryant to Edgar R. Bryant on the 5th day of July, 1901." The particular feature of this agreement, however, concerning which appellants complain and on account of which they asked to have the agreement set aside, was the promise therein contained on their part "to assume to pay certain indebtedness and evidences of indebtedness, amounting to the sum of about $4,300, growing out of the affairs of the Bryant Investment Company, and plaintiff's management thereof, and other matters from which said Calhoun Bryant and Melodile Bryant were to have been released from paying." The claim seems to be that the invalidity of this covenant vitiates the whole agreement, as the former is an inseparable part of the contract, and the said promise to pay the indebtedness is sought to be nullified for the reason already stated. But under the authorities, it is plain that the facts alleged do not amount to duress or coercion and compulsion as recognized by the law, and, for this reason that it appears the advantage, if any, was taken of appellants' necessities for the legitimate and lawful purpose of obtaining from them a promise to pay a debt which they actually owed. The authorities on this point are cited in the brief of respondent, to which appellants have made no reply, and they seem decisive of the question.

Cable v. Foley, 45 Minn. 421, 47 N. W. 1135, was a case where, plaintiff being without means to pay his men, defendants refused to pay him what they then owed him, unless he would sign three written contracts unfavorable to him. He signed them and afterward sued the defendants to recover the excess he would have been entitled to if he had not been so coerced into said settlement. The trial court directed a verdict for the defendants, and in sustaining its action the Supreme Court said:

"The mere threat to withhold from a party a legal right which he has an adequate remedy to enforce is not, in the eye of the law, duress; certainly not such as will avoid the execution of a contract."

In Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511, the defendants, being indebted to the plaintiff in a large amount on a logging contract and taking advantage of the fact that plaintiff was in great need of money with which to pay his woodsmen, who were cutting logs for plaintiff, refused to pay him what was due him unless he would take $2,000 less than what he was entitled to and receipt in full for all claims against the defendants. Plaintiff took the lesser sum and gave the defendants a receipt in full and subsequently sued them for the $2,000, relying upon duress to avoid the contract.

Judge Cooley, speaking for the court, said:

"In what did the alleged duress consist in the present case? Merely in this: That the debtors refused to pay on demand a debt already due, though the plaintiff was in great need of the money and might be financially ruined in case he failed to obtained it. It is not pretended that Hackley & McGordon had done anything to bring Headley to the condition which made this money so important to him at this very time, or that they were in any manner responsible for his pecuniary embarrassment except as they failed to pay the demand. The duress, then, is to be found exclusively in their failure to meet promptly their pecuniary obligation."

It was held that it would be "a dangerous, as well as a most unequal, doctrine" to enunciate that the contract was invalid because of the financial necessities of the plaintiff.

In Silliman v. United States, 101 U. S. 465, 25 L. Ed. 987, the owners of certain barges, which were employed by the quartermaster's department, claimed that they were forced by duress of their property to sign new charter parties at a reduced rate, but it was held:

"That neither the forcible retention of the barges nor the refusal to pay the compensation agreed upon constituted duress."

The court declared:

"We are aware of no authority in the textbooks or in the adjudged cases to justify us in holding that the last charter parties were exacted under duress."

Fuller v. Roberts, 35 Fla. 110, 17 South. 359, involved the foreclosure of a mortgage to secure the payment of a note for $1,000. The defense was based upon duress, it being the claim that the note and mortgage were given to secure the dismissal of certain proceedings begun by the plaintiff. The lower court sustained a demurrer to the defense, and in upholding this ruling the Supreme Court of Florida said:

"Legal duress implies that a party has been unlawfully constrained by another to perform an act under circumstances which prevent the exercise of free will. The act of the party compelling the unwilling obedience of another must be unlawful or wrongful, and there can be no duress of goods in law where the act done or threatened is nothing more than what the party had a legal right to do"—citing cases.

In Morton v. Morris, 72 Fed. 392, 18 C. C. A. 611, the plaintiff brought an action to foreclose two certain mortgages executed by the defendant in settlement of their business affairs. The defense was that the mortgages were obtained by plaintiff through duress, in this, that when the settlement was made a financial crisis existed; defendant was exclusively engaged in business; it was very hard to raise money and plaintiff threatened to sue defendant for an accounting and to have a receiver appointed. This would ruin defendant, and to prevent plaintiff from carrying out his threat defendant gave the mortgages in question for an amount largely in excess of what he actually owed defendant. The United States District Court held that the facts averred were not sufficient to avoid the mortgages, and this judgment was upheld by the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. Therein it was said:

"The intent which actuates a creditor in seeking to enforce a legal claim or demand is ordinarily of no concern to the debtor, and is not a matter for judicial inquiry. The latter is only entitled to complain when some act is done or threatened by the creditor which is, in itself, unlawful, or is contrary to equity. In the present case the acts charged in the answer as the basis for relief consisted in a demand made by the plaintiff for an accounting and settlement when the defendant was in embarrassed circumstances, and in a threat to enforce such demand by a civil action. Neither of these acts was unlawful, or so far harsh, oppressive, or unconscionable as to vitiate the settlement subsequently made."

A peculiarly hard case was Domenica et al. v. Alaska Packers' Association (D. C.) 112 Fed. 554, involving the employment of plaintiffs as seamen on a voyage to and from the salmon fishing grounds in Alaska; also to work as fishermen during the season; to assist in canning the fish on shore and loading them on the ships for transportation. After arriving in Alaska, they refused to carry out their contracts unless their wages were increased $50 apiece. Defendants' superintendent agreed to pay this additional compensation, because he could not get other men to take their places and great loss would be suffered, because of the shortness of the season, if plaintiffs did not go to work catching and canning fish at once. Defendants in settling with plaintiffs refused to pay them the additional $50 compensation, and in allowing them to recover it the court said:

"In the case at bar, if the parties deemed it for their mutual interest so to do, it was competent for them to enter into the new contract sued on, and when they did this there was an implied discharge of the former contract, and the new became the measure of their rights, unless the consent of the defendant thereto was obtained by duress; and the facts appearing here do not show that the defendant acted under duress, in making that contract"—citing Goebel v. Linn, 47 Mich. 489, 11 N. W. 284, 41 Am. Rep. 723, and Hackley v. Headley, 45 Mich. 569, 8 N. W. 511.

In Taylor v. Ford, 131 Cal. 440, 63 Pac. 770, plaintiff brought suit to cancel a note for $8,666.44 on which he had paid the defendant $6,000, alleging that—"He was coerced into signing the note by threats of the defendant to sell his partnership in a lumber business in which they were associated 'to an entire stranger.'"

The court declared:

"The only coercion claimed by the plaintiff is that he was forced to enter into the contract and give the note in question by reason of defendant's threats to sell out to a stranger, in violation of his contract for a five years' partnership. That would not amount to coercion in law."

[2] It can make no possible difference if we regard the allegation of cross-complainants that respondent and the said Edgar R. Bryant had promised to execute a release of appellants from the obligation to pay said sum of $4,300. The violation of said promise would not constitute coercion in any sense. 9 Cyc. p. 448. Appellants had their choice of standing upon said promise or executing the agreement of September 1st. They chose the latter alternative and must abide by it. It is equally plain that said cross-complaint does not present a case of fraud or undue influence. It follows that by virtue of said agreement, Exhibit B, appellants were estopped from questioning the ownership of respondent in and to one-half of said real estate.

[3] But, assuming that the allegations of said cross-complaint are such as to warrant the annulment of said agreement of September 1st, and treating the situation as though said agreement was invalid, we are still confronted with the said deed of July 5, 1901, which conveyed to plaintiff's predecessor in interest the legal title to one-half of said property. It was sought, however, in the cross-complaint herein, and in the complaint in the other action to which we have referred, to have the deed set aside on the ground of fraud. It is quite plain, though, that as to this point the pleadings of appellants are radically defective. While there is an allegation that the grantor never received any adequate or valuable consideration for executing said deed, it does appear that she delivered said deed to Edgar R. Bryant upon his promises to pay one-half of the upkeep of the entire property, contribute $10 per month to the support of his parents, then living with appellants, and would prepare one of the grantor's sons for entry into a first-class medical school, thereafter at his own expense send said son to a medical school until he graduated, then associate said son with him in his practice, and, when he retired from practice, turn it over to the son, the latter to take care of his mother's failing eyesight, and the grantee further promised to reconvey the property to appellants before he should die. Of course, these promises constitute a sufficient consideration for the execution of the deed, and, it may be added, there is nothing in the pleadings to show that the promises were not made in good faith with the full intention to perform them. In fact, there is no hint of the perpetration of any fraud in the procurement of the deed. If it had been alleged that these promises were made for the purpose of deceiving the grantor and that the grantee had no intention of performing them, a different situation might be presented.

[4] Appellants, however, seek to set aside said deed solely upon the ground that the grantee failed to perform some of his promises. A mere failure to perform an agreement, which constitutes the consideration for a deed, does not amount to fraud, but it may be ground for an action for damages for breach of the contract.

Moreover, we agree with respondent that the laches of appellants afford an additional support for the conclusion of the lower court. It appears that no demand was made on Edgar R. Bryant to educate the son of appellants until April 19, 1912, more than 10 years after the promise to do so is alleged, and no excuse is shown for the delay; and this action to set aside the deed was not instituted until April 19, 1916, nearly 15 years after the deed was executed.

[5] The rule seems to be that where no term is specified for the doing of an act, other than the payment of money, that a demand of performance is necessary in order to put the promisee in default. Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) vol. 9, p. 200.

"The primary object of a demand is to enable defendant to perform his obligation or otherwise discharge his liability without being subject to the inconvenience and expense of litigation." 1 Corpus Juris, p. 979.

Furthermore, as there is no allegation that a time was fixed for the performance of this part of the consideration, it was incumbent upon appellants to make the demand within a reasonable time.

"A party cannot by his own negligence, or for his own convenience, stop the running of the statute. * * * The rule rests upon the principle that the plaintiff has it in his power at all times to do the act which fixes his right of action." Williams v. Bergin, 116 Cal. 56, 47 Pac. 877.

"If no cause for delay be shown, it would seem reasonable to require the demand to be made within the time limited by the statute for bringing the action. There is the same reason for hastening the demand that there is for hastening the commencement of the action." Meherin v. S. F. Produce Exchange, 117 Cal. 215, 48 Pac. 1074.

[6] Moreover, after making such demand, appellants waited nearly four years before bringing the suit to set aside the deed. No sufficient excuse is shown for such delay, and the authorities are numerous to the effect that such want of diligence is fatal in this kind of a case.

Respondent also points out that appellants must fail because the status quo cannot be restored; but we deem it unnecessary to pursue the subject further, as we are satisfied that there is no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHORR v. CITY OF AZUSA et al. (Civ. 1842.)

1. HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS ⊜4(1)—LICENSES—REVOCATION—NOTICE.

Under a city ordinance providing that a peddler's license may be revoked at any time on giving the holder an opportunity to appear before the board of trustees by notice, notice must be given in a reasonable time; but, where the licensee requested no continuance, a notice for an immediate hearing was sufficient.

2. HAWKERS AND PEDDLERS ⊜4(1)—LICENSES—REVOCATION—SUFFICIENCY OF NOTICE.

Under a city ordinance providing for revocation of a peddler's license upon notice to appear before the board of trustees, it was immaterial whether a copy of the notice was left with the licensee, where he had full actual notice.

3. FALSE IMPRISONMENT ⊜31—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action for false imprisonment by a peddler arrested for peddling after his license had been revoked, evidence held to show good faith on the part of the town trustees in revoking such license on the ground of unfitness.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜757(3)—BRIEFS ON APPEAL—SUFFICIENCY.

Where an appeal is taken under the alternative method, the court will not search the typewritten transcript for evidence which the parties have omitted to print in their briefs in disregard of Code Civ. Proc. § 953c.

5. EVIDENCE ⊜83(2)—PRESUMPTIONS—REGULARITY OF OFFICIAL ACTION.

In an action for false imprisonment brought by a peddler arrested after his license was revoked, the court will presume that the board of trustees of the municipality lawfully and properly exercised its discretion in revoking the license, in the absence of positive proof to the contrary.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by David Shorr against the City of Azusa and others for false imprisonment. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

F. M. Steele, of La Crescenta, for appellants.

Baird & Gerecht, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. The defendants Roach and Granville appeal from a judgment against them in the court below for damages in an action for false imprisonment. They were, respectively, president of the board of trustees and city marshal of the city of Azusa. On the 25th day of October, 1912, the plaintiff was the holder of a license, regularly issued, entitling him to engage in the business of peddling novelties within said city for a period of one month, from October 15th to November 15th of that year. On said 25th day of October, a special meeting of the board of trustees of said city was duly called and regularly held, at which all members of the board were present, as was also the respondent, the holder of said license. At said meeting, after a hearing upon the question whether or not said license should be revoked, it was moved, seconded, and carried by unanimous vote of all the trustees that the same be revoked. Thereupon the respondent returned to the streets and resumed his business of peddling novelties; whereupon he was arrested by appellant Granville, pursuant to instructions from appellant Roach. He was imprisoned in the city jail overnight, after which he was either discharged or released. Apparently the arrest was made without a warrant. The foregoing facts are disclosed by the portions of the record which are printed in the briefs here.

But one question is presented on this appeal, namely: Did the action of the board of trustees above referred to have the legal effect of revoking respondent's license? If it did, then respondent, in engaging in the business of peddling thereafter, was guilty of a misdemeanor in the presence of the arresting officer, and the arrest and imprisonment were therefore lawful. On the other hand, if said action of the board of trustees was void, then respondent was still a licensee and was guilty of no violation of law in continuing his business, from which it follows that the arrest, having been made without a warrant, was unlawful.

The license in question was issued pursuant to an ordinance of said city which provides that—

All licenses issued thereunder "are granted and accepted by all parties receiving licenses with the express understanding that the board of trustees of the city of Azusa, may revoke same at any time, * * * if satisfied that * * * the holder of any such license is an unfit person to be trusted with the privilege granted by such license; provided, however, that no license shall be revoked without first giving the holder thereof an opportunity to appear before the board of trustees in his own behalf by the notification in writing to the holder of such license giving and fixing the time and place of such hearing."

No question as to the validity of this ordinance is here raised.

Respondent contends that the notice to him of the meeting of the trustees was insufficient, with respect both to the time and the manner of service thereof, to give the trustees jurisdiction to revoke the license, and both parties agree that the trial court so held. The notice was in writing, the material portions thereof being as follows:

"City of Azusa, Los Angeles County, California.
"Azusa, Cal., Oct. 25th, 1912.

"Shorr Bors.—Gentlemen: You are hereby notified to appear before the board of trustees of the city of Azusa immediately upon service of this notice to show why your license shall not be revoked. I. D. Roach, President of the Board of Trustees of the City of Azusa."

It was given to the marshal for service, and he testifies that he found respondent in the company of his brother, who was engaged with him in peddling under the license in question. He further testifies:

"I gave the citation to one of the Shorr brothers, and he said he couldn't read it and gave it back, and then I read it to them and explained that they was wanted up there before the meeting; and they readily agreed to go down with me." "In reading the words 'Shorr Bors,' I read them 'Shorr Brothers.'"

This was only a few minutes prior to the time of holding the meeting.

[1] The ordinance does not prescribe the time when such notice shall be given, and in such case the law prescribes a reasonable time. What constitutes a reasonable time is to be determined in each case with reference to the circumstances of that case and the purposes to be subserved and the object to be accomplished by the notice. Here it appears that the purpose of the notice was to give respondent an opportunity to appear before the board and show cause why his license should not be revoked. This purpose was fully accomplished. Respondent did appear before the meeting and was there informed of the nature of the accusations against him and was given an opportunity to reply thereto. He made no objection to the holding of the hearing at that time and no request for a continuance. It is nowhere intimated or claimed that if he had been given further time he could have presented any other or better reason for the retention of his license than that presented in his behalf by his brother at that meeting.

The case of Burden v. Stein, 25 Ala. 455, cited by respondent, is in point here. That case involved a hearing before a jury to determine the amount of damages which would accrue to Burden from the diversion of the waters of a creek. The notice was not served on him until the day of the hearing. On this point the Supreme Court said (page 458):

"If he had desired further time, or the notice given him was too short, to enable him to prepare for the protection of his interest, he should have made that the specific ground of his objection. The statute does not fix the length of time which must intervene between the notice and the view; this must, therefore, be construed to be a reasonable time; and what is reasonable depends upon the situation of the parties and the nature of the thing to be performed. It is not made affirmatively to appear that the time allowed in this case was unreasonable, and the maxim applies, 'What does not appear does not exist.'"

[2] What is here said applies equally to respondent's objection that a copy of the notice was not delivered to and left with the respondent. Whether or not service in the manner testified to was a technical compliance with the requirements of the law, it none the less fully served the purpose for which it was designed. As was said by the Supreme Court of this state in McLeran v. Shartzer, 5 Cal. 70, 63 Am. Dec. 84, "Where the object of notice was accomplished, it is immaterial whether there was notice or not."

The board of trustees had jurisdiction to consider and determine the question of the revocation of respondent's license. If it acted honestly after a hearing in good faith on the merits of the question, its action was valid and could not be set aside or disregarded by the courts. What occurred at that meeting appears from the testimony of Roach, printed in appellant's brief, as follows:

"After the meeting was called to order and the notice for which the meeting was called was read, I asked if Sam Shorr and Dave Shorr were present, and Mr. Granville said, 'Yes,' and the boys stood up, and I asked which one was Sam Shorr and which was Dave Shorr; and then I told them both—I said: 'Shorr brothers, you have been accused by the people of Azusa to-day of loud and boisterous conduct, unbecoming a gentleman, and of using vile language in the presence of women and children.' * * * That they had, according to the reports which had been brought to me, used vile language in the presence of women and children, and had provoked fights, and had been disturbing other people who were attempting to do a peaceable business alongside of them. And I asked them if there was any reason that they had to give us, why their license should not be revoked, and they should cease from peddling; and the larger one made quite a lengthy statement. He said he had come to Azusa at some little expense, and that he had some pennants left, and that if he wasn't allowed to sell them, that he should lose what he had already invested in them; and that if there were other people that were allowed to peddle on the streets, he didn't see why he couldn't. Then, after he had —he repeated that two or three times in the course of his address to the board. And after that I asked Dave Shorr if he had anything to say, why his license should not be revoked, and he shook his head; and then I called upon Mr. Granville, the city marshal, and asked him if he had anything to say to the board in regard to the conduct of these boys during the day in the city of Azusa, and he got up and made a statement that they had been a source of continual disturbance to the police force of Azusa during the whole day; that they had been annoying people who were engaged in matters not kindred to them; that they had provoked fights and used indecent language in the presence of women and children."

[3] This testimony appears to be wholly uncontradicted, and it warrants but one conclusion, namely, that the trustees acted in good faith after a hearing on the merits of the question, at which sufficient grounds were shown for the revocation of the license, and that their action in this respect was valid.

[4] Respondent asserts in his brief that the evidence shows that the trustees had given the exclusive right to peddle novelties to another person, overlooking the fact that the license in question had already been given to the respondent, and he argues from this that the action of the board revoking his license was in bad faith and for an improper purpose. He prints in his brief no evidence whatever in support of this assertion. This is an appeal under the "alternative method," and this court has repeatedly held that it will not search through the typewritten transcript in the effort to find evidence which the parties have omitted to print in their briefs in disregard of the express mandate of the statute. Code Civ. Proc. § 953c. See California Sav. & Comm. Bank v. Canne, 34 Cal. App. 768, 169 Pac. 395, and cases there cited.

[5] So far as appears from the record presented to us in the manner prescribed by law, there is neither allegation nor evidence of any fraud or bad faith or ulterior motive or arbitrary action on the part of the board of trustees, and we must therefore conclude that their action revoking respondent's license was valid. As was said by this court, in Goytino v. McAleer, 4 Cal. App. 655, at page 659, 88 Pac. 991, at page 992:

"A court will not interfere with the discretion reposed in a proper board or tribunal, but will assume that official duty has been properly and lawfully performed, in the absence of positive proof to the contrary."

The judgment appealed from is therefore reversed.

WHITE v. DEERING. (Civ. 1827.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Oct. 14, 1918.)

1. WILLS ⟹714, 781 — CONSTRUCTION — BEQUEST TO CREDITOR—ELECTION.

A bequest will be construed to be in lieu of an obligation due from testator to legatee, or in lieu of some other legal right or interest of the beneficiary in testator's estate, only where such intention is expressed in unmistakable language and appears from the will construed as a whole.

2. WILLS ⟹130 — HOLOGRAPH WILLS — EXISTENCE OF PREVIOUS WILL.

An instrument will not be given the effect of a holographic will, where there exists a previously made and unrevoked will, unless it clearly appears from its language that testator intended to make further testamentary provisions regarding disposal of his estate, or to explain, qualify, or modify provisions of previously made will.

3. WILLS ⟹130—HOLOGRAPH WILLS—LETTER.

Where testatrix had made will, and in two codicils had provided for bequests to be made to certain servant, an ambiguous letter, written by testatrix, concerning provision to be made for such servant, will not be construed a holographic will.

4. WILLS ⟹487(3) — CONSTRUCTION — HEARSAY EVIDENCE.

In action by servant of testatrix against executrix for compensation, defended on ground that bequest to servant in will was in lieu of compensation, a letter from testatrix to executrix was inadmissible for purpose of explaining bequest, or of qualifying effect thereof, being hearsay.

5. WILLS ⟹487(3) — CONSTRUCTION — SELF-SERVING EVIDENCE.

Such letter was inadmissible as self-serving.

6. WILLS ⟹487(3) — CONSTRUCTION — EVIDENCE—RES GESTÆ.

Such letter, having been written nine months after execution of codicils making bequest, was not admissible as part of res gestæ.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by Gladys White against Mabel C. Deering, as executrix of the will of Sophia P. Comstock, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

White, Miller, Needham & Harber, of Sacramento, and Myrick & Deering, of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. E. McLaughlin, of Sacramento, and C. P. McLaughlin, for respondent.

HART, J. Sophia P. Comstock, a resident of the county of Sacramento, died on the 31st day of July, 1915, leaving a last will and testament, of which, after due proceedings, defendant, Mabel Deering, was appointed and qualified as executrix. In due time plaintiff presented to said executrix her claim against said estate for "services as nurse, housekeeper, and secretary, requiring constant service during the day and night, from December 12, 1913, to and including July 31, 1915, $1,963," which said claim was by the defendant rejected, and this action was brought to recover thereon. The case was tried before a jury, and a verdict was rendered for the amount sued for. From the judgment in favor of plaintiff, which followed the verdict, defendant prosecutes this appeal.

A codicil to the will of Miss Comstock, dated April 17, 1914, contained the following provision:

"I also give to Miss Gladys White my piano, my books and my Haviland china."

In another codicil, dated April 24, 1914, was the following provision:

"I give to Miss Gladys White in addition to the personal articles given to her by a previous codicil my fifty shares of Arcade Park stock or the sum of $1,500.00 as she may elect. If the shares are sold in my lifetime I reserve the right to redetermine the amount to be given to Miss White."

At the commencement of the trial, but before the jury was selected, counsel for defendant stated that they expected to show, both by written and oral declarations made by Miss Comstock, that she intended the legacies in her will in favor of the plaintiff to be in full compensation and in full payment for her services, and requested the court to require the plaintiff to elect whether she would proceed with the trial or would accept the legacies in full payment for her services. The court refused to require the plaintiff to elect, and a jury was selected. Before the introduction of any evidence, defendant renewed the motion to require plaintiff to elect, which the court again refused to do. The action of the court in this respect is assigned as error.

[1] The codicils to the will of the testatrix, whereby she gave to the plaintiff certain specified personal property and certain designated shares of stock, are in unambiguous language. They involve a plain and unmistakable expression of the intention of the testatrix to give and bequeath to Gladys

White the "piano, my books and my Haviland china," and in addition thereto "fifty shares of Arcade Park stock," or the sum of $1,500 in lieu of said stock, as the legatee may elect. The terms of the codicils are unconditional and unqualified. In other words, the bequests therein and thereby made to the plaintiff are in terms absolute and unqualified. There is absolutely no language therein from which it may even remotely be inferred that the testatrix intended that the bequests so made were to stand in lieu of any compensation which might become due to the plaintiff for any personal services which the latter might have rendered for the deceased during her (testatrix's) lifetime. To justify the conclusion that a testamentary bequest of money or other personal property is intended by the testator to be in lieu of a debt or some other obligation due from the testator to the legatee, or in lieu of some other legal right or interest of the beneficiary in the estate of the deceased, the expression of that intention must not only be in language so clear and unmistakable that there can be no reasonable ground for doubting that such was the intention, but such intention must be entirely gathered from the testamentary instrument itself whereby the bequest is made. The authorities expounding and applying the rule as it is thus stated are numerous, but we shall content ourselves by the mere citation of a few of our own cases, as follows: Estate of Gray, 159 Cal. 159, 112 Pac. 890; Estate of Cowell, 164 Cal. 636, 642, 130 Pac. 209; Estate of Prager, 166 Cal. 450, 137 Pac. 37; Estate of Whitney, 171 Cal. 751, 760, 154 Pac. 855; Estate of Wickersham, 138 Cal. 355, 363, 70 Pac. 1076, 71 Pac. 437.

It follows from the foregoing views that the case presented here is not one in which a legatee or beneficiary under the terms of a last will is required to make an election as to which of two alternative provisions of such an instrument bequeathing or devising certain portions of the estate of the testator to him he intends to rely on.

The only other point urged by the appellant here arises over the refusal of the trial court to allow the defendant to introduce in evidence, against the objection of the plaintiff, a letter written by the deceased to the defendant, executrix, and dated January 24, 1915, some nine months subsequently to the making of the codicils above referred to. The theory upon which said letter was offered in evidence was that, being entirely in the handwriting of the deceased, it practically amounted to a will, or a codicil to her will, and that it would show that the intention of the testatrix, as to the bequests made to the plaintiff in the two codicils above mentioned, was that said bequests should stand in lieu of compensation for any services performed for the testatrix by the plaintiff. The letter reads:

"Dearest Mabel: The other day Mr. Carly said in the presence of Gladys that I should will her my home place; that I owed her this. This I do not wish. Dear Gladys has been lovely to me, but after all she is an inexperienced girl, and I have suffered for care. Dear Gladys does all that she knows how to do, but she often neglects me. She does what she wishes, not what I wish; and of course I can say nothing. When she came to me, I told her I had no money with which to pay her for her services, but that I would give her my piano, my books and my dishes. She said she wanted nothing, not even what I offered her and that her only desire was to take care of me and restore me to health. I have provided for her in my will. The most of my money, as you know, it is my greatest desire, shall go to leave a monument great and beautiful in honor of my mother and to last for hundreds of years.

"Sophia P. Comstock.

"Please never mention this in your letters. Gladys usually reads everything I write to you and always reads your letters. S. P. C.

"If Gladys knew I sent you this she would punish me severely. This is proof enough of my desire. Save this letter."

We think the ruling excluding the letter as evidence of the intention of the testatrix with respect to the scope of the bequests made to the plaintiff in her will should be sustained.

[2] Obviously, the only theory upon which the letter could be held to be admissible for the purpose for which it was offered is that the letter was in legal effect a testamentary instrument or intended by the testatrix as a part of her will. To give an instrument the effect of a last will, holographic in form, such as is the letter refefred to, if anything in the nature of a testament, where there exists a previously made and unrevoked will of the testator, such instrument should be so phrased that there can be no doubt from its language that the intention of the testator was thus to make further testamentary provisions regarding the disposal of his estate—either that it was to explain, qualify, or modify certain provisions of his previously made will, or to make a different disposition of a part of his estate from that made of it in the original testament.

[3] The letter in question is not free from uncertainty or ambiguity as to its meaning and purpose. It is, for instance, reasonably susceptible of the interpretation that what was uppermost in the mind of the testatrix, when writing the letter, was the proposition suggested by the Mr. Carly mentioned in the writing, in the presence of the plaintiff, that she (testatrix) "should will her (referring to plaintiff) my house," which the testatrix expressed in the letter a disinclination to do—not in positive terms, but in a manner indicating that she was in more or less doubt as to whether she should do so or not; her language being, "This I do not wish." In this view of the meaning and purpose of the letter, it is therefore reasonably probable that by the concluding words of the letter, viz., "This is proof enough of my desire," the testatrix had reference to her "desire" that the plaintiff should not receive or be given the house of the testatrix. Under this construction of the letter, the sole purpose of the testatrix in writing it and the thought which thus she intended to express were to enter a protest with her friend against giving to the plaintiff her house when she had already made provision for her in her testament, then existing.

But it may be conceded that the letter is capable of a different construction, and herein lies the insuperable difficulty which confronts the appellant in attempting to support the theory upon which she insists that the letter constitutes competent evidence of the intention of the testatrix with respect to the effect it is supposed to have on her bequests to the plaintiff; for thus it becomes clear that the writing is so obscure and uncertain as to its true meaning and purpose that it would require an overstraining of the imagination or much linguistic juggling to make out of the letter a testamentary instrument, or justly to say that the writer intended thereby to subject the right of the plaintiff to receive the bequests provided for her in the will to the condition that she would waive all claim to any and all compensation to which she might be entitled for personal services rendered to the deceased in the latter's lifetime.

Again, in determining whether the letter was intended as a testamentary instrument, no little significance should be attached to the fact that the deceased had previously not only made a will in due form and according to legal requirements, but had thereafter added thereto two codicils, the sole purpose and the effect of which were to give to the plaintiff certain of her personal property. Thus, it would seem clear, the testatrix well knew that, effectively to make a disposal of her estate to take effect after her death, it was necessary for her to do so by a will in accordance with the formalities prescribed by law, and it would seem equally clear that, had she intended qualifying or in any way changing the effect of her bequests to plaintiff, made under the most solemn circumstances known to the law, she would have done so, either by adding a new provision to the will effecting such result or have made an entirely new testament to take the place of that already executed by her and in existence when the letter was written.

[4-6] It will not be denied that the letter, not being testamentary in character, is wholly inadmissible for the purpose either of explaining or qualifying the effect of the bequests made in the will to plaintiff. It would be for such purpose hearsay and self-serving. Nor, the letter having been written nine months after the execution of the codicils whereby the plaintiff was bequeathed a portion of the estate of the deceased, would it be admissible under the rule of res gestæ. The cases in California are uniform upon this proposition, but in support thereof we need only to refer to In re Gilmore, 81 Cal. 240, 243, 22 Pac. 655; Estate of Tompkins, 132 Cal. 173, 175, 176, 64 Pac. 268; and Estate of Willson, 171 Cal. 449, 476, 153 Pac. 927. See, also, Underhill on Wills, § 912; Roper on Legacies, 1461; Harrison v. Haskins, 2 Pat. & H. 388; Aird's Estate, L. R. 12 Ch. Div. 291; Civ. Code, §§ 1318, 1340.

The further contention is made, however, that—"There is a general presumption that a legacy to a servant or creditor is to be considered as a satisfaction of a debt for wages unless there are circumstances that take the case out of the rule."

The quoted language is from section 690, volume 2, of Labatt's Master and Servant, and the rule as thus stated, as the learned author of that treatise explains, is found in a few English decisions, although Lord Eldon, in La Sage v. Coussmaker (1794) 1 Esp. 188, rules that—

"A legacy was never deemed a satisfaction for a legal demand when that demand was unliquidated at the time of the legacy given, nor where it was given before the time when the demand accrued, or the debt was contracted, unless it was expressly said in the will that it should be a satisfaction."

There are to be found some American cases, which, like the English cases referred to by Labatt, hold that the presumption is that a legacy to a servant is to be regarded as in satisfaction of wages due from the testator to the servant. There are, on the other hand, many of our cases which have adopted and applied the rule as laid down by Lord Eldon, supra, and our opinion is that that is the sounder and more logical rule.

It is neither strange no wholly anomalous that a person, in making a testamentary disposal of his estate, should give a portion thereof to friends or persons, not related to him by blood or otherwise, who had been in the lifetime of the testator in such close association and on such terms of intimacy with him as to have won his lasting love, friendship, and confidence. Even a menial servant's relations to his master usually involve the administration of matters which directly affect the latter's personal comfort and material happiness, and it is therefore never a matter of surprise when it develops that in his last will a master has bestowed upon his servant, though his services have been of a menial nature, some benefaction, or given him a legacy solely out of consideration for his faithfulness as a servant. Hence the books are full of cases where servants have been left legacies by their masters of far greater value than any services they had rendered, or which they were capable of rendering, in the capacities in which they were employed, are reasonably worth, and from those cases it may safely be laid down as the common rule, even in those instances where the fact is not directly expressed in the testament itself, that the master thus remembers his servant, not because in his opinion the servant has not been or will not have been sufficiently compensated for his services, or not because the master thus intends to pay for the services rendered him by the servant, but because of some sentiment of affection or personal attachment which the master has formed and fostered in his lifetime and to the end for the servant. Therefore it seems to us that the true rule is and ought to be, in the interpretation of such bequests, that the presumption is that they are not made in lieu or satisfaction of compensation due to the servant from the testator, unless there is language in the testament itself from which no other conclusion is permissible. As above stated, this conclusion is in accord with that announced in a number of the cases in this country and by courts of eminent standing. It is sufficient to give one of these cases special notice herein.

In Sheldon v. Sheldon, 133 N. Y. 1, 30 N. E. 730, the testator, in his lifetime, had received from his wife a sum of money which she had obtained from the sale of certain real estate, of which she was the owner in her own right, upon the understanding and agreement with his wife that he should control and invest the money for her benefit, and that he should, when requested, account to her for the same and whatever increase might accrue from the investment. No such accounting was had during the lifetime of the husband, and she presented in due form her claim for the amount against the estate of her husband who died testate. The claim was rejected by the executors of the will. By his testament the testator gave his wife a legacy of $7,000, which was paid to her by the executors of the will. On the trial of an action by the wife to recover the money due from her husband by reason of the transaction above mentioned, one of the defenses interposed was that the legacy was intended to extinguish and did extinguish said indebtedness, notwithstanding that the husband's will contained no language to that effect or indicating such to have been the intention of the testator. The trial court disallowed that defense, and the Court of Appeals sustained the ruling, saying:

"The legacy given to the plaintiff by the will of the husband did not operate as payment. The will contains no words from which any intent can be inferred or found to extinguish any pre-existing debt by means of the bequest. It was an absolute gift apart from any debt due by the testator to his wife, and no debt is even mentioned or referred to in the will. A legacy to a creditor is not to be deemed in satisfaction of his debt, unless so intended by the testator."

Other cases to the same effect are Clarke v. Bogardus, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 68; Boughton v. Flint, 74 N. Y. 482; Phillips v. McCombs, 53 N. Y. 494; Eaton v. Benton, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 576; Williams v. Crary, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 449.

In the footnotes of La Batt's treatise the California case of Smith v. Furnish, 70 Cal. 424, 12 Pac. 392, is referred to as supporting the rule laid down in those English cases in which it is held that the presumption is that a legacy to a servant or a creditor is for the purpose of wiping out a debt due from the testator to the legatee, but we do not consider it so. There the action was against the estate or the executors of the last will of the deceased on a claim, rejected by the executors, for services performed by the plaintiff for the deceased during the latter's last illness. In his will the deceased made a bequest to the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, which expressly provided that the bequest should be "in consideration and in payment for her kind care and attention during my last illness." The court, in effect, held that the will itself thus made it clear that the legacy was to operate as compensation for any services rendered the deceased by the plaintiff, and, of course, the language of the bequest admits of no other conclusion.

We conclude that the judgment appealed from should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

DONNATIN v. UNION HARDWARE & METAL CO. (L. A. 4282.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 27, 1918.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⊜9 — ACTION FOR DAMAGES FROM NEGLIGENCE—VERDICT.

In action for damages from negligence, issue of damages is not alone ground of a motion for new trial, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, as a verdict in such case must be regarded as a single and indivisible entity.

2. NEW TRIAL ⊜9—GENERAL MOTION—NEW TRIAL ON LIMITED ISSUES.

The court has discretion to order new trial generally, or only in part, on limited issues; its discretion in such regard being properly invoked by a motion for new trial of the entire case.

3. NEW TRIAL ⊜9—DENIAL OF LIMITED TRIAL—POWER OF COURT.

The trial court may properly deny a limited new trial, where it is of opinion that substantial justice requires that a new trial should cover all issues, and not be limited to that of damages alone.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Donnatin against the Union Hardware & Metal Company, a corporation. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appealed to the District Court of Appeal, and, after judgment of affirmance (175 Pac. 26), moves for transfer to the Supreme Court. Motion denied.

Horace S. Wilson and Frank G. Tyrrell, both of Los Angeles, and W. W. Middlecoff, of Visalia, for appellant.

John Murray Marshall and James S. Bennett, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1-3] The petition for transfer to this court, after judgment in the District Court of Appeal (175 Pac. 26), is denied. It should be added that we do not understand the opinion of the District Court of Appeal to hold that a motion for a new trial of the issue of damages alone is authorized by our Code. Code Civ. Proc. § 657. The verdict, in a case of this kind may, for the purposes of such motion, be regarded as a single and indivisible entity. The power of the court to order a new trial on limited issues is well settled. It has discretion to order a new trial generally or only in part. Its discretion in this regard is properly invoked by a motion for a new trial of the entire case, and it may well be doubted whether this discretion can be circumscribed by means of a motion for a new trial of one issue alone. A determination of this question is, however, not essential to the decision of the present case, and we do not here determine it. In any view, the trial court may properly deny a limited new trial where it is of opinion, on the whole record before it, that substantial justice requires that a new trial, if granted at all, should cover all the issues. No such relief was sought here.

PEARL v. PEARL. (S. F. 7912.)

1. TRUSTS ⊜371(3)—BREACH—PLEADING.

A complaint by an administratrix alleging that deceased quitclaimed land to defendant, without consideration, upon defendant's promise to take and hold the same in trust for benefit of decedent, or to convey according to direction of decedent, and upon his death to divide equally with his heirs, and that defendant sold and converted the proceeds of the land and failed to account therefor, stated a cause of action for a breach of trust.

2. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⊜426—LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊜103(1)—BREACH OF TRUST—ACCRUAL OF ACTION—PARTIES.

A grantee selling land held in trust for benefit of the grantor, which on his death was to be equally divided among his heirs, the sale occurring during the life of the grantor, may be sued by the grantor's administratrix; the right of action arising at once upon its breach.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜704(1) — MATTERS REVIEWABLE—VERDICT.

Where a verdict is not certified as a part of the judgment roll, the point that it is not properly signed by the foreman of the jury, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 618, is not reviewable.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊜103(2) — EXPRESS TRUSTS—ACCRUAL OF ACTION.

Limitations do not start to run in favor of the trustee of an express trust until the trust is repudiated.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊜201—INCAPACITY OF PARTY—"INSANE"—FINDINGS.

A finding that a person was incapable of caring for his property or transacting business or understanding the nature and effect of his acts was equivalent to a finding that he was "insane" within the meaning of the statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 352, subd. 2).

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Insane.]

6. TRUSTS ⊜371(8)—EXPRESS TRUSTS—REQUISITES.

Where a complaint alleges an express trust, it is immaterial whether a promise of the trustee to do certain acts was made with or without the intention of performing, and proof of such an allegation is unnecessary.

* While rehearing was denied the second paragraph of the opinion was amended so as to read as it is now set forth herein.

7. Appeal and Error ⊂=928(2) — Matters Reviewable—Presumptions.

Where from the record it is impossible to tell what the court instructed the jury, it will be presumed that it instructed to disregard incompetent evidence admitted over objections.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by Isabelle L. Pearl, administratrix of the estate of John Q. Pearl, deceased, against James H. Pearl. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward E. Cothran, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis O'Neal, Wm. F. James, and James P. Sex, all of San Jose, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff rendered after a verdict by a jury on special issues and the decision by the court adopting said verdict. The action is brought by the plaintiff to compel an accounting from the defendant of the proceeds of the sale of certain real estate therein described. The complaint alleges that the defendant is the son of John Q. Pearl, deceased; that the said decedent, on April 28, 1902, executed a deed to the defendant to all his real estate, without consideration, upon defendant's promise to take and hold the same in trust during the lifetime of decedent for the use and benefit of decedent, or to convey according to the direction of decedent, and upon his death to share the property equally with the heirs at law of said decedent; that said promise was made by defendant without any intention of keeping or performing the same; that on February 4, 1907, without consideration, decedent executed a quitclaim deed to defendant of said property; that at the time decedent executed the same he "was aged and ill in body and mind, and physically and mentally weak, and incapable of understanding the nature or effect of his acts, and incapable of transacting business, and did not, in fact, understand the nature or effect of his said acts in so executing, in form, said last-mentioned deed, * * * and said John Q. Pearl from thenceforth continued to be, and was at the time of his death, so weak and ill in body and mind, and incapable of caring for his property, or transacting business, or understanding the nature or effects of his acts"; that on July 22, 1908, the defendant, without direction, consent, or knowledge of the decedent, sold the property; that the defendant received and converted to his own use and benefit the purchase price, the exact amount of which was unknown to plaintiff; that the defendant received large sums of money as income from said premises, and converted the same to his own use and benefit, and has failed and refused to account therefor, either to the deceased or to the plaintiff. The jury found, and the court adopted its findings, that the foregoing allegations of the complaint were true, except that there was no finding on the allegation that the promise to hold the property in trust made by the defendant to the decedent was without any intention of keeping or performing the same. The judgment of the court was for the sum of $5,000, proceeds of the sale of said real estate.

[1] The complaint stated a cause of action for a breach of trust. Defendant was not prejudiced by the overruling of the demurrer.

[2] Appellant claims that the administratrix does not have the capacity to sue, and that under the trust found the beneficiaries, the heirs alone have power to sue, and cites in support thereof the case of Janes v. Throckmorton, 57 Cal. 368; but in the case at bar the property was sold in violation of the trust, and the action is based upon said breach of trust and is to secure to decedent's estate the proceeds of such sale. The right of action arose at once upon the breach of trust (Norton v. Bassett, 154 Cal. 411, 97 Pac. 894, 129 Am. St. Rep. 162), and the administratrix is the proper party to enforce that right (sections 1452, 1581, 1582, 1583, Code Civ. Proc.; Collins v. O'Laverty, 136 Cal. 31, 68 Pac. 327).

[3] The transcript in this case contains what purports to be a verdict. This document is not signed by the foreman of the jury, as required by section 618, Code of Civil Procedure. As the verdict is not certified as a part of the judgment roll, the point that the verdict is not signed is not properly before us; neither is the alleged discrepancy between the verdict and the copy thereof contained in the findings.

[4, 5] As to the statute of limitations: This action is based upon the breach of an express trust. The statute did not begin to run until the trust was repudiated in 1908, when the property was sold by the defendant. It was alleged and found that at that time the decedent was of unsound mind and that he remained so until the time of his death. It is true that the complaint and findings use the language hereinbefore stated and do not use the words "unsound" or "insane," but the finding that he was incapable of caring for his property or transacting business or understanding the nature or effects of his acts was equivalent to a finding in express terms that the deceased was insane within the meaning of the statute of limitations. Section 352, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc.; Crowther v. Rowlandson, 27 Cal. 376; Clarke v. Irwin, 63 Neb. 547, 88 N. W. 783; Barlow v. Strange, 120 Ga. 1015, 48 S. E. 344; 22 Cyc. 1109. The statute did not run against him during the period of his incapacity.

[6] Error is claimed because of the failure of the court and jury to find upon the issue as to whether or not the promises of the defendant concerning the performance of the trust were made without the intention to perform the same, and therefore fraudulent. The complaint alleges an express trust, and whether or not the promise of the trustee was made with or without the intention of performing the same is immaterial.

Two exceptions are contained in the bill of exceptions to questions and answers as follows:

"What was the object and purpose stated by your father, John Q. Pearl, in making the deed of April 28, 1902, of said property to defendant?"

Defendant objected to the question and evidence upon the ground that the same was incompetent. The court thereupon ruled that the said evidence was admissible solely for the purpose of showing the mental condition of said John Q. Pearl at the time of the making of said deed of April 28, 1902, and overruled the objection. Plaintiff answered:

"Father told me he had deeded the Merced ranch to the defendant in trust—in a deed of trust."

It is true that the answer to this question did not at all tend to show that the decedent was of unsound mind, but it is not clear that the question might not have elicited something appropriate to that issue. No motion to strike out was made. Plaintiff was also asked to state what she knew of the quitclaim deed of said property dated February 4, 1907, to defendant. Appellant objected to said question upon the ground it was incompetent. The court overruled the objection. The plaintiff then testified as follows:

"I said to father: 'Jim [defendant] said he had a quitclaim deed to the Merced ranch.' Father said: 'Lizzie [plaintiff] if he has it I know nothing about it.'"

No motion to strike out was made. The question did not specifically call for a conversation, and her answer might have been competent.

[7] Assuming that there was error in the rulings on the objections to said questions, it is impossible, from the record, to say that they were prejudicial. For aught that appears, the court may have instructed the jury to disregard this evidence, and in support of the judgment it must be assumed that the court did so instruct the jury.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: MELVIN, J.; SHAW, J.

TULLOH v. BOYCE et al. (ALSTON et al., Interveners). (S. F. 8092.)

(Supreme Court of California. Sept. 6, 1918.)

MECHANICS' LIENS ⊂=268 — NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS.

Where action to enforce mechanic's lien is commenced within 90 days, lien continues during pendency of action, and notice of lis pendens is not essential, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1190, as to continuance of lien.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Wm. S. Wells, Judge.

Action by William A. Tulloh against E. J. Boyce and others, with intervention by Bernice Alston and another. Judgment for interveners against plaintiff, and order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate judgment, etc., having been reversed by the Court of Appeals (174 Pac. 680), application for rehearing is made to the Supreme Court. Application denied.

Frank W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. In denying a hearing in this court we deem it proper to say that we are in entire accord with the opinion of that court in so far as it holds that filing of a notice of lis pendens is not essential to a continuance of the lien. By reason of the commencement of the action to enforce the lien within the 90 days, the lien continues during the pendency of the action, in view of the provisions of section 1190, Code of Civil Procedure. Further than this it is not essential to go on this appeal.

The application for a hearing in this court is denied.

A. F. ESTABROOK CO. et al. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION.

KLAMATH S. S. CO. v. SAME.

(S. F. 8315, 8316.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 19, 1918. On Petition for Rehearing, April 17, 1918.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟹42 — PERSONS ENTITLED TO RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

Plaintiff employer, a "resident," is not entitled to attack Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, § 75a, added by St. 1915, p. 1101, on the ground that it discriminates against "nonresidents" contrary to Const. U. S. art. 4, § 2, declaring that the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, and Amendment 14, prohibiting any state from denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws; plaintiff not belonging to the class alleged to be discriminated against.

On Petition for Rehearing.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟹832(4)—POINTS NOT SUGGESTED ON ORIGINAL SUBMISSION—REVIEW.

A point not suggested in argument on which petitioner submitted case for decision will not be considered, where made for the first time on petition for rehearing.

In Bank. Separate proceedings by the A. F. Estabrook Company and others and by the Klamath Steamship Company against the Industrial Accident Commission to test the validity of awards made pursuant to Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, § 75a. Awards affirmed.

Ira A. Campbell, of San Francisco (McCutchen, Olney & Willard and John F. Cassell, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for petitioners.

Christopher M. Bradley, of San Francisco (Warren H. Pillsbury, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. In North Alaska Salmon Co. v. Pillsbury, 174 Cal. 1, 162 Pac. 93, L. R. A. 1917E, 642, we held that the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, as originally enacted, did not authorize an award of compensation where injury to the employé had occurred beyond the boundaries of this state. The question decided was simply one of interpretation. It was assumed that the Legislature had power to require employers to compensate "injured employés whose employment was created in this state, regardless of the place where the injury may have been sustained." The language of the statute, as read by the court, indicated, however, that the Legislature had not intended to make the compensation scheme applicable to cases of injury arising outside the state. In 1915 the scope of the act was extended by the addition of a new section (75a), reading as follows:

"The commission shall have jurisdiction over all controversies arising out of injuries suffered without the territorial limits of this state in those cases where the injured employé is a resident of this state at the time of the injury and the contract of hire was made in this state and any such employé or his dependents shall be entitled to the compensation or death benefits provided by this act." Stats. 1915, p. 1101.

We have before us, in each of the above-entitled proceedings, a writ of certiorari issued on behalf of the employer to test the validity of an award made pursuant to the terms of this section. The two proceedings are presented on a single set of briefs.

[1] The petitioners do not question the existence of the general legislative power which, in our opinion in the North Alaska Salmon Company Case, we assumed to exist. The sole ground of attack is that section 75a involves an unjustifiable discrimination against employés who are not residents of this state, and thus violates the provision of the Constitution of the United States declaring that "the citizens of each state shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states" (art. 4, § 2), and that prohibiting any state from denying "to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws" (Amendment 14, § 1). Under settled principles of constitutional law, the petitioners are not in a position to raise this question. Generally speaking, the courts will not consider the constitutionality of a statute attacked by one whose rights are not affected by the operation of the statute. 12 C. J. 760; Scheerer v. Deming, 154 Cal. 133, 142, 97 Pac. 155. More specifically, a contention that a statute denies equal rights and privileges by discriminating between persons or classes of persons "may not be raised by one not belonging to the class alleged to be discriminated against." 12 C. J. 768; 10 Cent. Dig. col. 1284 et seq.; Estate of Johnson, 139 Cal. 532, 534, 73 Pac. 424, 96 Am. St. Rep. 161. Thus the validity of a statute excluding colored persons from serving on juries cannot be questioned by whites. Commonwealth v. Wright, 79 Ky. 22, 42 Am. Rep. 203. Nor may a male question the validity of a statute as discriminating against women. McKinney v. State, 3 Wyo. 719, 30 Pac. 293, 16 L. R. A. 710. On like grounds, it has been held that a resident or citizen is not entitled to assail an act on the ground that it discriminates against those who are not residents or citizens. Bozeman v. State, 7 Ala. App. 151, 61 South. 604; Schmidt v. Indianapolis, 168 Ind. 631, 80 N. E. 632, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787, 120 Am. St. Rep. 385; Gallup

v. Schmidt, 154 Ind. 196, 56 N. E. 443; State v. Kirby, 34 S. D. 281, 148 N. W. 533.

Very directly in point is the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Jeffrey Mfg. Co. v. Blagg, 235 U. S. 571, 576, 35 Sup. Ct. 167, 169 (59 L. Ed. 364). The validity of the Workmen's Compensation Law of Ohio was there questioned. That law deprived a certain class of employers of five or more men of various defenses available to employers of less than five. The plaintiff in error, who was an employer of more than five, and within the class designated, assailed the legislation on the ground, among others, that the act discriminated unjustly against workmen in shops employing less than five men. The court held that this ground of attack was not available to the employer, saying:

"Much of the argument is based upon the supposed wrongs to the employé, and the alleged injustice and arbitrary character of the legislation here involved as it concerns him alone, contrasting an employé in a shop with five employés with those having less. No employé is complaining of this act in this case. The arguments based upon such discrimination, so far as it affects employés by themselves considered, cannot be decisive; for it is the well-settled rule of this court that it only hears objections to the constitutionality of laws from those who are themselves affected by its alleged unconstitutionality in the feature complained of. Southern Railway v. King, 217 U. S. 524, 534 [30 Sup. Ct. 594, 54 L. Ed. 868]; Engel v. O'Malley, 219 U. S. 128, 135 [31 Sup. Ct. 190, 55 L. Ed. 128]; Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 550 [32 Sup. Ct. 784, 56 L. Ed. 1197]; Yazoo & Mississippi Valley R. R. v. Jackson Vinegar Co., 226 U. S. 217, 219 [33 Sup. Ct. 40, 57 L. Ed. 193]; Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 260, 271 [33 Sup. Ct. 27, 57 L. Ed. 212, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 71]; Darnell v. Indiana, 226 U. S. 390, 398 [33 Sup. Ct. 120, 57 L. Ed. 267]; Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 531, 544 [34 Sup. Ct. 359, 58 L. Ed. 713]; Missouri, Kansas & Texas Ry. v. Cade, 233 U. S. 642, 648 [34 Sup. Ct. 678, 58 L. Ed. 1135]."

This reasoning is decisive of the present case. If section 75a contains—we do not say it does—an unwarranted discrimination against nonresidents, the only persons entitled to attack the law on this ground are members of the class thus excluded from the benefits of the legislation. No constitutional right of the employer is invaded by the action of the Legislature in subjecting him to a less extensive liability than might have been imposed. Not being required to pass upon the constitutional question sought to be raised, we would not be justified in entering into a discussion of its merits.

Each of the awards is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; RICHARDS, Judge pro tem.; WILBUR, J.; MELVIN, J.; VICTOR E. SHAW, Judge pro tem.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [2] On petition for rehearing, the petitioners contend that the award should be annulled because, as is claimed, the facts were such as to bring each of the proceedings within the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts. No such point was suggested in the argument on which the petitioners submitted the cases for decision. It is the settled rule of this court that points made for the first time on petition for rehearing will not be considered.

On the questions actually argued, we are satisfied with the conclusions declared in the opinion filed. The petition for rehearing is denied.

(178 Cal. 337)

CALIFORNIA WELL DRILLING CO. v. CALIFORNIA MIDWAY OIL CO.

(L. A. 4395.)

1. TRIAL ⟸356(1)—GENERAL VERDICT—UNANSWERED INTERROGATORY.

It may well be that, the jury having found a general verdict for plaintiff, it must be considered to have found an acceptance by defendant of plaintiff's work under the contract sued on, even though the special interrogatory requiring finding thereon was unanswered.

2. TRIAL ⟸253(10)—INSTRUCTION—IGNORING ISSUES.

In an action for the price of drilling oil wells, an instruction on plaintiff's request that if the jury found that defendant accepted a well at 3,215 feet, and defendant thereafter requested plaintiff to straighten the hole and casing, which plaintiff proceeded to do, and did in a workmanlike manner, and defendant refused to accept the well as straightened, the jury would find plaintiff was entitled to judgment, was erroneous as ignoring the question of actual drilling into oil sand or to a depth of 3,500 feet, if required by defendant, and as based wholly on plaintiff's untenable theory of the case that the well was accepted as complete on a certain date.

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸109—CONTRACT TO DRILL WELL—ACCEPTANCE—EVIDENCE.

In such action, evidence held insufficient to justify a finding of acceptance of the well by defendant in August, 1912.

4. CONTRACTS ⟸304(2)—ACCEPTANCE OF PERFORMANCE.

Where plaintiff contracted to drill an oil well for defendant, and, after sinking it to a certain depth, it was discovered that the well was not straight, and plaintiff engaged to straighten it, and thereafter a contract for a second well was made, wherein it was stipulated that monthly payments should be suspended until completion of the first well, there was no acceptance of the first well by defendant prior to the date of such contract.

5. CONTRACTS ⊜176(1) — CONSTRUCTION — QUESTION FOR COURT.

The terms of written contracts having been ascertained, the court should have construed them, and instructed the jury as to their meaning and effect.

6. MINES AND MINERALS ⊜109 — DRILLING OIL WELLS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where plaintiff contracted separately to drill two oil wells for defendant, and the contract covering the second well referred to the contract covering the first, stating in effect that if the first was not completed the second should be regarded as having been drilled in lieu thereof, if the first well was not completed, plaintiff could recover the contract price for drilling the second well, less a stipulated credit for materials, etc., furnished it while drilling the well.

7. MINES AND MINERALS ⊜109—CONTRACT FOR OIL WELL—CONSTRUCTION.

A contract to drill an oil well, providing that the well should be drilled into the oil sand and to a depth of 3,500 feet if required, was not complied with by drilling into any oil sand at any depth, but, the oil sand contemplated being producing sand, in default of such sand the contractee was justified in requiring the well to be drilled to 3,500 feet, unless the phrase "into the oil sand" had some other special local meaning or customary construction with reference to which the parties contracted.

8. CONTRACTS ⊜176(3)—CONSTRUCTION—EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE.

Where extrinsic evidence is introduced to aid in the construction of a contract, it is still the court's duty to construe the contract in the light of such evidence.

9. CONTRACTS ⊜176(3)—CONSTRUCTION—EXTRINSIC FACTS—DISPUTE.

Where extrinsic facts, brought forward to aid in the construction of a contract, are disputed, the jury must pass on them, and the case may go to the jury, with hypothetical instructions to render verdict one way if certain facts are found, and another way if found differently.

10. CONTRACTS ⊜176(3) — CONSTRUCTION — MATTER OF LAW.

The construction of a contract in the light of the real facts is a matter of law.

11. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜930(1)—REVIEW—ASSUMPTION AS TO APPLICATION OF LAW.

The question of the completion of the work, the price of which was sued for, having been submitted to the jury as a mixed question of law and fact, in considering the contention that the evidence was insufficient to justify finding that the work was completed, the Supreme Court must assume the jury correctly construed the contract and applied the construction to the facts as presented to them.

12. CONTRACTS ⊜322(1) — PERFORMANCE — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for the price of drilling an oil well, the contract having required drilling to producing sand or to a depth of 3,500 feet, the burden was on plaintiff to show that sand reached at 3,215 feet, less than the alternative depth of 3,500 feet, was producing sand.

13. MINES AND MINERALS ⊜109—DRILLING OIL WELL—PERFORMANCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In such action, evidence held insufficient to justify a jury finding that the well was drilled into producing sand, as required by the contract.

14. TRIAL ⊜234(7)—INSTRUCTION—CONFUSING CHARACTER.

In such action, in view of the facts that no oil was produced from the well, and that the burden was on plaintiff to establish its completion, an instruction that if the jury found there was no custom as to who should test the oil sand, plaintiff did not have to show it tested the sand, unless the contract expressly or impliedly provided for such test, was erroneous as tending to confuse.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action by the California Well Drilling Company, a corporation, against the California Midway Oil Company, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Thomas Scott, Sr., and Geo. E. Whitaker, both of Bakersfield, and Bradner W. Lee and Bradner W. Lee, Jr., both of Los Angeles (Kenyon F. Lee, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

E. L. Foster and Chas. A. Barnhart, both of Bakersfield, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment after verdict for $44,452.19, the contract price for drilling two oil wells by plaintiff for defendant, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. Well No. 7 was drilled under contract dated February 7, 1912. Well No. 6 was drilled under a contract dated December 31, 1912. Both wells were to be paid for by the foot. It is admitted that well No. 6 conformed to the contract, and that plaintiff is entitled to be paid the contract price therefor. All the difficulties in the case grow out of the contract for the drilling of well No. 7 and its relation to the second contract. The question is whether or not the plaintiff completed the well as required by the contract for the drilling of well No. 7, and, if not, whether said well was accepted by the defendant as completed in August, 1912, at which time plaintiff claims that it had sunk well No. 7 to a depth of 3,215 feet, and "into the oil sand," and had placed therein at the request of the defendant a perforated four-inch pipe; that the well was thereupon accepted as completed, but that five days thereafter, defendant having discovered that the well was crooked, returned it to the possession of the plaintiff to be straightened; that thereafter, for a year the plaintiff was actively engaged in attempting to straighten the well, and in July, 1913, having straightened the well and sunk it to a depth of 3,241 feet—26 feet further than it was at the time it was accepted by the defendant—they had thus fully performed their contract. The case thus presented two main questions, that of acceptance and of completion.

[1-4] Plaintiff contends that, the jury having found a general verdict in its favor, it must be considered to have found an acceptance, even though the special interrogatory, requiring a finding thereon, was unanswered, and this may well be true. Benson v. S. P. Ry. Co., 171 Pac. 948. Defendant claims that the evidence was insufficient to justify such a finding. On this subject, at the request of the plaintiff, the jury was instructed as follows:

"* * * If you find from the evidence that the defendant accepted well No. 7 at 3,215 feet, and that the said defendant thereafter requested the plaintiff to straighten the hole and the casing in said well, and that the plaintiff thereupon proceeded so to do, and actually did straighten the casing in said well in the manner as testified, in a workmanlike manner as provided for in said contract, and that the defendant refused to accept said well as straightened, you will then find that the plaintiff is entitled to judgment under the terms of the contract."

The contract for drilling well No. 7 recited that it was the purpose of the parties to "drill a well for oil," and therein the plaintiff "agrees to drill a well on said land at the location indicated * * * into the oil sand or to a depth of 3,500 feet if required by said first party," etc. It provided that certain payments were to be made "60 days after the perforated casing is carried into the oil sand, or to 3,500 feet." This instruction completely ignores the question of actual drilling "into the oil sand or to a depth of 3,500 feet if required by said first party," and is based wholly upon plaintiff's theory of the case that well No. 7 was accepted as complete in August, 1912. But plaintiff's theory was not tenable. It is undisputed that five days after such alleged completion and acceptance the well was returned to plaintiff for further work thereon, which work continued for nearly a year. During the progress thereof the contract of December 31, 1912, for drilling well No. 6, was entered into by the parties, in which it is, in effect, expressly agreed that said well No. 7 was uncompleted and unaccepted, by the following provision therein contained:

"It is further understood and agreed by the parties hereto, that the fifty per cent. monthly payments herein provided for shall be suspended until the completion of that certain well on the property of the party of the first part, known as well No. 7, on which the party of the second part is now drilling under an agreement dated February 7, 1912; but all payments so suspended shall become due and payable as agreed upon completion of said well No. 7. In the event well No. 7 cannot for any reason be completed according to its contract, then the said well herein provided for to be drilled shall be understood by the parties hereto to replace said well No. 7 and to be so accepted by the party of the first part as the well provided to be drilled in said contract of February 7, 1912." (Italics ours.)

[5] There was not only no sufficient evidence to justify a finding of acceptance in August, 1912; but, in view of the contract of December 31, 1912, the jury might have been properly instructed that there was no acceptance and no completion of well No. 7 prior to December 31, 1912, and as no acceptance at any time after August, 1912, was claimed by plaintiff, the instruction complained of should not have been given. The case was tried and the jury instructed upon the theory that it was to construe the contracts involved, and to this end a number of rules of construction were given to the jury, and the refusal to give others is assigned as error. But, the terms of the contracts being ascertained, the court should have construed the same and instructed the jury as to the meaning and effect thereof. Luckhart v. Ogden, 30 Cal. 547, 556; Swain v. Grangers Union, etc., 69 Cal. 186, 10 Pac. 404; Holloway v. McNear, 81 Cal. 154, 157, 22 Pac. 514. It would serve no useful purpose to set out at length the various provisions of the contract for drilling wells Nos. 6 and 7. Suffice it to say that the contract for drilling well No. 7 provided that, in the event of the failure to drill that well to a sufficient depth, a well should be drilled in lieu thereof, and made certain stipulations in regard to the expenditures in drilling such well. The later contract of December 31, 1912, for the drilling of well No. 6, referred to the contract for drilling well No. 7, stating, in effect, as above quoted, that if No. 7 was not completed, No. 6 should be regarded as having been drilled in lieu thereof. The parties herein differ upon the question as to whether or not, under a proper construction of these two contracts, the defendant was entitled to credit upon the contract price for drilling the second well (No. 6) of the amount expended by it for materials, etc., furnished to the plaintiff while drilling said well, in the event that No. 7 was not completed, stipulated to be $17,077.78.

[6, 7] The construction of these two contracts was a question of law for the court, and the jury should have been instructed that in the event it found that well No. 7 was not completed, the verdict should have been for the contract price for drilling well No. 6, less the stipulated credit of $17,077.78. Instruction No. 15, given at plaintiff's request, based upon the theory that such credit could not be allowed unless a mutual mistake in the execution of the contract of December 31, 1912, was proved by a preponderance of the evidence, was erroneous; as it was also to leave the jury to determine whether the contract of December 31, 1912, as executed, provided for such credit. In determining whether or not the plaintiff had completed its contract for well No. 7 when it was drilled to a depth of 3,241 feet and tendered to the defendant, we are required to construe the contract. At plaintiff's request the jury was instructed:

"* * * If you find from the evidence that well No. 7, was drilled into oil sand to the depth alleged by the plaintiff, which is 3,241 feet, in accordance with the terms of the contract, and that the well was finished in a workmanlike manner, you must find for the plaintiff. * * *" (Italics ours.)

And again:

"You are to determine whether well No. 7 was drilled into the oil sand according to such contract."

And at defendant's request the jury was instructed:

"If you find it to be a fact from the evidence introduced in this case that the term 'oil sand' means a 'sand producing oil,' and that plaintiff did not drill into a sand 'producing oil,'" etc.

While both parties thus induced the court to present the question of completion to the jury as a mixed question of law and fact, to be determined by them, a fair construction of the plaintiff's instructions left it to the jury to say that any drilling into any "oil sand" was a sufficient compliance with the contract. Construed in the light of the purpose and terms of the contract, the provision that the well should be drilled "into the oil sand or to a depth of 3,500 feet if required by said first party," etc., was not complied with by drilling into any oil sand at any depth. The well was drilled to secure oil in paying quantities. The jury should at least have been instructed that "the oil sand" contemplated by the contract was producing oil sand, and that in default of such producing oil sand defendant was justified in requiring the well to be drilled to a depth of 3,500 feet, unless the phrase "into the oil sand" has some other special local meaning, or customary construction, with reference to which the parties contracted. Both parties introduced evidence as to the meaning of the terms of the contract. We are therefore not called upon to consider the admissibility of such evidence, as to which we express no opinion.

[8-10] But where extrinsic evidence is introduced to aid in the construction of a contract, it is still the duty of the court to construe the contract in the light of such evidence. Note, 12 L. R. A. 376; Blashfield's Instructions to Juries, vol. 1, § 66, p. 131. If such extrinsic facts are disputed, the jury must pass on these disputed facts. "The case may go to the jury with hypothetical instructions from the court to render a verdict one way if certain facts are found, and another way if the facts are found differently." Id., vol. 1, § 66, p. 133. The construction of the contract in the light of the real facts is a matter of law. As was said by this court in a recent case involving the use of extrinsic evidence to construe a will:

"In such cases where the evidence of the facts is in conflict, it is permissible for * * * the jury to find the facts. * * * But the application to the will itself of the facts found, admitted, or established present a question of legal construction which is as purely a question of law as is the construction of the will without resort to extrinsic evidence. * * * Again, it is fundamental that in all cases where extrinsic evidence is admissible to aid in expounding the will, the evidence is limited to this single purpose. It is considered for the purpose of explaining and interpreting the language of the will, and is never permitted to show a different intent or a different object from that disclosed, though perhaps obscurely, by the language of the will itself. 6 Wigmore on Evidence, pp. 2472–2474." Estate of Donnellan, 164 Cal. 14, 19, 127 Pac. 166.

See, also, Estate of Thomson, 165 Cal. 296, 131 Pac. 1045; First National Bank v. Bowers, 141 Cal. 253, 74 Pac. 856.

[11-13] The question of the completion of the well being thus submitted to the jury as a mixed question of law and of fact, appellant contends that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding of the jury that the well was completed. Inasmuch as the jury was clothed with no power to incorrectly decide the law, we must, in considering this contention, assume that they applied the law correctly to the facts. In other words, we must assume that they correctly construed the contract and applied that construction to the facts as presented to them. The contract, as we construe it, required the drilling of the well into producing oil sand, that is, sand producing oil in reasonably paying quantities, and in default of such a showing of oil to continue to drill the well to a depth of 3,500 feet if required by the defendant. The question, then, is, Does the evidence justify the finding of the jury that the plaintiff completed the well by drilling the same into producing oil sand? The theory of the plaintiff is that it had drilled a well "into the oil sand" when it had attained the depth of 3,215 feet, that the well was then accepted and returned to it merely for straightening, and that when they had straightened the well and again sunk it to a depth of 3,215 feet they had completed the well, in that it was again just as far into the oil sand as it was in the first instance. The defendant denied that it ever accepted the well or ever considered it as completed, or ever took it over as completed. It is admitted by the plaintiff that it never tested the oil well either by pumping or bailing. It is shown beyond question that the well never produced any oil, and that no oil was ever taken therefrom except the oil that was pumped into it for the purpose of testing it. In the effort to straighten and deepen the well the point of 3,215 feet was passed at least four times; that is to say, by reason of loss of tools and other defects in the well it was necessary to go back and redrill the well, and in so doing the well was drilled past this point at least four times. Plaintiff's general manager testified that they had no log of any of these drillings which showed any oil sand; that when the well had reached a depth of 3,241 feet it was in blue shale. The log of the original drilling to a depth of 3,215 feet was lost as to the drilling for the last week or two, in July and August, 1912, and the only testimony offered as to the showing of oil sand was the testimony of some of the well drillers and of plaintiff's general manager. One of these drillers testified that in his opinion the well showed signs of oil sand for about 10 feet. On cross-examination he admitted that the rotary drill might show signs of oil sand long after it had been passed through, and that a showing of 10 feet of oil sand by a rotary drill might mean only 4 or 5 feet of oil sand. If it is true that there were 4 or 5 feet of producing oil sand at about 3,215 feet, the fact remains that the plaintiff, upon whom the burden lay of showing that such sand was producing sand, made no effort to test the well. It would seem that this was a case for the application of the doctrine that where weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered, when it appears that stronger and more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust. Code Civ. Proc. § 2061, subd. 7. But, viewed in the light of the conduct of the parties subsequent to the alleged acceptance of the well, it is clear that the well was never completed. If we assume in favor of the respondent that when the contract of December 31st referred to well No. 7 as uncompleted, it had reference to the fact that the well was crooked and in a process of being straightened, and that when straightened to a depth of 3,215 feet it would be considered by the parties as complete, we are met by a great many difficulties. On March 13, 1913, the plaintiff entered into a contract with two subcontractors to drill well No. 7 to a depth of 3,300 feet. No good reason for making this contract is offered consistent with the theory that the well was to be completed when down to a depth of 3,215 feet and straight. There was correspondence between the plaintiff and defendant in regard to the completion of well No. 7. On May 31, 1913, plaintiff wrote the defendant:

"We are undecided whether to go on and try and finish No. 7 or not. If we do not finish No. 7, the string of four and a quarter inch casing which is in No. 7 could be used on No. 6. We have some drillers who are very anxious to take another labor contract to finish No. 7. They say they are pretty sure of finishing well No. 7, but we are pretty badly disgusted with this well, and will hold up the contract until the writer sees you. We have about concluded that if your company will pay us for No. 6 at the contract price of $6.50 per foot, then we will quit No. 7 as it is, and by doing that the string of four and a quarter inch casing could go to No. 6 and we would drill a new well for No. 7 under No. 7 contract. But if your company wants to hold up the payment on No. 6 until No. 7 is completed, we will take one more chance in contracting the completion of No. 7. There is a chance, although small, of finishing No. 7. But if your company would prefer to have a new well drilled we will start drilling on a new well, or you may take No. 7 as it is and pay us for No. 6 at the contract price and wait until you finish No. 6, and then the condition may be favorable for your going ahead with No. 7."

Plaintiff's general manager, Mr. Edwards, testified that on June 4 or 5, 1913, he made defendant a proposition that:

"If they would accept No. 6 and pay for it at the contract price and release me on well No. 7 that I would accept it. I also stated that the outlook of finishing well No. 7 was very discouraging; that we had been working on it pretty nearly a year, and had not made any headway toward getting it finished, and we would either drill a new well to replace No. 7, or take another chance of going ahead and finishing, or I believe I told them at that time I would take one more chance of finishing it under some new men who thought very strongly that they could finish the well. That was Mr. Chappis and Mr. Gibson. They didn't accept my proposition, so I put my men on No. 7 and went to work again."

Mr. Chappis testified that when he went to work on well No. 7 the tools went down somewhere in the neighborhood of 3,217 to 3,220 feet. The evidence, therefore, is insufficient to justify the finding of the jury that the well was drilled into the oil sand according to the contract.

[14] At the plaintiff's request the court instructed the jury as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that if you find that there was no custom in the west side oil fields as to who should test the oil sand, then the plaintiff does not have to show that it tested the oil sand, unless the contract expressly or impliedly provides for such test."

In view of the fact that no oil was obtained from well No. 7 and that the burden was on the plaintiff to establish completion of the well, this instruction could only tend to confuse the jury. The question as to whose duty it was, by custom or otherwise, to test the well was not properly involved in the case. The effect of the instruction must have been to suggest to the jury that it was unnecessary for plaintiff to give evidence of a test of the well in order to recover.

The judgment and order are reversed.

In re TURNER'S ESTATE. (Civ. 2679.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1918.)

1. COURTS ⟸207(5)—PROBATE PROCEEDINGS —JURISDICTION—DISTRICT COURT OF APPEAL.

District Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction in the first instance of a petition for writ of prohibition directed against a judge of the superior court, where it pertains to a probate proceeding in which it would not have original appellate jurisdiction if an appeal were to be taken from any action therein.

2. PROHIBITION ⟸5(1)—ACTS OF JUDGES.

Petition for writ of prohibition against a judge of superior court will be denied, where it affirmatively appears from the petition that all of the acts and things complained of were performed by the judge in the exercise of the undoubted jurisdiction of the court over which he presided.

In the matter of the estate of Mary E. Turner, deceased. Petition for writ of prohibition against the judge of Department 8 of the Superior Court of the State of California. Denied.

See, also, 172 Pac. 759.

H. S. Herrick, of Bakersfield, in pro. per.

LENNON, P. J. The petitioner here, in person, heretofore presented a petition for an alternate writ of prohibition directed to the judge of department 8 of the superior court of the state of California, in and for the city and county of San Francisco, commanding him "to cease and desist from threatening, oppressing or intimidating petitioner on any hearings of said matter, or from fining or otherwise penalizing him for his efforts to enforce his rights" in and to the above-entitled estate, which the petitioner alleges is pending probate in said superior court.

[1] The petition cannot be acted upon by the court in its entirety because of the fact that the judge against whom the writ is requested is now sitting as a justice pro tem. of this court, and said judge is disqualified by constitutional provisions from participating in any case or proceeding sought to be reviewed in which he sat as the trial judge. Without consultation with said judge, we have concluded that the writ should be denied because it pertains to a probate proceeding in which this court would not have original appellate jurisdiction if an appeal were to be taken from any action therein, and, consequently, under the practice inaugurated by the Supreme Court, the petition should have been presented there in the first instance.

Moreover, the petition was not accompanied (as required by rule 26, section 2, of the Supreme Court [119 Pac. xiv]), with the points and authorities upon which the petitioner relied in support of his petition.

[2] Aside from these considerations, we are of the opinion that the petition should be denied upon the merits because it does not state, nor attempt to state, facts sufficient to warrant the issuance of the writ, in this: That it affirmatively appears from the petition that all of the acts and things complained of therein were done and performed by the judge against whom the writ is sought, in the exercise of the undoubted jurisdiction which the court over which he presided had to deal with and dispose of the probate of the estate pending therein.

Done in chambers this third day of December, 1918.

I concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

Ex parte RILEY. (Cr. 823.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1918.)

LICENSES ⟸7(3)—VALIDITY OF ORDINANCE— DISCRIMINATION AND CLASS LEGISLATION.

License ordinance of town which discriminates between dyeing and cleaning businesses situated within and without town, discrimination being based solely on location of businesses, is void as attempt to enforce discrimination not based upon difference in nature of businesses transacted, etc.

In the matter of the application of A. W. Riley for writ of habeas corpus. Petitioner ordered discharged from custody.

A. Kinkaid, of Redwood City, and Heller, Powers & Ehrman and Jerome B. White, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Albert Mansfield, City Atty., of Redwood City, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. The petitioner, Riley, was arrested upon a complaint made in the recorder's court of the town of Redwood, San Mateo county, in which he was charged with a misdemeanor, to wit, the violation of Ordinance No. 195 of said town. He seeks his discharge on habeas corpus.

Riley conducted a cleaning and dyeing business situated outside of the town of Redwood, for which establishment he collected and delivered dyeing and cleaning work within the corporate limits of said town. Petitioner claims that the ordinance under which he is being prosecuted is illegal and void because it discriminates unreasonably between cleaning and dyeing businesses conducted without the city limits and soliciting business therein and the same kind of an establishment with a fixed place of business within the limits of the town, and that the discrimination is solely based upon the location of the business.

The respondent does not seem to dispute the statement that the ordinance does so discriminate between businesses so conducted within and without the town. If this be true, the petitioner is entitled to his discharge under the authority of the case of In re Thomas Hines, 33 Cal. App. 45, 164 Pac. 339, in which it is held that such an ordinance is discriminatory and void as an attempt to create and enforce a discrimination not based upon differences in the nature of the business being transacted, or differences in the manner of conducting the same business, or any other difference other than the mere fact of difference in destination of the goods collected and delivered by wagons collecting for laundries located outside of the city and the destination of goods collected for delivery to laundries within the city.

The principle applicable to this case is exactly that stated in the Hines Case. The respondent undertakes to avoid the effect of that decision by appealing to Ex parte Haskell, 112 Cal. 412, 44 Pac. 725, 32 L. R. A. 527; but the very language of Ex parte Haskell distinguishes it from the case of Hines, supra, for while it is there said that the power to license for purposes of regulation and revenue involves the right to discriminate between different trades, and between essentially different methods of conducting the same general character of business or trade, it is further said:

"There is no unlawful discrimination, in requiring a special license fee for traveling salesmen, where there is no discrimination in favor of residents or against nonresidents of the municipality."

In the last clause of the sentence quoted, a distinction is made between the two classes of cases which is perfectly clear.

It follows that the ordinance attacked is invalid, and that the petitioner should be discharged from the custody of the town marshal from whom he was taken, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

PEOPLE'S WATER CO. v. SWEET et al.

(Civ. 2586.)

(District Court of Appeals, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 26, 1918.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸901—ABSENCE OF EVIDENCE—EXTENT OF REVIEW.

The burden is on appellant to show error.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸907(2)—FINDINGS OF LOWER COURT—PRESUMPTION.

In the absence of the evidence from the record, the findings of court are conclusively presumed to be supported by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by the People's Water Company, a corporation, against Albert H. Sweet and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

T. F. Bachelder, of Oakland, and O. F. Meldon, of Sausalito, for appellants.

Tom M. Bradley and Harry E. Leach, both of Oakland, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action in ejectment to recover from the defendants possession of a tract of land situate in the county of Contra Costa, alleging that on January 1, 1914, it was the owner thereof and entitled to its possession, but that the defendants Albert H. Sweet and his wife, Leona J. Sweet, believing said land to be part of the public domain of the United States, had theretofore entered thereon, and at said date were in possession thereof. Said defendants answered, setting up various facts, among others, that the land in controversy had originally been part of a Mexican land grant; that at a certain date stated in the complaint one Joseph Naphtaly was entitled to purchase it from the United States but had failed to do so; and that it had thereupon become unoccupied public land of the United States, and as such open to homestead entry; that said defendants had lawfully and regularly entered thereon.

A trial of the cause being had, the court found that the land was a part of a United States grant to the Western Pacific Railroad Company; that by the consolidation and amalgamation of said railroad company with the Central Pacific Railroad Company the latter succeeded to the rights and estate of said first-named corporation in said lands; and that after the commencement of this action said Central Pacific Railroad Company had received from the United States a patent thereto; and that by mesne conveyances the plaintiff, prior to the commencement of the action, had succeeded to said company's rights. As to the allegations of the answer upon which said defendants based their claim of title, the court found some of them to be true and others untrue, culminating in the finding that neither of said defendants is entitled to any right, title, or interest in and to said land, nor had they ever acquired any right or estate against said plaintiff or its predecessors by adverse possession or otherwise. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of plaintiff.

[1, 2] The defendants have appealed, making the contention that the findings of the court in plaintiff's favor are against the evidence, but have brought to this court no record containing any of the evidence taken at the trial. In that situation it is, of course, impossible for this court to know if the contention of the appellants is well or ill founded. As has been said by appellate courts many times, the burden is upon the appellant to show error; and in the absence of a record of the evidence the findings of the court are conclusively presumed to be supported by the evidence taken at the trial. It is not necessary to cite authorities to this effect.

The state of the record in this case requires the affirmance of the judgment and order from which the appeal is taken. It is so ordered.

We concur: BEASLY, Judge pro tem.; STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem.

CARR v. CARR CO. et al. (Civ. 2585.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1918.)

1. DIVORCE ⊂=249(1)—PROPERTY RIGHTS—LEGAL TITLE OF WIFE—SUFFICIENCY OF DECREE TO VEST.

Where decree in wife's divorce suit determined she was owner of realty in her own right and as her own separate property as against her husband and a company, joined as defendant, which owned legal title, issues having been voluntarily presented by parties for decision, decree was sufficient to vest complete legal title in wife.

2. DIVORCE ⊂=249(1)—PROPERTY RIGHTS—QUIETING TITLE TO REALTY.

In wife's divorce suit, seeking adjudication as to separate character of realty and decree quieting title, issue as to property having been fairly submitted by both parties, court had jurisdiction to determine question involved as to character of property, and to quiet title of owner.

3. DIVORCE ⊂=255—DECREE AS TO PROPERTY RIGHTS—FINALITY AND EFFECT AS CONVEYANCE.

Where decree in wife's divorce suit determined that realty, legal title to which was held by company, was owned by plaintiff wife, having become final, decree cannot be avoided in wife's suit to quiet title by contending different form of decree should have been entered, and that it did not constitute conveyance in itself.

4. DIVORCE ⊂=255—RES ADJUDICATA—DECREE IN DIVORCE ACTION—PROPERTY RIGHTS.

In suit to quiet title by divorced wife claiming under decree in divorce suit, court properly refused to allow defendants, former husband and others, to give evidence of claims based on facts in existence at time of trial of divorce action, which they attempted to use to defeat effect of decree.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by Fanny Briggs Carr, also known as Fannie A. King, against the Carr Company, a corporation, Maurice A. King, P. Halloran, and others. From judgment for plaintiff, the Company and King appeal. Affirmed.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellants.

H. H. Appel and William Schreider, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment quieting the plaintiff's title to certain described real property. The evidence of plaintiff's title consists of the judgment rendered in a certain action of divorce, wherein Fannie A. King was plaintiff and Maurice A. King and the Carr Company were defendants. Upon issues voluntarily presented by the parties for decision in that action, the court determined therein that said real property was purchased or traded for by the defendant King with property then and there the property of the plaintiff, except as to the sum of $500, which the defendant King had contributed by purchasing a mortgage upon certain personal property of the plaintiff, which thereafter was used in trading for said acreage; that the defendant King, taking advantage of his relationship with the plaintiff as her husband and of the trust and confidence which she reposed in him, had caused the title to said land to be placed in the name of the Carr Company without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff; that the defendant King controlled the business of said corporation for his own use and benefit; that the defendant King commingled the funds of the Carr Company and his own personal funds and the funds of the plaintiff continuously and in such a manner that it was impossible to separate the same at the time of the trial of that action, and had used them indiscriminately for his own purpose, for the support of plaintiff and himself, and for the purpose of the Carr Company; that the defendant corporation never had any right, title, interest, or estate in and to the property mentioned in the pleadings therein and that the title to the 16½ acres of land (being the land involved in the present action), was held by the defendant corporation for the use and benefit of the plaintiff; and that she was at all times mentioned in the pleadings therein the absolute owner thereof as her own separate estate. Pursuant to the findings in that action, the court decreed that the plaintiff was the owner in her own right and as her own separate property of said real property. In that action it was claimed by the defendants that said real property when conveyed to the Carr Company was the sole and separate property of the defendant King, and that the plaintiff had no interest whatever therein; that the defendant corporation was indebted to the defendant King in a sum exceeding $11,000, evidenced by a note of the corporation to defendant King, secured by a mortgage upon said real property. The court found that the defendant King was the owner of the note in said sum executed to him by the defendant corporation, secured by mortgage on said real property, executed by the defendant company, but nevertheless determined and decreed that the plaintiff was the owner of said real property, subject only to certain liens which are not involved in the present action.

[1, 2] The first contention made by appellants is stated as follows:

"The plaintiff, possessing an equitable interest in the real property, is not entitled to a judgment quieting title to said real property as against the Carr Company, the owner of the legal title. In the divorce action the court had no jurisdiction to make any award as to the separate property of the wife, and the finding by that court in said divorce proceeding that the property in question was the separate property of the wife divested it of every jurisdiction over the same, and the decree purporting to do so was a nullity."

These two propositions, which we have treated as one, cannot successfully be maintained. The decree in question determined that the plaintiff was the owner of said property in her own right and as her own separate property and estate. This was not merely a determination of the equities claimed by her. It was sufficient to vest in her a complete legal title. Conceding that in an ordinary proceeding for divorce the court is not authorized to dispose of the separate property of either party, that rule does not apply in a case where the action is dual in its character, seeking not only a divorce but an adjudication as to the separate character of certain described property and a decree in effect quieting plaintiff's title thereto. The issue as to the property having been fairly made and by both parties submitted to the court for determination, the court had jurisdiction to determine the question involved as to the character of the property, and to quiet the title of the rightful owner thereto. Glass v. Glass, 4 Cal. App. 604, 88 Pac. 734; Allen v. Allen, 159 Cal. 197, 113 Pac. 160.

[3, 4] The remaining proposition of appellants is stated as follows:

"The decree in the divorce action, purporting to award plaintiff's separate property to her, of itself did not constitute a conveyance of the property, and it appeared from the records in that action that no writ of assistance or execution had ever been issued or enforced to compel a conveyance from the Carr Company, holding the legal title, to the plaintiff, the owner of the equitable title."

The trouble with this proposition is that it is based upon the findings of fact in the former action, rather than upon the conclusions of law and the decree. It may be that it would have been appropriate for the court in that action to hold that the legal title was vested in the defendant corporation in trust for the plaintiff, and order that the corporation execute the trust by making a deed of conveyance to the plaintiff. But the court, acting within its jurisdiction, chose the direct method of affording relief by judicially determining and decreeing that the plaintiff was the owner of the property. That decree having become final, its effect may not now be avoided by contending that a different form of decree should have been entered. The court committed no error in refusing to allow the defendants to give evidence of claims now asserted by them, based upon facts which by their own admission were in existence at the time of the trial of the former action, and which they here have attempted to use as a means of defeating the effect of the judgment in that action.

DIMOND v. BESSEMER GAS ENGINE CO.

(Civ. 2527.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT ⟸23(1)—EXISTENCE OF AGENCY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Evidence held to show that plaintiff, who was engaged in sale of products manufactured by defendant, was not defendant's agent, but was mere employé of third party, whose contract with defendant, giving him exclusive territory, expressly stipulated that he was to be merely a dealer, and that defendant was not to be liable for his expenses.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸471(30)—CONCLUSIONS—EXISTENCE OF AGENCY.

In action involving existence of agency between manufacturer and salesman employed by dealer having exclusive territory for sale of manufacturer's products, statements by dealer, while testifying during salesman's trial for embezzlement, that salesman was agent of manufacturer, were mere conclusions and inadmissible.

3. EVIDENCE ⟸265(6) — DECLARATIONS BY DEALER—EFFECT ON MANUFACTURER.

In action involving existence of agency between manufacturer and salesman employed by dealer having exclusive territory for sale of manufacturer's products, statements by dealer, while testifying during salesman's trial for embezzlement, that salesman was agent of manufacturer were not binding upon manufacturer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Frank Dimond against Bessemer Gas Engine Company, a corporation. From a judgment for plaintiff and from order denying motion for new trial, defendant appeals. Order and judgment reversed.

Sullivan & Sullivan, and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco (Louis V. Crowley, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Frank W. Taft, of Willits, and G. E. Redwine, of Ukiah, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover the sum of $2,995 for money alleged to have been laid out and expended by him on behalf of defendant, and for damages. Judgment went for plaintiff in the amount prayed for, and this appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1] The cause of action was based upon a contract of agency claimed to have been entered into between plaintiff and defendant. Several grounds are relied upon for a reversal, but as we view the evidence, we are of the opinion that it fails to show that any contract whatever existed between plaintiff and defendant, and our consideration of the case may be confined to this question alone.

The evidence may be summarized as follows: Defendant is a foreign corporation engaged in the manufacture of gas engines in the state of Pennsylvania. On the 21st day of March, 1912, it entered into a written contract with one Julius Beeman for the sale of its engines in the states of Arizona and California. In the latter state Kern county and the oil fields were excepted from the operation of the contract for the reason that defendant in these locations maintained its own sales force and employés, and sold directly to the trade. Under the terms of his contract Beeman agreed to cover all but the excepted territory with a selling organization, and to manage the same, and any of the stated territory not looked after by Beeman was under the agreement to be considered open territory by defendant company. It was expressly stipulated in the contract that Beeman was to be a dealer merely, and that the company would assume no liability for expenses or debts contracted by Beeman. The contract further provided that Beeman was to install the engines sold by him without cost or expense to the company. The compensation which Beeman was to receive under the contract was the difference in the costs of the engines to him, which was fixed by schedule attached to the contract, and the amount he received from the purchaser.

After the execution of this contract between the parties Beeman organized his sales force in the territory contracted for. In the state of California he did business under the firm name of the "Bessemer Company." On or about June 23, 1912, Beeman and plaintiff entered into a written contract, whereby the latter became a member of Beeman's selling organization in California. This contract provided, in substance, that plaintiff should canvass certain allotted territory for Beeman; that at his own expense he should open and maintain an office in San Francisco; that within a given period of time he should sell at least $12,000 worth of engines, basing this sum on the cost price to him, and as compensation for his services that he should receive the difference between the cost of the engines to him as fixed by Beeman and the amount paid for them by the purchaser. This was the only compensation he was to receive for his services. This contract was made in conformity with the contract Beeman had with the defendant company, the terms of which plaintiff was familiar with, it being expressly made a part of his contract. Upon the conclusion of this arrangement plaintiff opened offices and proceeded to canvass for the engines he had contracted to sell. He obtained certain orders, but experienced difficulty in making deliveries. The delay in this respect was due to factory strikes and other troubles that defendant company was contending with. Plaintiff's agreement with Beeman made no provision for expenses incurred by him in selling the engines; such expenditures being a matter which he was to assume.

Shortly after plaintiff had entered upon the performance of his contract and constantly thereafter he complained to Beeman that his own resources were exhausted, and he solicited and obtained aid from Beeman from time to time in the way of advancement of commissions to enable him to continue in his work, for which he gave Beeman his note as security. Other evidence in the case clearly shows that the claimed relation of agency never existed. The record is a voluminous one, and the evidence in part consists of numerous letters written by plaintiff to defendant and Beeman. The letters conclusively establish the status of plaintiff, and show that he was a mere employé of Beeman, and not an agent of defendant as contended. Almost immediately after his employment plaintiff commenced to address these communications to defendant company. Defendant objected to this practice on the part of plaintiff, and complained to Beeman about it, stating that it did not wish to become in any manner involved with Beeman's sales force. Beeman notified plaintiff of defendant's objection to his habit of letter writing, but, notwithstanding this fact, plaintiff continued in the practice. In one of these letters a loan is requested of defendant by plaintiff in order to enable him to continue in his employment with Beeman; and in another, and after he had been discharged, he sought employment directly with defendant company. His discharge followed the collection by him of certain sums for engines sold which he had failed to turn over to Beeman. For this act he was arrested and charged with embezzlement. Upon this charge he was acquitted. It appears herein from his own testimony that upon such trial plaintiff testified that he was an employé of Beeman, and that he never had any contract with defendant whatever, and further that he was selling gas engines for Beeman, and not for the defendant, and that in making such sales he signed his contracts as a salesman for Beeman, and not for defendant, and that all his orders were forwarded directly to Beeman.

[2, 3] We do not deem a further discussion of the evidence necessary. Suffice it to say that there is nothing in the record to show that any contract ever existed between plaintiff and defendant, except evidence of statements made by Beeman at the trial of plaintiff for embezzlement to the effect that plaintiff was an agent of defendant, and of other statements made by the same witness concerning reimbursements that the company might make. These statements were mere conclusions of the witness, in no manner binding upon defendant, and were improperly admitted.

It is not claimed that defendant ever directly employed plaintiff. His claim is based upon the theory that Beeman was an agent for the company, and that as such he had the power and did employ plaintiff, and that under his employment the claimed expenditures were made by him in furtherance of defendant's business. His contract and the evidence conclusively show otherwise. Even if it be assumed that the evidence did show such a relation to have existed, still we are of the opinion that plaintiff cannot recover. No question of ostensible agency is here involved. Plaintiff, before his employment, had knowledge of and understood the terms and provisions of Beeman's contract, for they were a part of his own, and under that contract the right to bind defendant company was expressly denied to Beeman. Plaintiff's claim, if any he has, is one against Beeman and not the defendant company, with whom he had no contractual relations, either express or implied. There is no foundation in the evidence upon which the judgment rendered can be based. This being so, the order and judgment are reversed.

GUDERITZ v. BOADWAY BROS.

(Civ. 2605.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1918.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5)—COLLISIONS—IDENTITY OF VEHICLE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by a bicyclist for personal injuries by being run into by a motor truck, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that the truck belonged to defendant.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸995—WEIGHT OF EVIDENCE.

The appellate court has no concern with the question of the preponderance of testimony.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5)—COLLISIONS—NEGLIGENCE—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by a bicyclist, injured by a truck coming up behind him, evidence held sufficient to sustain a finding that defendant was negligent.

4. DAMAGES ⟸132(1)—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

It cannot be held that a verdict for $2,500 was excessive for a boy of 10 years, who was knocked unconscious, bled from his head, mouth, and forehead, and was confined to his bed for 1½ weeks, and was changed from a bright intelligent, and dependable boy into a dull, stupid listless, and forgetful one.

5. New Trial ⟸102(1)—Newly Discovered Evidence—Diligence.

A new trial should not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence, where it is not shown why the testimony of the witness could not have been produced at the trial, if a diligent effort had been made to procure it.

6. New Trial ⟸104(1)—Newly Discovered Evidence—Cumulative Evidence.

Where newly discovered evidence is simply cumulative, a new trial should be granted only where such evidence, if it had been presented on the trial, would probably have produced a different result.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by John Guderitz, Jr., an infant, by Leonard L. Riccardi, his guardian ad litem, against Boadway Bros., a corporation. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hahn & Hahn, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Ticknor & Carter and George S. Carter, all of Pasadena, for respondent.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, after verdict for the plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff as a result of the negligence of the defendant.

The plaintiff, a boy of 10 years, was riding a bicycle easterly on Colorado street in the city of Pasadena, between 11 and 12 o'clock in the forenoon, and was riding on the right-hand side of the street, within 3 or 4 feet of the curb. An automobile truck loaded with furniture overtook him from the rear, and in attempting to pass him collided with him and threw him to the pavement. The injuries suffered by him were due to the fall on the pavement.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to establish the identity of the truck as one belonging to defendant. Counsel say:

"We submit that the preponderance of the testimony does not show that the truck in question was the truck of the defendant."

Of course, this court has no concern with the question of the preponderance of the testimony. It is not within our province to weigh the evidence and determine where the preponderance lies. The only question for our determination in this connection is: Was there evidence which, if given its fullest effect in support of the verdict, was legally sufficient to support a finding in favor of plaintiff upon this issue? We find that one witness, who saw the accident, positively identified the truck as one belonging to the defendant, and further stated that it had defendant's name painted upon its side. Another witness also identified it as defendant's truck, though not so positively. The fact that his testimony was somewhat shaken upon cross-examination might well have been argued to the jury, but is of no importance here. The testimony was amply sufficient, if believed by the jury, to support a finding in favor of the plaintiff upon this issue.

[3] It is contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the implied finding of negligence on the part of the driver of the truck. One witness, who at the time of the accident was driving easterly on Colorado street, about half a block in the rear of the plaintiff, testified that the truck in question passed her going at the rate of about 30 miles per hour; that—

"They turned in and then out again to the left, and went in front of me, and then turned out again. When they turned out again the boy was lying on the pavement. The truck did not stop."

Another witness testified that no horn was blown, and further described the accident as follows:

"I should say the truck was from 3 to 4 feet from the curb when I first saw it. The truck swerved in nearer the curb when it struck the boy. I do not think it could have helped see the boy. There were two men on the truck. They were looking ahead as far as I could see. The truck crowded the boy into the curb. When the boy was hit, he did not have a chance to get onto the sidewalk, so you can judge how close the truck must have been."

This testimony was clearly sufficient to support the finding of negligence, and the circumstance that some discrepancy was developed in the testimony of these two witnesses upon cross-examination was a consideration which addressed itself to the jury in the court below, but is of no moment here.

[4] Appellant contends that the verdict, which was in the sum of $2,500, is excessive, and that the evidence wholly fails to show that the plaintiff suffered any such amount of damages.

"It is only where the verdict is so grossly disproportionate to any reasonable limit of compensation warranted by the facts, as to shock the sense of justice, and raise at once a strong presumption that it is based on prejudice or passion rather than sober judgment, that the judge is at liberty to interpose his judgment as against that of the jury." Harrison v. Sutter St. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 156, 164, 47 Pac. 1019, 1021.

Giving to the evidence, as we must, its fullest effect in support of the verdict, we find that the plaintiff, when picked up some minutes after the accident, was unconscious and bleeding from his head and mouth and forehead; that he was confined to his bed for about a week and a half; that after the accident he went to the public school only a short time; that before the accident he was bright, alert, active, intelligent, industrious, and dependable; that thereafter he was dull, stupid, listless, and forgetful, and suffered from headaches and dizziness, from all of which he had never suffered prior to the accident; that the latter conditions obtained right up to the time of the trial. If the jury had specially found that plaintiff sustained injuries resulting in physical and mental impairment of a permanent character, we could not say that such finding was not supported by this evidence, and under these circumstances we cannot say the verdict is "so grossly disproportionate as to shock the sense of justice or raise a presumption that it is based on prejudice or passion."

[5, 6] It is contended that the trial court should have granted a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. This evidence, as disclosed by the affidavit, consisted of the statements of two former employés of the Lyon-McKinney-Smith Company of Los Angeles to the effect that said company owned a truck closely answering to the description of the truck involved in this accident, and that said truck made a trip to Pasadena loaded with furniture on the morning of the accident. The question of the identity of the truck involved in the accident was one of the principal issues at the trial. No sufficient reason is disclosed by the affidavit why the testimony of these two witnesses could not have been produced at the trial, if a diligent effort had been made to procure it.

"The claim of newly discovered evidence warranting a new trial is universally looked upon by the courts with distrust and disfavor. Public policy demands that a litigant should be compelled to exhaust every reasonable effort to produce at his trial all existing evidence in his behalf." People v. Byrne, 160 Cal. 217, 225, 116 Pac. 521, 525.

"In order to obtain a new trial because of newly discovered evidence, the applicant must show that he used reasonable diligence to discover it prior to the trial and that he failed to discover it and did not, in fact, know of it in time to produce it, or in time to apply for a continuance in order that he might produce it, at the trial." Pollard v. Rebman, 162 Cal. 633, 636, 124 Pac. 235, 237; Gallatin v. Corning Irrigation Co., 163 Cal. 405, 420, 126 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 74.

Furthermore, this evidence, if it had been produced, would have been merely cumulative to other evidence which was produced by defendant upon the trial. The question before the trial court, where the newly discovered evidence is simply cumulative, is—

"whether if such evidence had been presented on the trial of the cause it would probably have produced a different result. The determination of that question is peculiarly within the province of the trial court. It is a matter addressed wholly to its discretion, and as a general proposition whether its ruling is favorable or unfavorable on a motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence which appears to be merely cumulative, that discretion will not be reviewed, except for manifest abuse." Cahill v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 135, 138 Pac. 712, 715.

There is here no showing of abuse of discretion by the trial court in denying the motion for new trial on this ground.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

PEOPLE v. NICHOLS. (Cr. 454.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 2, 1918.)

1. BURGLARY ⊂⊃41(1) — EVIDENCE — SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence, while not insufficient as a matter of law to support a verdict of guilty, held not so overwhelming or of so convincing a character in proof of defendant's connection with burglary as to compel reviewing court to say that no other verdict could have been reasonably found.

2. CRIMINAL LAW ⊂⊃1172(2)—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTION—REVERSIBLE ERROR.

In view of slight evidence of defendant's guilt, it was prejudicial error to instruct, in substance, that unexplained possession of goods immediately or soon after burglary is presumptive evidence, not only that defendant stole the goods, but that he made use of the means by which access to them was obtained.

3. BURGLARY ⊂⊃29—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The presumption of guilt arising from the unexplained possession of goods obtained by means of burglary is insufficient to cast the burden of proving innocence upon accused.

4. BURGLARY ⊂⊃38, 42(1)—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Unexplained possession of goods obtained by burglary is a circumstance proper for the jury to consider, but is insufficient to justify a verdict of guilty.

5. BURGLARY ⊂⊃46(7)—UNEXPLAINED POSSESSION—INSTRUCTION—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in prosecution for burglary, held insufficient to justify the giving of instruction with reference to unexplained possession of the goods obtained by the burglary.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; D. M. Young, Judge.

D. C. Nichols was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Joseph H. Tam, Walter F. Lynch, and Frank A. Henning, all of Stockton, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was, by information filed by the district attorney of San Joaquin county, in the superior court thereof, jointly charged with one John Wilson with the crime of burglary. Against him, as was likewise done as to his codefendant, a prior conviction of burglary was charged in said information. Upon his arraignment, he admitted the prior conviction charged in the information and pleaded not guilty to the crime for which he was informed against. Upon a trial of the charge, he was convicted, and it is from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial that these appeals are prosecuted.

Two points for a reversal are made, viz.: (1) That the evidence does not support the verdict; (2) that the court erred to the prejudice of the accused in one of its instructions.

The crime charged was committed in the city of Stockton, at between 7 and 8 o'clock of the evening of February 26, 1918. The house alleged to have been burglariously entered was, at the time of the commission of the crime, occupied by one W. L. Walker and wife. There were taken from one of the rooms of the house a suit of underclothes, five or six shirts, a finger ring, a watch, a bracelet, and some cigars.

It appears that Bernard Phelan, a special agent or officer of the Southern Pacific Company at Stockton, left that city on the night of February 26th, taking the 11:15 p. m. train, and went to the town of Tracy, a railroad town situated a few miles south of Stockton. Upon the stopping of said train at Tracy, the officer observed the defendant and his codefendant, Wilson, in the act of leaving the "gondola car," attached to the said train. Wilson was carrying a valise or suit case, and the defendant was carrying no packages of any kind. Phelan took the two men to the baggageroom of the railroad station and questioned them as to where they came from, etc. The defendant said that he came from Stockton on the train referred to and that he and his companion, Wilson, met for the first time on said train. Phelan, assisted by another railroad officer, who was present when the two men were taken charge of, opened and examined the valise and therein found a suit of clothes, a pair of pantaloons, and several boxes of cigars. The two men were then taken to Stockton by Phelan and there lodged in the county jail.

One Solomon Silver, a pawnbroker and secondhand dealer in the city of Stockton, testified that, on the night of the burglary and within a very brief time after the crime was shown to have been committed, a party came into his place of business, and, giving the name of Brown, offered for sale a watch and a finger ring, which were identified by Walker, the owner, as among the articles taken from his house by the party or parties entering it. Silver bought the watch and the ring, and his son, who was present at the pawnshop at the time of the transaction, made a memorandum, in a book kept by Silver for that purpose, of the transaction and inserted in said book a general description of the seller and the clothes that he then wore. Said Silver further testified that he was quite certain that Nichols was the party who sold him the watch and the ring. Silver's son was not so certain that Nichols was the man.

The defendant testified that he had nothing whatever to do with the commission of the burglary and positively denied that he sold the watch and the ring to Silver. Nichols further testified that at Stockton he took the train from which he was seen to leave by officer Phelan at Tracy; that he had never before met his codefendant, Wilson, until the latter boarded the "gondola car," in which he was riding, at Lathrop, a station situated between Stockton and Tracy.

Wilson, Nichols' codefendant, admitted that he committed the burglary and took from Walker's house a number of articles, among which were the watch and the ring referred to, but positively declared that Nichols had absolutely nothing to do with the burglary and was not the man who sold the watch and the ring to Silver. Wilson further testified, corroborating Nichols, that the latter and he had never before met until he (Wilson) boarded the "gondola car" at Lathrop. Wilson also testified that, within less than an hour after he entered Walker's house and took therefrom a number of articles, he met on one of the streets of Stockton a man with whom he had previously become acquainted and known to him as "Brownie"; that, on meeting "Brownie," he requested him to take the watch and the ring to some pawnshop and sell them; that "Brownie" did take the watch and the ring to Silver's pawnshop and there disposed of those articles. This man "Brownie" was not produced as a witness at the trial of the defendant. In this connection it may be added that, a few days after his arrest, Wilson stated to the assistant district attorney, in the presence and hearing of others, that it was he who sold Silver the watch and the ring.

[1] The above is a statement in substance of all the evidence that was brought before the jury by both the prosecution and the defense. We would not say as a matter of law that the evidence does not afford sufficient support to the verdict, but we are required to say that that presented by the people in support of the theory of the guilt of the defendant is by no means overwhelming or of so convincing a character in proof of the defendant's connection with the crime charged as to compel a reviewing court to say that no other verdict under the evidence could reasonably have been returned. The whole case of the people, it will be noted, practically rests upon the identification by the witness Solomon Silver of the defendant as the party who sold him the watch and the ring, and Silver's testimony does not appear to be altogether satisfactory. Of course, there were the other circumstances, viz., that the defendant was in Stockton when the burglary was committed and that he was found in the company of Wilson, who admitted responsibility for the crime; yet it is manifest that these circumstances acquire their evidentiary importance largely from Solomon Silver's identification of the defendant as the man who sold him the articles mentioned and would not, taken alone, be regarded as of sufficient force to justify the conviction of the defendant of complicity in the crime.

Thus we have reviewed the evidentiary features of the case, not because we think that there is not enough in the evidence to support the verdict, but because of an instruction which the court incorporated into its charge to the jury and to which the defendant here makes the objection that it not only involves an erroneous statement of the law, but that it was highly prejudicial to the accused. The instruction thus reads:

"The court instructs you that where goods have been feloniously taken by means of a burglary, and either immediately or soon after are found in the possession of a person who gives a false account, or refuses to give any account, of the manner in which he came into the possession, proof of such possession and guilty conduct is presumptive evidence, not only that he stole the goods, but that he made use of the means by which access to them was obtained."

[2] There can hardly be any doubt that the instruction does not contain a correct statement of any rule of law as applicable to criminal cases, and there can be no less reason for doubting that, in view of the slight evidence of the defendant's guilt of the crime of which he stands convicted, the instruction must have operated prejudicially against the accused in the minds of the jury.

[3, 4] If, by said instruction, the court intended to declare, as reasonably the instruction may be interpreted to mean, that the law is that the unexplained possession of goods shown to have been stolen from a building burglariously entered for that purpose is conclusive evidence of the guilt of the defendant of the crime of burglary, or that he is guilty of having stolen the goods, then clearly it is obnoxious to the objection that it involves an instruction upon questions of fact and is consequently an invasion of the constitutional function of the jury and to the further objection that there is no such presumption of law. If, however, this was not the purpose of the instruction, or, assuming that it could not be so construed as to convey such a meaning, still it is plainly subject to the objection that it involves the statement or at least tends to convey the notion that the presumption of guilt arising from the unexplained possession of stolen goods is sufficiently satisfactory as in proof of guilt to cast the burden of proving his innocence upon the accused. Of course, that is not the law. It is not true, as a legal proposition, nor does it necessarily follow as a matter of fact, that a party who, shortly after the crime, is committed, is found in the possession of stolen goods, obtained by some one by means of burglary, and fails or refuses to give a satisfactory account of such possession, committed the burglary or even obtained the goods dishonestly. As far as the law has ever gone or can logically go with respect to the fact of the possession of stolen goods by a person accused of the stealing of such goods is that the fact of such possession, unexplained, is evidence which it is proper for the jury to consider in determining the question of the guilt or innocence of the accused. In other words, such possession, unexplained, merely affords, if any at all, a very remote inference of guilt, and whether such inference may acquire any probative significance or evidentiary value in the establishment of the guilt of the accused must depend upon the character or nature of other incriminatory circumstances, if any be shown. At any rate, as above stated, and as the Supreme Court declared in People v. Boxer, 137 Cal. 563, 564, 70 Pac. 671, 672:

"Evidence of the recent unexplained possession of stolen property, standing alone, is not sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, even in a case of larceny, and the court is not justified in intimating to the jury that a 'definite presumption of guilt' could arise upon any such state of facts."

[5] It may be added that the instruction is vulnerable in another view, and that is that there is no evidence to which it is applicable. The only evidence in the record that the defendant ever had possession of the watch and the ring is that which was brought in through the testimony of the pawnbroker. There is no testimony that the pawnbroker asked the defendant how he obtained the articles or from whom he obtained them, assuming that the defendant was the party who sold them to the pawnbroker. After his arrest, the defendant at all times, not only denied complicity in the burglary, but denied that it was he who sold the watch and the ring to the pawnbroker. His position, therefore, was such that there was no occasion for him to account for the possession of the property or to refuse to do so. There was, in short, no explanation for him to make with reference to the articles. If he was the party who took the articles to the pawnbroker and the latter had asked him where and how he came into their possession and he had either refused to explain or was shown to have given a false account of how he obtained possession of the property, or if he had been apprehended by an officer or the owner of the property with the articles in his possession and had refused to explain his possession or given an untruthful statement thereof, then, in either event, we would have a case where a properly framed instruction as to the unexplained possession of stolen property would have been pertinent. But no such a situation as is covered by either of the supposititious cases is presented here.

The court's charge was otherwise a correct and fair statement of the principles applicable to the case as it was disclosed by the proofs, and, if the evidence of guilt had been so clearly shown as to warrant the conclusion that no other verdict but that of guilty could justly have been found and returned, it is very probable that the erroneous instruction above considered could well be declared to have been innocuous in its effect upon the substantial rights of the accused. But, as stated, we cannot, in view of the very slight proof of guilt made against the accused, see how we may justify ourselves in saying that the instruction did not result in preventing a fair and impartial consideration of the case by the jury.

The judgment and the order appealed from are therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

ROSENBERG v. RETAIL CLERKS' ASS'N, LOCAL 428, et al. (Civ. 2523.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1918.)

1. INJUNCTION ⟸101(2) — STRIKES — BOYCOTTS.

While coercion, menace, or intimidation cannot be used to enforce a boycott, strikers may, where no contractual obligation interferes, present their cause by peaceful persuasion and argument.

2. INJUNCTION ⟸101(3) — STRIKES—PICKETING.

Picketing by strikers in its very nature tends to and does accomplish its object by the illegitimate means of physical intimidation and fear, and will be enjoined.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Samuel Rosenberg against the Retail Clerks' Association, Local 428, J. W. O'Sullivan, president, A. Franklin, secretary, and others. From a judgment granting only part of the relief demanded, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

E. M. Rosenthal, of San Jose, for appellant.

Grant R. Bennett, of San Jose, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. Plaintiff herein sought and obtained an injunction against defendants, the Retail Clerks' Association and others, preventing them from harassing or obstructing him in the operation and conduct of his business. Being dissatisned with the form and extent of the judgment, plaintiff has appealed therefrom, and he claims that such judgment does not afford him the particular and specific relief prayed for by him in his complaint, and that it is not as favorable to him as the findings of the court warrant.

The record consists of the judgment roll alone. The complaint charges that the defendants, in pursuance of a confederation and combination among themselves, attempted to injure and ruin plaintiff's business by placing and maintaining, immediately in front of his store, pickets, wearing badges, who accost and call out to possible patrons and persons passing by:

"This is an unfair house; it is unfair to organized labor. Don't patronize it."

It is further alleged that by the presence of said pickets, and the statements made by them, many of plaintiff's patrons have been intimidated, and in consequence thereof have ceased to and have refrained from patronizing him, and that they will continue so to do as long as such pickets are maintained in the immediate vicinity of plaintiff's store, to his irreparable damage; the defendants being financially irresponsible. The prayer of the complaint asks that defendants be restrained and enjoined from further commission of the acts complained of.

The answer consists of general denials. After trial the court announced:

"That permanent injunction issue in the form of the modified order made as reported in Goldberg-Bowen Case, 149 Cal. Reports at page 435."

Thereafter findings of fact and conclusions of law and judgment were presented by plaintiff and adopted by the court, with the single exception of a finding to the effect that the conduct complained of intimidated customers and constituted a threat or menace. The judgment as given restrained defendants from interfering with, harassing, or obstructing plaintiff in the conduct of his business by means of threats, menaces, or intimidation through pickets in or about plaintiff's place of business.

It is the claim of plaintiff that the judgment as given means nothing and is without force, for the reason that the acts complained of are not found by the court to constitute either a threat, menace, or intimidation, and that he is entitled to a judgment upon the issue that patrons were intimidated by the admitted utterances of the pickets, and on account of such intimidation refrained from patronizing him. It is for this reason that the claim is made that the judgment is not supported by the findings and should be set aside.

[1, 2] The question presented involves the subject of peaceful picketing. The right of united labor to enforce a boycott by means of peaceable, oral persuasion, and to induce those sympathetic with such a cause to refrain or withhold their patronage from an employer, is one that has received extended consideration from the courts, and the decisions upon the subject are widely divergent. This principle, however, is not one of first impression in this state. The manner and extent to which organized labor may strike, the means that may be employed in furtherance thereof, and the respective rights of employer and employé, are subjects which have received elaborate consideration by our Supreme Court. Parkinson v. Building Trades Council, 154 Cal. 581, 98 Pac. 1027, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 550, 16 Ann. Cas. 1165; Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 103 Pac. 324; Goldberg-Bowen v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145, 9 Ann. Cas. 1219. It is unnecessary to discuss the principles reviewed and established in these cases, it being sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that while coercion, menace or intimidation cannot be resorted to for the purpose of enforcing a boycott, strikers have an unquestionable right, where no contractual obligation interferes, to present their cause by peaceful persuasion and argument. The question whether picketing is a peaceful and lawful means is one that has also received frequent judicial consideration. The cases in different jurisdictions are not harmonious upon the question. Some of the courts have recognized, or at least do not deny, that picketing may not be unlawful. The weight of authority, however, and the growing tendency, is to accept the contrary view, and to regard picketing as inherently illegal, for the reason that it is inseparably associated with acts that are indisputably illegal. Accordingly, it has been held that there is no such thing as peaceful picketing any more than there can be peaceful mobbing. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co. v. Gee (C. C.) 139 Fed. 582. In harmony with this view is the conclusion reached by our Supreme Court in Pierce v. Stablemen's Union, 156 Cal. 70, 103 Pac. 324, where it is held that equity will enjoin striking employés who have established a boycott against their former employer, from maintaining a picket about his place of business, upon the ground that a picket in its very nature tends to and does accomplish its object by the illegitimate means of physical intimidation and fear. See, also, Com. v. Hunt, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 111, 38 Am. Dec. 346; Barnes v. Chicago Typographical Union, 232 Ill. 424, 83 N. E. 940, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1018, 13 Ann. Cas. 54; In re Langell, 178 Mich. 305, 144 N. W. 841, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, and note.

This being so, it follows that as the trial court found that defendants committed the acts complained of judgment should have been rendered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, declaring that such acts constituted a threat or menace against plaintiff's customers, and defendants should have been enjoined against a continuance thereof. This was the issue raised by the pleadings, and, the finding having been in plaintiff's favor, he was entitled to a judgment declaring that his patrons were intimidated by the admitted acts, and on account of such intimidation were restrained from patronizing him. Under the judgment as rendered, defendants being merely prohibited from interfering with or obstructing plaintiff in the conduct of his business by means of threats, menace, or intimidation, plaintiff would be compelled in order to enforce his judgment to institute proceedings upon a charge of violating the injunction on the assumption that the acts complained of came within its terms. This was the only issue in the present case, and it should have been finally disposed of by the judgment.

From what we have said it follows that the judgment appealed from is too general in its terms and does not answer the requirements of the findings. It is therefore ordered that the lower court modify its judgment by entering one in favor of plaintiff in accordance with the findings of the court and in conformity with the views herein expressed, and with this modification the judgment is affirmed.

FILDEW v. SHATTUCK & NIMMO WAREHOUSE CO. (Civ. 2598.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃136(31) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — AS PROXIMATE CAUSE—JURY QUESTION.

Assuming that an inspector of elevators was negligent in not looking at a railing before grasping it to pull himself onto the floor from crosshead on elevator, he cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence, as a matter of law, unless the evidence establishes that he could have seen the defective condition of the railing if he had looked.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃136(27) — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

Whether an inspector of elevators was guilty of contributory negligence in not seeing that a railing which he took hold of to pull himself to a floor from the crosshead of an elevator was defective held for jury.

3. WITNESSES ⊂⊃37(1) — KNOWLEDGE OF FACTS.

In an action by an elevator inspector for personal injuries occasioned by the giving away of a railing when he was attempting to pull himself to a floor from crosshead of an elevator, sustaining an objection to a question "For what purpose were the guard rails around the elevator shaft originally put there?" was proper, where no foundation was laid by showing that the witness had any knowledge of the original construction.

4. TRIAL ⊂⊃194(16)—INSTRUCTIONS.

An instruction on right of plaintiff to assume that guard rail would stand strain of taking hold of it while he stepped off of top of cage of elevator held not one upon a question of fact, except such as were hypothetically stated therein, and thereby submitted to the jury for its determination.

5. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃136(23)—ELEVATOR RAILING—JURY QUESTION.

In an action by an inspector of elevators, injured by the giving away of a railing which he grasped while attempting to pull himself from the crosshead of an elevator onto a floor, whether the defendant was negligent in the construction of a railing which would give away when used in such manner held for the jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by R. C. Fildew against the Shattuck & Nimmo Warehouse Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and an order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Karl Lobdell and Ray E. Nimmo, both of Los Angeles (Douglas L. Edmonds, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

R. T. Lightfoot, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. The defendant appeals from a judgment against it and from an order denying its motion for a new trial, after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff as a result of defendant's negligence.

Defendant was the owner of a warehouse, three stories in height, in Los Angeles, Cal., in the central portion of which was constructed a freight elevator consisting of an open platform about 14 feet square, attached by uprights at either end to a crosshead, consisting of a 12 by 12 beam, 14 feet in length, each end of which fitted into guides which extended vertically up and down the sides of the elevator shaft, the guides being fastened to vertical beams known as guideposts. The crosshead was about 10 feet above the platform of the elevator, which had no other covering or inclosure. The elevator shaft was not inclosed, except that there were at each floor sliding gates opposite the north and south sides of the opening and two railings on each of the east and west sides. The railings were respectively 1½ and 3 feet above the floor, and consisted of pieces of 2 by 4 scantling, one end of which was nailed to an upright support at the corner of the elevator shaft and the other end to the inside of the guidepost or upright beam upon which the guides for the elevator were fastened.

Plaintiff was an inspector of elevators in the employ of the Otis Elevator Company, which was under contract with the defendants to inspect, oil, and grease these elevators, and it was while so engaged that he was injured. He had just completed greasing the guides on one side of the elevator shaft, to do which it was necessary to stand upon the end of the crosshead. The elevator had been stopped, with its platform about 3 feet above the level of the first floor, for the purpose of unloading some freight upon a truck standing there. This left the top of the crosshead about 20 inches below the second floor. In attempting to step from the crosshead to the second floor plaintiff took hold of the top guard rail and, placing all his weight thereon, attempted to lift himself up to the second floor. The nails which held the guard rail in place gave way, and plaintiff was precipitated to the platform of the elevator, sustaining the injuries for which he sued.

Appellant's first contention is that the trial court erred in overruling defendant's motion for nonsuit for the reason, it contends, that it appears from the evidence that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. This is predicated on plaintiff's own testimony, portions of which are as follows:

"When we finished greasing then I attempted to get off, on the second floor, and in so doing I had to step up on the floor, and take hold of the rail. I put one foot up to take hold of the rail; had to take the other foot off of the crosshead and put it on the floor, and when I did that the rail gave way and let me drop down headfirst onto the floor of the elevator. * * * As I was standing on the cross-beam and before I stepped over onto the second floor, I was in such a position that I could see that top railing. I could see how it was fastened to the beam. I did not look at it to see how it was fastened. I took it for granted that it was fastened right. * * * At the time I put my right hand up to take hold of the rail I did not test it at all to see if it was secure. I then followed it with my right foot without testing it to see whether it was securely fastened or not. I took it for granted the rail was securely fastened without even looking or testing it."

It further appeared that plaintiff was an experienced elevator inspector and had been engaged in regularly inspecting this elevator for several months prior to the accident; that he had never before gotten off this elevator at the second floor; that on previous occasions he had alighted from it in the same manner at the top floor; that this was the most practicable method of getting off from the crosshead; that the guard rails at the top floor were apparently of the same construction as those at the second floor.

[1] Appellant very earnestly contends that it clearly appears from this testimony, not only that plaintiff was not exercising reasonable care, but that he was not exercising any care at all; that a rational mind could not well draw any other conclusion therefrom, and that therefore he was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, and the nonsuit should have been granted. But proof of plaintiff's negligence is not alone sufficient to warrant the granting of a nonsuit, however clear that proof may be. In addition thereto, it must further appear that plaintiff's negligence contributed proximately to his injuries. Conceding that plaintiff's negligence is here clearly established, we must then consider the further question whether it appeared with similar certainty that if he had looked he would have discovered the defect which caused the accident. Unless the evidence establishes this second element also to such a degree of certainty that but one conclusion can be rationally drawn therefrom, this court cannot, and the trial court could not, say that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.

[2] As to the manner in which the guard rail was fastened, the evidence is conflicting. A witness for the plaintiff testified that it was fastened with four eightpenny nails driven through the two-inch thickness of the rail and thence into the upright, from which it follows that they projected into the upright only about one-half inch. Witnesses for the defendant testified that it was fastened with thirtypenny spikes. This latter testimony, of course, must be disregarded in considering the motion for nonsuit. Plaintiff's witness testified on this subject:

"After the accident I examined that one end [of the guard rail], and only found four eightpenny nails in it. I found this end that pulled away with Mr. Fildew had been hammered; that the nails were sunk in, also split the wood. It was a crack. I don't know how old it was; it looked to me from all appearances that it was an old crack."

From this somewhat meager discription we cannot say that it clearly appears as a matter of law that if the plaintiff had examined the guard rail even with great care, before trusting his weight to it, he would have discovered that it was insecurely fastened. We conclude, therefore, that the motion for nonsuit was properly denied. In each of the cases cited by appellant in support of its contention it appears, either that the plaintiff had actual knowledge of the defect which caused his injury, or that the nature of it was such that it would have been obvious to him upon even a casual inspection. This circumstance sufficiently distinguishes those cases from the case at bar.

[3] Appellant contends that the trial court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objection to the following question put by defendant to the witness W. J. Nimmo:

"Q. I will ask you for what purpose the guard rails around this elevator shaft were originally put there?"

Appellant points out that the question of the purpose of the original construction of the guard rails was put in issue by allegations of the complaint which were denied by the answer. Conceding, therefore, that the question was relevant, the objection was nevertheless properly sustained for the reason that no foundation was laid by showing that the witness had any knowledge respecting the purpose of the original construction of the guard rails, except as he may have gathered such knowledge from conversations with people who installed the elevator, which, of course, would be hearsay. This witness was permitted, as were other witnesses for defendant, to testify that during the ten years or more during which the guard rail in question had been in place it had always been used for the purpose of preventing any person from falling into the elevator shaft, and for no other purpose, to their knowledge; and plaintiff himself testified that such was the purpose for which such railings were usually installed. It nowhere appears that if the witness had been permitted to answer this particular question, he would have disclosed any other or different purpose.

[4] Complaint is made of the giving by the court of the following instruction at the request of plaintiff:

"While the plaintiff may have been employed to inspect the elevator of the defendant, yet, if you shall believe, from the evidence, that it was not the duty of the plaintiff to inspect the guard rails and the shaft of the said elevator, he had a right to assume that the guard rail in question, at the time of his injury, was in a reasonably safe condition, and that the same would stand such a reasonable strain upon the same, such as the taking hold of the same with his hands for the purpose of enabling him to step from the top of the cage to the second floor of the building, provided the taking hold of and use of the same was with the exercise of ordinary care and caution on his part."

It is urged that the portion italicized amounts to an instruction of the jury upon a question of fact, and is equivalent to telling the jury that if the plaintiff in the exercise of ordinary care took hold of the railing for the purpose of enabling him to step from the top of the cage to the second floor of the building, such constituted a reasonable strain upon the railing. This instruction is somewhat involved, and not well calculated to aid the jury by clarifying the issues submitted to it; but, as we construe it, it amounts to no more than saying that if the strain to which plaintiff subjected the railing was an exercise of reasonable care, then it could not be held by them to be an unreasonable strain. This does not appear to us to be an instruction as to a matter of fact upon which the jury was to find, except as the facts were hypothetically stated therein, and thereby submitted to the jury for its determination.

Defendant contends that the court erred in refusing to give instruction No. 23, requested by the defendant. This was substantially in the language of an instruction approved by the Supreme Court in Baddeley v. Shea, 114 Cal. 1, set forth at page 5 thereof, 45 Pac. 990, 991 (33 L. R. A. 747, 55 Am. St. Rep. 56). Conceding, as we must, the instruction to have been a proper one in that case, it does not necessarily follow that it should have been given here. In that case the negligence upon which the plaintiff relied did not consist at all in any claim of negligent construction, but rather in the failure to inspect for defects which might thereafter arise by reason of rot and decay. As the court said:

"It is not pretended by respondent that there was any defect in the construction of the steps or platform, except that he contends there was not sufficient ventilation under them."

Here the negligence claimed does not rest at all upon the failure to inspect, but upon a claim of improper and insufficient construction in the first instance, and to these issues the instruction in question was clearly inapplicable.

[5] Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the implied finding that defendant was guilty of negligence because, it urges, there is no evidence in the record to support the conclusion that the railing was insufficiently fastened for the purpose for which it was ordinarily used, or for which the defendant could reasonably anticipate it would be used. In other words, appellant contends that the guard rail in question was used, and was intended to be used, only for the purpose of protecting persons from inadvertently walking or falling into the elevator shaft, and the fact that it gave way under the strain placed upon it by plaintiff does not even tend to prove its insufficiency for the purpose stated. We think, however, that the jury was warranted in concluding that a railing of such an apparently substantial character was designed and intended to serve some purpose beyond that of a mere warning sign, and that if the jurors believed, as they had a right to, the testimony of plaintiff's witness as to the manner in which it was fastened, they might conclude therefrom that it was inadequately constructed for any purpose to which it might reasonably be put. Each of the cases cited by appellant in support of this contention is distinguishable from the case at bar. Here the court properly instructed the jury that even though the railing was defective in construction, yet if they found that the plaintiff applied it to a purpose requiring greater strength than that which was intended, and that his fall was in consequence of such application and in using the railing, as plaintiff did use it, he was not exercising ordinary care, no negligence or breach of duty can be imputed to defendant on account of such defect in the construction thereof. We cannot say that the implied finding of the jury in response to that instruction is without any support in the evidence.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; JAMES, J.

TREMPER v. TREMPER. (Civ. 2518, 2533.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 30, 1919.)

1. DIVORCE ⟸231, 310—ALIMONY.

Under Civ. Code, § 139, a divorced husband is required to maintain the children only during their minority, and the wife only while she remains single or until she dies.

2. DIVORCE ⟸249(1) — ALIMONY — REAL ESTATE.

Under Civ. Code, § 139, the court has no power to divide real property; there being no community property, and the wife having contributed nothing.

3. DIVORCE ⟸209 — TEMPORARY ALIMONY—AMOUNT.

Under Civ. Code, § 137, temporary alimony should be allowed only to cover current needs of wife, and fact that wife has incurred debts is not sufficient to authorize an award, unless the payment of such debts is necessary to enable the wife to further prosecute her action or defense.

4. DIVORCE ⟸214(3)—TEMPORARY ALIMONY—APPLICATION FOR.

To entitle a wife to temporary alimony or to a modification of an order granting temporary alimony, her affidavit must show the items and amounts of her needs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Action for divorce by Criss W. Tremper against Eva Edna Tremper. From an interlocutory decree of divorce on defendant's cross-complaint awarding permanent maintenance to the wife, and from an order made after judgment awarding and increasing alimony pending appeal, the plaintiff prosecutes appeals. Judgment and order reversed.

Short & Sutherland and Carl E. Lindsay, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Gallaher & Aten, of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This case involves two appeals. The first (No. 2518) is an appeal from an interlocutory decree of divorce awarding permanent maintenance to the wife, and the second (No. 2533) is an appeal from an order made after judgment awarding and increasing alimony pending the first appeal. We will consider them in the order stated.

1. The husband brought an action for divorce, and the wife answered and filed a cross-complaint. Judgment went for the wife on her cross-complaint; the husband appealed, and has brought up the record under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. The appellant challenges the relief awarded to the respondent. The record shows that there was no community property, and that the wife had no separate property; but that the husband had real and personal property variously estimated as amounting to sums ranging from $65,000 to $80,000. There is no claim made that any of the said property was bought with moneys contributed by the defendant in whole or in part.

There were three minor children all residing with the defendant, who, prior to the commencement of the action, had left the family residence and had rented a house and made a home for herself and children. The plaintiff continued to occupy the former residence. In the interlocutory decree the court awarded to the defendant "the divided one-half" of the property, real and personal, excepting therefrom lands in Lake county of the value of $4,700.

Under the foregoing facts, the decree must be supported, if at all, by the provisions of section 139, Civil Code. That section provides as follows:

"Where a divorce is granted for an offense of the husband, the court may compel him to provide for the maintenance of the children of the marriage, and to make such suitable allowance to the wife for her support, during her life, or for a shorter period, as the court may deem just, having regard to the circumstances of the parties respectively; and the court may, from time to time, modify its orders in these respects."

[1] It will be noted at once that the section does not expressly confer power to transfer the title to real or personal property; it empowers the court to compel the husband "to provide for the maintenance of the children," and "to make such suitable allowance to the wife for her support"; and empowers the court from "time to time" to modify its orders in these respects. The plaintiff's duty toward his children is to maintain them "during their minority." As each child attains his majority, that duty will terminate.

The plaintiff's duty toward his wife is to support her while she remains single or until she dies. If she marries again, or if she dies, that duty toward her will terminate. As these contingencies may arise in any case, it is provided: "The court may, from time to time, modify its orders in these respects."

[2] A decree similar in form to the decree which we are now considering, but which was rendered by consent, was upheld (Thomas v. Thomas, 64 Mo. 353); and, where the wife's separate funds had been invested in the property, such decrees were sustained (Luick v. Luick, 132 Iowa, 302, 109 N. W. 783; Klekamp v. Klekamp, 275 Ill. 98, 113 N. E. 852, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 663, 666); and, where the property had been acquired through the joint labors of both husband and wife, such a decree was sustained (Markowski v. Markowski, 44 Wash. 594, 87 Pac. 914); and, again, where the statutes were so broad as to reasonably support the exercise of the power, such decrees have been sustained (Powell v. Campbell, 20 Nev. 232, 20 Pac. 156, 2 L. R. A. 615, 19 Am. St. Rep. 350; Miller v. Miller, 38 Wash. 605, 80 Pac. 816). But, where the statute on the subject was no broader than section 139, Civil Code, supra, the decisions are to the effect that the trial court should have made an allowance in money, and had no power to divide the properties in kind. Doe v. Doe, 52 Hun, 405, 5 N. Y. Supp. 514; Cizek v. Cizek, 69 Neb. 797, 96 N. W. 657, 99 N. W. 28, 5 Ann. Cas. 464 and note; Reynolds v. Reynolds, 68 W. Va. 15, 69 S. E. 381, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 889 and note; Ecker v. Ecker, 22 Okl. 873, 98 Pac. 918, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421. While it is not erroneous to make an allowance of money in a lump sum for the support of the wife (Robinson v. Robinson, 79 Cal. 511, 27 Pac. 1095; Huellmantel v. Huellmantel, 124 Cal. 583, 57 Pac. 582), it is better practice to make a monthly allowance to the end that the court can, "from time to time, modify its orders in these respects" (Doerle v. Doerle, 96 Misc. Rep. 72, 159 N. Y. Supp. 637, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 248).

It follows that the decree, as rendered, was in excess of the power of the trial court. Nothing herein said is opposed to the rule stated in Robinson v. Robinson, 79 Cal. 511, 21 Pac. 1095. In that case the trial court awarded to the wife a gross sum for the support of herself and children and made the allowance a lien on the husband's lands. That decree is clearly supported by the provisions of section 140, Civil Code. Gaston v. Gaston, 114 Cal. 542, 546, 46 Pac. 609, 55 Am. St. Rep. 86; Huellmantel v. Huellmantel, 117 Cal. 407, 49 Pac. 574; Id., 124 Cal. 583, 57 Pac. 582; Kerr v. Kerr, 216 Pa. 641, 66 Atl. 107, 9 Ann. Cas. 89 and note.

The record contains some adverse rulings as to the settlement of the pleadings. As the case must go back for a new trial, we think it advisable to direct that each party be allowed to make such amendments to his pleadings as he may be advised.

The record shows numerous adverse rulings on the admission or rejection of evidence; but on a new trial those matters may not arise again, and we think it is not necessary to discuss each of those rulings.

[3, 4] 2. After the interlocutory decree was entered, an application was made to the trial court for an allowance for the maintenance of the defendant and her children pending the appeal from the interlocutory judgment. In her affidavit in support of her application the defendant avers that on July 19, 1916, an order for maintenance was made in the sum of $100 per month, and that the same had been paid. The second application was made December 11, 1916. There is not in the defendant's affidavit, or in any other part of the record, any showing as to the needs of the wife and children; nor, if the first allowance was deficient in amount, is there any showing as to the items of, or the amount of, the deficiency. She alleged that her husband was in receipt of a net income of $10,000. He denied that statement and alleged that his net income was not to exceed $4,000. After the hearing was had, the court made an order awarding her $250 for herself and children, $100 for costs, and $350 for her attorney fees. The plaintiff appealed from that order and has brought up the record under the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. The power to make such orders must be found in section 137 of the Civil Code. That section provides:

"When an action for divorce is pending, the court may, in its discretion, require the husband to pay as alimony any money necessary to enable the wife to support herself and her children, or to prosecute or defend the action. * * *"

It will be noted that the allowances to be made under that section are such as are "necessary," etc. So far as we are advised, all of the authorities are to the effect that such allowances are to be made only for the purpose of covering the needs of the wife and her children. 14 Cyc. 749, 752, and 758; 2 Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, § 950; Schammel v. Schammel, 74 Cal. 36, 15 Pac. 364; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16 Pac. 345; Mudd v. Mudd, 98 Cal. 320, 322, 33 Pac. 114; Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 493, 495, 35 Pac. 87; Stewart v. Stewart, 156 Cal. 655, 105 Pac. 955. Viewed as an initial proceeding the defendant's affidavit should have shown the items and amounts of her needs. Viewed as an amendment or modification of the order of July 19, 1916, the rule is the same. Smith v. Smith, 147 Cal. 143, 147, 81 Pac. 411; Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 48, 16 Pac. 345. An award of temporary alimony should be made to cover the current needs of the wife and should not be allowed to take the place of a final decree disposing of the property rights.

The fact that the wife has incurred debts is not sufficient to authorize an award for necessary expenses (Loveren v. Loveren, 100 Cal. 493, 35 Pac. 87), but the further fact must appear that the payment of such debts is necessary to enable the wife to further prosecute her action or defense (Gay v. Gay, 146 Cal. 237, 242, 79 Pac. 885; Beadleston v. Beadleston, 103 N. Y. 402, 405, 8 N. E. 735).

It follows that the judgment and order should be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: LENNON, P. J.; BEASLY, Judge pro tem.

FIMPLE v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.

(Civ. 1881.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 22, 1918. On Rehearing, Dec. 22, 1918.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃333—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT IN FAVOR OF SERVANT.

If negligence of the servant was not personally participated in or aided by some negligent act of the master, independent of the act of the servant, a verdict acquitting the servant necessarily acquits the master.

2. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃111(1)—PLEADING.

While general negligence may be relied upon without pleading specific acts of negligence, yet, where specific acts of negligence are relied upon for recovery, they must be specially pleaded.

3. RAILROADS ⊂⊃345(4) — ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS—NEGLIGENCE—PLEADING.

Under a complaint for death at railroad crossing alleging that M., the engineer in charge of a locomotive, negligently, without whistle being blown or bell rung, ran the locomotive across the highway at a great rate of speed, while the crossing was concealed from view by buildings and box cars, no recovery could be had on the ground that the placing of the box cars and buildings was a negligent act.

4. RAILROADS ⊂⊃304 — CROSSINGS—NEGLIGENCE—BUILDINGS—BOX CARS.

The placing of box cars and buildings near a crossing is not of itself negligence as to persons traveling over the crossing.

On Rehearing.

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃333—INJURIES TO THIRD PERSONS—NEGLIGENCE — ACQUITTAL OF SERVANT.

Recovery could not be had, the engineer being acquitted of negligence, on the ground that the fireman negligently failed to ring the bell, where the evidence was undisputed that the engineer was in control of the engine; the fireman's duty under the circumstances being immaterial.

6. RAILROADS ⊂⊃345(4)—INJURIES AT CROSSING—NEGLIGENCE—PLEADING AND PROOF.

Under a complaint for injuries at a railroad crossing, alleging that M., who was the engineer in charge of a locomotive, negligently, without whistle being blown or bell rung, ran the locomotive across the highway at a great rate of speed while his view at the crossing was concealed by buildings and box cars, recovery could not be had on the ground that the engineer was negligent in not ringing the bell.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; H. D. Gregory, Judge.

Action by Amanda Fimple, as administratrix of the estate of Thomas V. Fimple, deceased, against the Southern Pacific Company and William J. McKnight. Judgment for plaintiff against the first-named defendant, and the latter appeals. Reversed.

A. F. Jones and George F. Jones, both of Oroville, for appellant.

Guy R. Kennedy and J. D. Peters, both of Chico, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action to recover damages for the death of her husband, alleged to have been negligently caused by the defendants. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant McKnight and in favor of plaintiff against the defendant Southern Pacific Company in the sum of $20,000. Judgment was entered accordingly, and defendant Southern Pacific Company appeals from that portion thereof awarding damages against it.

Thomas V. Fimple met his death on the 14th day of July, 1914, being struck by a "light" engine, then in charge of the defendant McKnight, while driving an automobile across the railroad tracks of the corporation, near the town of Durham, in Butte county. With Fimple in the automobile was a young man named William Drouillard, who was also killed. His father, Edward Drouillard, brought an action for damages against the same defendants, in which judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff. That action was before us on appeal (civil No. 1778), and a decision affirming the judgment was filed in this court on March 4, 1918. 172 Pac. 405. A very full statement of the circumstances under which the accident occurred may be found therein, to which we refer.

Appellant urges a reversal of the judgment on two grounds: (1) That the verdict of the jury exonerating defendant McKnight operated also to exonerate the defendant Southern Pacific Company; and (2) contributory negligence of the deceased.

[1] It cannot be doubted that it is the law that, unless the appellant participated in the negligence which it is charged produced the injuries and consequent death of the deceased, or that it committed some different and distinct act of negligence, separate from and independent of that of its engineer and codefendant, McKnight, which, concurring with that of McKnight, proximately produced the injuries whereby the deceased lost his life, the appellant cannot be held liable for the death of Fimple, since its codefendant and agent was acquitted by the jury of all blame or culpability for said injuries and death. In other words, if the damage was negligently produced by the defendant McKnight, the locomotive engineer, while he was engaged in discharging his duties as a servant or agent of the appellant, and the negligence of said defendant so producing the damage was not personally participated in or aided by some negligent act of the appellant wholly independent of and dissociated from the act of the engineer, then a verdict acquitting the latter of culpable negligence is necessarily a verdict likewise acquitting the appellant, for the very obvious reason that, where injury is solely the result of the negligence of the servant while performing his duties as such, the principal's liability for such injury can follow only from the relationship existing between the master and servant as such. They are not joint tort-feasors, so that either or both may be sued for the tort committed.

The doctrine above stated has been explained and applied in many cases. Thus, in Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Goldberg, 2 Ill. App. 228, one of a number of defendants jointly sued in trespass was acquitted. The appellant had committed the trespass, if any was committed, only through its agent. At the trial the appellant introduced as a defense the judgment exonerating the defendant first above referred to. The reviewing court, holding that the defense should be sustained, said:

"But where the real actor, none the less liable personally because acting for another, is not guilty, it necessarily follows that the party for whom he acted cannot be. The principal can be no more guilty by reason of the act of his agent than if he had committed the act in person, and the party who was alone charged to have committed the act in person was conclusively adjudged not guilty. We see no * * * escape from our conclusion, * * * and for authority refer to Thomas v. Rumsey, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 26, and Emery v. Fowler, 39 Me. 326, 63 Am. Dec. 627."

In Doremus v. Root et al., 23 Wash. 710, 63 Pac. 572, 54 L. R. A. 649, the plaintiff brought the action against Root and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation Company for damages for injuries sustained by the plaintiff in a collision between two freight trains of the railroad company. Root was the conductor of one of the trains, and the plaintiff a fireman on the other. The collision was due, so it was alleged, to the failure of Root, who had been duly apprised of an approaching train from the opposite direction, to obey instructions given him to stop and side-track his train at a certain named station and there wait until the other train passed. The verdict rendered was in favor of the plaintiff as against the railroad company, but was silent as to Root, and the Washington court held such silence to be tantamount to an acquittal of Root of culpability. Judgment was rendered upon the verdict in favor of the plaintiff against the railroad company and in favor of Root, and the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and remanded the case, with instructions to the court below to enter judgment for the railroad company. The principle above referred to was elaborately considered in that case, the court holding that the exoneration of Root from legal responsibility for the injuries received by the plaintiff necessarily operated to acquit the railroad company of blame. The court, among other things, said:

"It must be borne in mind, however, that there are wide distinctions between the ordinary action for injuries, where all of the defendants participated in the wrongful act which caused the injury, and actions like the one before us, where one is liable because he committed the act and the other by operation of law, both with respect to the relations of the defendants to each other and to the injured person. Joint tort-feasors are liable to the injured person (other than that he may have but one satisfaction), as if the act causing the injury was the separate act of each of them, and they have, except in certain special cases, no right of contribution among themselves. But the defendants in this character of action are in no sense joint tort-feasors, nor does their liability to the plaintiff rest on the same or like grounds. The act of an employé, even in legal intendment, is not the act of his employer, unless the employer either previously directs the act to be done or subsequently ratifies it. For injuries caused by the negligent act of an employé not directed or ratified by the employer, the employé is liable because he committed the act which caused the injury, while the employer is liable, not as if the act was done by himself, but because of the doctrine of respondeat superior—the rule of law which holds the master responsible for the negligent act of his servant, committed while the servant is acting within the general scope of his employment, and engaged in his master's business. The primary liability to answer for such an act therefore rests upon the employé, and when the employer is compelled to answer in damages therefor he can recover over against the employé. Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Compania Trans. Espanola, 134 N. Y. 461 [31 N. E. 987, 30 Am. St. Rep. 685]; note to Village of Cartville v. Cook [Ill.] 16 Am. St. Rep. 248; 1 Shearman & Redfield, Negligence (5th Ed.) § 242; 2 Van Fleet, Former Adjudication, p. 1162. * * * In such an action, whether brought against the employer severally or jointly with the employé, the gravamen of the charge is, and must be, negligence of the employé, and no recovery can be had unless it be proven, and found by the jury, that the employé was negligent. Stated in another way: If the employé who causes the injury is free from liability therefor, his employer must also be free from liability."

See, also, Railroad Co. v. Jopes, 142 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 109, 35 L. Ed. 919.

In Bradley v. Rosenthal, 154 Cal. 420, 97 Pac. 875, 129 Am. St. Rep. 171, the plaintiff sued for the recovery of damages for injuries sustained while engaged in working for the defendant corporation, the complaint alleging that the plaintiff was employed by the company through Rosenthal, its agent, to assist in constructing telephone lines for the company, that the defendants carelessly, etc., furnished certain poles from which the wires were to be strung which were very brittle and unfit for said purpose, and that while he was in the act of ascending one of said poles, in a careful and workmanlike manner, for the purpose of adjusting the wires thereto, said pole, "by reason of its brittleness and unfitness for said purpose, broke," the result of which was that he was thrown violently to the ground, receiving the injuries for which he sought damages. The defendants interposed separate answers, Rosenthal admitting his employment by the company as a lineman and that he employed the plaintiff, but averred that in the employment of plaintiff he did so solely as the agent of the company. He denied the furnishing of unfit and unsuitable poles. The cause was tried by a jury, and to them the trial court gave an instruction that, if Rosenthal was the agent of the company, and in his capacity as such agent employed the plaintiff, "you cannot find or assess damages against him." The jury found for Rosenthal, exonerating him from liability for the injuries received by the plaintiff and in favor of the latter as against the telephone company, and judgment was entered accordingly. Reversing the judgment, the Supreme Court said:

"Not one word of evidence tends to establish any direct personal participation, personal knowledge, or personal culpability upon its [the company's] part, or that its employé Rosenthal was in any way carrying out its express instructions in the particular matter for the doing of which negligence is charged; that under such circumstances the employer is liable only because of the rule of law which holds him responsible, as well for the undirected as for the directed act of the agent within the scope of his employment; that in such kind of cases, where there have been no express instructions for the doing of the act complained of in the particular way, the principal and agent, master and servant, are not joint tort-feasors. * * * The employé's responsibility is primary. He is responsible because he committed the wrongful or negligent act. The employer's responsibility is secondary, in the sense that he has committed no moral wrong, but under the law is held accountable for his agent's conduct. While both may be sued in a single action, a verdict exonerating the agent must necessarily exonerate the principal, since the verdict exonerating the agent is a declaration that he has done no wrong, and the principal cannot be responsible * * * if the agent has committed no tort. While no right of contribution exists between joint tort-feasors, whether sued separately or collectively, there exists in the kind of case here presented much more than the mere right of contribution. The principal who has been obliged thus to pay for the unauthorized negligent act of his agent resulting in injury may indemnify himself to the full amount against his agent."

See, also, Thompson v. S. P. Co., 31 Cal. App. 567, 575, 161 Pac. 21; 1 Cooley on Torts, (3d Ed.) 255, and the cases cited in Bradley v. Rosenthal, on pages 424 and 425 of 154 Cal., 97 Pac. 875, 129 Am. St. Rep. 171.

The record in this case does not disclose a particle of evidence showing or even tending to establish any "direct personal participation, personal knowledge, or personal culpability" upon the part of the appellant, "or that its employé, McKnight, was in any way carrying out its express instructions in the particular matter for the doing of which negligence is here charged." Therefore, as stated in the outset of this opinion, unless it is appropriately claimed by the complaint and shown by the evidence that the appellant personally participated in the negligence of which McKnight is alleged to have been guilty, or itself committed some act or acts of negligence, either of omission or commission, other than and separate from the act of negligence charged against McKnight, which contributed to the damage complained of, or, concurring with the negligence charged against McKnight, produced said damage, the judgment against the appellant cannot, upon the doctrine asserted in the cases above referred to and quoted from, be upheld. And that appellant was guilty of an act of negligence, separate and distinct from that charged against its employé, McKnight, which, in conjunction with that of McKnight, proximately caused the death of the deceased, is precisely what the respondent here claims as an offset to the ineluctable effect of the above-considered decisions in cases of this kind.

[2] It is contended that the plaintiff, in her complaint, not only pleads acts of negligence on the part of the engineer which bring home to the appellant liability for its servant's said acts under the rule of respondeat superior, but further pleads that the appellant itself was negligent in that, at and in close proximity to the crossing where the unfortunate accident occurred, it maintained permanent buildings, and, at the time of the accident, had side-tracked and maintained box cars near said crossing, which buildings and box cars so obstructed the view of the crossing by those in charge of a locomotive traveling in a southerly direction as to prevent them from seeing the crossing.

Thus an examination herein of plaintiff's pleading becomes necessary. First, it is well to state the well-understood rule of pleading in negligence cases that, while general negligence may thus be relied upon without pleading specific acts of negligence, yet, where specific acts of negligence are relied upon for a recovery, they must be specially pleaded. The charging part of the complaint is as follows:

"That while said Thomas V. Fimple was operating and driving said automobile along said public highway and county road as aforesaid, and as said automobile reached said public crossing at the point hereinabove alleged, at about the hour of 12:57 p. m. on said 14th day of July, 1914, and was crossing over and across said tracks of said defendant Southern Pacific Company, said defendant Southern Pacific Company, through and by its agent, servant, and employé, defendant William J. McKnight, who was then and there the locomotive engineer and engine foreman in charge of said locomotive, negligently and carelessly, without whistle being blown or bell rung or any warning or signal of any kind or character being given before reaching said public highway and county road [italics ours], ran one of its locomotives, operated by steam, in a southerly direction along said tracks, across said highway and county road at said crossing, at a great and negligent rate of speed; that the defendants negligently and carelessly operated said locomotive at a high and careless rate of speed at said place, notwithstanding the fact that said public crossing was concealed from view by buildings and box cars along the side of said crossing, which said buildings and box cars obstructed the view thereof by the persons in charge of said locomotive, which fact was well known to said defendants at and prior to said 14th day of July, 1914; that, by reason of said negligent and careless rate of speed, and by reason of said careless and negligent operation of said locomotive, and by reason of the careless and negligent omission and failure to blow a whistle, or ring a bell, or to give any warning or signal of any kind or character before reaching said public highway and county road as aforesaid, the said locomotive struck said automobile [italics ours], which said Thomas V. Fimple was operating and driving as aforesaid, throwing said Thomas V. Fimple out of said automobile a distance of 20 or 30 feet, thereby killing said Thomas V. Fimple; that said defendant William J. McKnight was at all of the times mentioned herein the locomotive engineer in charge of said locomotive, and was acting jointly in conjunction with said defendant corporation, in the care, management, direction, and control thereof at said time."

[3] It will not be denied that, if the plaintiff intended to rely upon the maintenance of the alleged obstruction referred to as a ground for recovery against the appellant, it was requisite that the alleged negligence therein involved should have been specially pleaded and in such manner as clearly to show that, by reason of such negligence, the appellant itself contributed to the damage complained of.

It is not necessary to take apart or analyze herein the averments of the complaint, and thus consider them to show that nowhere does that pleading disclose any act or acts of negligence except those involved in the allegations italicized above, which are confined to the alleged acts of negligence of the engineer in running the train at a great and an unauthorized rate of speed and the failure of the engineer to sound a whistle or ring a bell or give any other of the usual warnings of the approach of trains to a station or a crossing. While the complaint plainly says that, "by reason of said negligent and careless rate of speed, and by reason of said careless and negligent operation of said locomotive, and by reason of the careless and negligent omission and failure to blow a whistle, or ring a bell, or to give any warning or signal of any kind or character before reaching said public highway," etc., there is no averment that the deceased lost his life by reason of the obstruction of the view of the crossing because of the buildings and box cars referred to so that said crossing could not be seen by those having charge of the locomotive at the time of the accident.

In Thompson v. S. P. Co. et al., 31 Cal. App. 567, 161 Pac. 21, supra, the complaint alleged that, for a long time prior to the time of the accident therein complained of, the railroad company negligently and carelessly permitted to grow up and mature on the right of way of its track where the same crossed the public highway at which the company's train collided with the plaintiff's automobile, resulting in the injuries complained of, a dense growth of sunflowers and weeds to such a height that thus the view was so obstructed that a person traveling on said highway in an easterly direction across the company's track could not see the railroad track or a locomotive engine or a train of cars thereon for any distance looking in the southeasterly direction of said railroad track, "except at a point near and almost immediately upon said railroad track."

The gravamen of the plaintiff's cause of action as it was set forth in the complaint in that case was that the engineer and fireman in charge of the locomotive failed, upon approaching the crossing where the alleged injuries were received, to give warning in due time of the approach of the train by blowing a whistle or ringing a bell or otherwise signaling its approach to the crossing.

It is plainly manifest that the allegations in that case as to the weeds and sunflowers growing near the track of the company, thereby obstructing the view of approaching trains, come much nearer to charging that the railroad company actually participated in the accident than do the allegations as to alleged obstruction caused by the buildings and box cars in this case; yet this court, in the Thompson Case, referring to the contention that "appellant did actually participate in the accident by reason of permitting the growth of weeds and trees so as to obstruct the view of the track," said:

"But from respondent's standpoint upon the assumption that he was exercising ordinary care, it is quite clear from the record that he would have been apprised of the danger if the bell had been properly rung and the whistle sounded. He can justify his cause of action only upon the theory that these precautions were omitted. If he had conceded that these usual warnings were sounded, he would have had no cause with which to go to the jury, as he showed no reason why he would or could not have heard them in time to avoid the collision. Indeed, he alleges in his complaint that he would have heard the warning if it had been given. The presence of the weeds simply emphasized the importance and duty of great care on the part of those in charge of the train, and we repeat that, since they were acquitted of negligence, the jury, to be consistent, should have gone a step further and exonerated the appellant."

[4] As before stated, the negligence pleaded and so relied upon by the plaintiff in this case is in the omission of the engineer to sound the whistle and ring the locomotive bell, and, as in the Thompson Case, the maintenance of the obstruction referred to only made it the more imperative that that duty should have been performed by the engineer as his train approached the crossing. But, after all, we are not prepared to say that the mere maintenance of the buildings and the side-tracking of the cars as indicated would constitute negligence in the appellant, unless it were additionally shown that the company had also negligently failed to employ the necessary means for protecting the traveling public against the added danger, if any, which had been created in and about the crossing by reason of the presence of the said buildings and box cars. Weeds and sunflowers have absolutely no value, so far as a railroad is concerned, but, indeed, are a nuisance where they are permitted to grow along the roadway of a railroad to a height to interfere with the proper and safe operation of railroad trains. Buildings erected near railroad tracks are generally put there for some purpose in connection with the business of the railroad, and the side-tracking of box cars on sidings may always be assumed to be necessary for the purposes of the company's traffic. Neither is a nuisance of itself, and can only become so when it is shown either that they are unnecessarily maintained, or are put in a place where the exigencies of the company's business and traffic do not require them to be maintained, or where their maintenance, though necessary for the business of the company, has had the effect of making a crossing near which they are maintained more dangerous or perilous for use by the traveling public and the company has not employed added precautions for the safety of the public commensurate with the perils of the crossing thus added thereto.

Thus we are constrained to reverse the judgment. It is not necessary, in view of the law applicable to this case, for us to decide whether there is evidence sufficient in probative force to support the finding of the jury that the death of Fimple was due to the negligence of the engineer by failure to give due and proper and the usual warning of the approach of the train toward the crossing; yet it is not at all improper to say that, if the negligence of the engineer, as claimed, was at the bottom of the unfortunate and fatal accident which is responsible for this action, it is greatly to be deprecated that the law—the law as we have presented it herein and which has been plainly laid down and explained by the higher courts—is such that the guilty cannot be made to suffer for the consequences of their culpability, and, at the same time, those who have therefrom suffered so grievous a wrong given some reparation for the great loss sustained. But a fundamental mistake in this case, in view of the law as it has been expounded and is now applied by the courts in this kind of a case, was in joining the engineer with the appellant as a defendant, even though it may be true, as has been expressly held to be so in some other jurisdictions, that a railroad company or other defendant, in a case for the recovery of damages for a tort, may compel his servant, who has negligently committed an injury to person or property while engaged in performing his duties as such servant to come in and defend the action, if such servant has not already been joined as a defendant by the plaintiff. A verdict against the principal, if there was evidence to support it, would be upheld, and if it transpired that the delict complained of was the result solely of the negligence of the servant, or that the principal did not personally participate in such negligence, the matter of reimbursement of the principal for the loss so sustained by reason of the negligence of his servant would be a matter to be fought out between the principal and his culpable employé.

But, as declared, we are required to apply the law as we find it laid down to the facts as they have been made to appear in the record, and, thus guided, there is no other alternative open to us in this case but to reverse the judgment, and such is the order.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. In an application for a rehearing of this case it is intimated that it was the duty of the fireman on the locomotive to ring the bell and sound the whistle as the train approached crossings, and that in this case, therefore, the negligence of the Southern Pacific Company results from the failure of the fireman, who was not made a party to this action, to give those warnings as the train was approaching the crossing where the automobile was struck by the locomotive.

[5, 6] There are, we think, two answers to the proposition so made, viz.: (1) That the undisputed testimony of the engineer is that he, as such engineer, was in charge of the locomotive on the occasion of the accident, and from this testimony it is to be assumed, if not presumed, that the fireman, in the discharge of his duties as such, was entirely subject to the control and orders of the engineer, and whether in such case the fireman's duty was to sound the whistle or ring the bell, or to perform both such acts, when ordered by the engineer to do so, is not material; (2) that the complaint contains no charge of negligence against the fireman and nowhere attempts to impute to the Southern Pacific Company any negligence of which the fireman might have been guilty. To the contrary, the complaint alleges that the engineer, McKnight, was "the locomotive engineer and engine foreman in charge of said locomotive," and that the "said defendant Southern Pacific Company, through and by its agent, servant, and employé, defendant William J. McKnight, negligently and carelessly" did the damage complained of. Thus it is very clear that the plaintiff did not rely upon the negligence of the fireman, if any he was guilty of, but that the whole theory of her case, as made by her complaint, was that, if the Southern Pacific Company was at all culpable in the matter, it was wholly through the alleged negligence of McKnight, the engineer then in charge of the locomotive. We think that, if the plaintiff intended to rely upon any negligence of the fireman, and thus connect the Southern Pacific Company with such negligence upon the doctrine of respondeat superior, it was incumbent upon her to plead such negligence, just as it would have been her duty to do if she had relied on negligence of the company's station agent or any other servant of the defendant company.

As gratifying as it would certainly be to this court to see the plaintiff receive adequate compensation for the great loss she has sustained, assuming that the damage was the direct result of the negligence of the company's locomotive engineer and servant, we cannot see our way clear to recede from the conclusion at which we originally arrived herein.

The petition must be denied; and it is so ordered.

HIRSCH v. JAMES S. REMICK CO. et al.

(Civ. 1899.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 26, 1918.)

1. DEATH ⟸49(1) — ACTION FOR DAMAGES — PLEADING.

A complaint in an action for damages for death is demurrable unless it alleges that the deceased left heirs.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1040(10) — HARMLESS ERROR—PLEADING.

Error in overruling a demurrer to a complaint in an action for death, it not being alleged that deceased left heirs, was cured, where plaintiff, without objection, introduced evidence on the trial showing that deceased left heirs, naming them.

3. MUNICIPAL COPORATIONS ⟸821(17)—SIDEWALKS — IRON DOORS — NEGLIGENCE—JURY QUESTION.

A vault under a sidewalk, covered by iron doors of standard size, set in the pavement in the customary manner, and forming a part of the sidewalk when closed, was not in itself a nuisance, and its maintenance did not constitute negligence per se.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸808(7)—SIDEWALKS—VAULTS UNDER SIDEWALKS—ORDINANCES—NEGLIGENCE.

The construction and maintenance of a vault under a sidewalk containing an elevator and covered by iron doors of standard size forming a part of the sidewalk when closed, and leaving a passageway of seven feet when open, was not a violation of Ordinances Nos. 346 and 716 of the city of Sacramento, providing that passageways to basements should be within the four feet next the building line, but that merchants or persons having occasion to receive or deliver goods could use the sidewalk in the daytime.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸821(17) — VAULTS UNDER SIDEWALK—IRON DOORS—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for death of one who fell into a vault under a sidewalk protected by open iron doors 25 inches high, on a damp, foggy evening, when it was growing dark, an electrically lighted electrolier 27 feet away being dimmed one-third by coloring the burners, whether the abutting owner was negligent held for the jury.

6. TRIAL ⟸136(3) — CONSTRUCTION OF CITY ORDINANCES—QUESTION FOR COURT.

The meaning of an unambiguous city ordinance is for the court and not the jury to decide.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by Philip Hirsch, as executor of the estate of Markus Hirsch, sometimes known as M. Hirsch, deceased, against the James S. Remick Company, a copartnership, and James Samuel Remick and John W. Haley. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

C. E. McLaughlin and C. P. McLaughlin, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

Martin I. Welsh and Ralph W. Smith, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The action is for the recovery of damages arising from the alleged negligence of defendants whereby plaintiff's testate was injured.

It is alleged in the complaint:

That defendants were, on December 24, 1915, conducting a store at the southwest corner of Eleventh and J streets, Sacramento. That on the Eleventh street front of said store and under the pavement or sidewalk defendants maintained an area or basement, and, for the purpose of lowering and raising articles of merchandise to and from the floor of said area to the surface of the sidewalk, defendants constructed and used a shaft in which was installed an elevator. Two ordinances of the city of Sacramento—Nos. 346 and 716—are pleaded as the basis for the averment that defendants unlawfully maintained said shaft. "That the sidewalk in front of the said store of defendants on Eleventh street, in the city of Sacramento, county of Sacramento, state of California, is some fifteen feet in width. That at a point on the said sidewalk about 60 feet southerly of the southwest corner of the curb at Eleventh and J streets, and about 8 feet to the east of the most easterly outer wall of the building occupied during all of said times by defendants' store, and about 3 feet west of the outer or eastern edge of the said sidewalk, the defendants did, during all the times herein mentioned, negligently, imprudently, and unlawfully use and maintain in the said sidewalk at the point aforesaid, above the shaft of the said elevator, the point being at a distance of more than 7 feet to the east of the most outerly easterly wall of defendants' store, a rectangular hole or opening some 5 feet square, and during all of said times herein mentioned failed and neglected to construct, maintain, equip over, about, or around the said rectangular hole or opening any barrier, fence, light, rail, protector, or warning of any kind whatever. That on the 24th day of December, 1915, in the nighttime of said day, at or about the hour of 5:30 o'clock p. m., Markus Hirsch, sometimes known as M. Hirsch, while proceeding as a pedestrian walking in a northerly direction, upon the sidewalk in front of the store of defendants on Eleventh street, the city of Sacramento, state of California, while so using the sidewalk as aforesaid, he fell into the said rectangular hole or opening in said sidewalk, to the floor of the open area, basement, and cellar below, fatally injuring the said Markus Hirsch, sometimes known as M. Hirsch, from which injuries he died on the 24th day of December, 1915, all to the loss and damage of this plaintiff in the sum of $10,000."

A general and special demurrer was overruled, and defendants answered denying the accusatory averments of the complaint, and alleged that "said shaft or opening in the sidewalk on Eleventh street was guarded by perpendicular iron barriers 25 inches in height above the sidewalk on the northerly and southerly sides of said shaft or opening and on the east and west ends of said shaft or opening by iron rods; that at all times during said use on said day said barriers were visible to any person walking northerly or southerly on Eleventh street, for a distance of more than 150 feet"; that deceased well knew of the existence of said shaft and the purpose for which it was used, and that by the exercise of ordinary care he could have seen and have avoided said shaft and could have used the sidewalk between said shaft and the wall of said store "which was clear of all obstructions for a width of about seven feet"; that on said December 24, 1915, and a few minutes before he was injured, he passed southerly along Eleventh street between said opening and the wall of said store, and then and there observed and knew that said shaft was being used by defendants and the purpose for which it was being used, and observed the said iron doors forming a barrier 25 inches in height above the sidewalk, and observed the said clear space of 7 feet between said shaft and said building; that the injury and death of deceased alleged in the complaint were caused by his own negligence and want of ordinary care, and could have been avoided had he exercised ordinary care by the use of said open space next to the wall of said building; denied that deceased was injured at 5:30 o'clock p. m. of said day or at any hour later than 5 o'clock p. m.

The cause was tried by the court with a jury, and plaintiff had the verdict. Judgment was accordingly entered, from which defendants appeal.

[1, 2] Defendants' first point is that the complaint is fatally defective in failing to allege that the deceased left any heirs. The general demurrer should have been sustained on this ground, for it is well settled that the action runs to the heirs only, and that a recovery is for their benefit, and not for the benefit of the estate of the deceased. Munro v. Dredging, etc., Co., 84 Cal. 515, 24 Pac. 303, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248; Ruiz v. Santa Barbara Gas & Electric Co., 164 Cal. 188, 192, 128 Pac. 330. It appears, however, from the record that, without objection, plaintiff introduced testimony showing that the deceased left heirs, naming them. Under similar circumstances, we held, in Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., 26 Cal. App. 318, 147 Pac. 90, that the admission of evidence without objection cured the omission of the allegation as to the existence of heirs. We did not, as appellants seem to read the opinion, rest the decision on the fact that the omission was cured by the answer. A petition to the Supreme Court for a hearing of the case in that court was filed and especial attention given in the petition to the point now here. The petition was denied, and we must assume that the Supreme Court concurred in the view of the question taken by this court. The point was referred to in Boyle v. Coast Improvement Co., 27 Cal. App. 714, 151 Pac. 25, and the decision in the Slaughter Case was affirmed. A hearing in the Supreme Court in the Boyle Case was also denied. We gave the question our best attention in Slaughter v. Goldberg, Bowen & Co., and, notwithstanding the able argument now presented by the learned counsel for the defendants, we must adhere to our decision heretofore rendered. See Noakes v. City of Los Angeles, 175 Pac. 409.

The sidewalk on Eleventh street is 14 feet wide. In this sidewalk 2 feet from the curb is the opening into which deceased fell. The opening is 5 feet east and west and 4 feet north and south and is covered by two iron doors flush with the sidewalk when in place. When open, these iron doors, one on each side, 25 inches in height, stand upright and are held in position by an iron rod across the west side of the shaft. An elevator is operated in this shaft to carry goods to and from the basement or area under the sidewalk. At the time of the accident, the elevator platform was at the bottom of the shaft and it was not for the moment then being used. There was an electrically lighted electrolier near the curb 27 feet north of this opening and another similar one 74 feet south of this shaft. They had, however, been dimmed by coloring the burners so as to diminish the radiance of the lamps one-third. It was a damp, foggy evening and growing dark. The sun set on that day at 4:35 p. m. Deceased left his store on J street between Tenth and Eleventh streets at about 5 o'clock that evening to purchase some coffee at a store on the corner of Eleventh and K streets. He passed this shaft in going and was met on his way back by a witness between the corner of Eleventh and K and the opening. This was about 5:15 or 5:30 p. m. Continuing his course north, deceased fell into this shaft and received injuries from which he died during the same night. No witness saw him fall into the shaft.

It is contended by respondent that said shaft was constructed and is being used in violation of the ordinances above referred to, and hence was a nuisance and constituted negligence per se. This contention is stoutly contested by defendants, thus presenting an important and perhaps the principal question in the case.

The court instructed the jury as follows:

"When the owners or occupants of property abutting on the public highway do anything or continue the use of anything that will obstruct the free passage of the public upon such highway, street, or sidewalk, such parties are maintaining a nuisance if they maintain the same contrary to the provisions of the law regarding the same. In this connection, I will read to you the ordinances of the city of Sacramento relating to the regulating and use of sidewalks. (Here reads Ordinances Nos. 346 and 716.)"

Then follows an instruction to the effect that—

If the jury find that defendants were using or maintaining "the alleged area, basement window, or cellarway in the sidewalk," and that the said opening "was not kept or maintained or continued in use in accordance with the terms of the ordinances just read," the defendants "were guilty of maintaining a nuisance, and the defendants would be liable to persons who sustained injuries as the proximate result of the maintenance of the said nuisance, if such injuries were sustained by said party when he was in the exercise of ordinary care."

The court gave the following instruction:

"The court instructs the jury that if you find from the evidence that the defendants were maintaining an opening in the said sidewalk in which the deceased fell, and that in so maintaining the same they were violating the provisions of the said ordinances of the city of Sacramento, and such violation of the ordinances was the proximate cause of the decedent's death, and that the decedent at such time was in the exercise of ordinary care, it is your duty to find for the plaintiff."

Defendants requested an instruction which set forth the uncontradicted facts as to the place where the shaft was constructed and the manner of its construction, and stated that, if the jury should find the facts thus set forth to be true, then "the maintenance and use of said opening and said iron doors was not in and of itself a nuisance, or in violation of the ordinances introduced in evidence in this case." The court refused to give this instruction. Another instruction requested by defendants was refused, reading as follows:

"If you find from the evidence that the opening in the sidewalk through which deceased fell was used by defendants for business purposes, and that the iron doors when closed constitute part of the pavement, and when opened constitute a guard or railing on each side of the opening, then you are instructed that such iron doors and their use are not forbidden by the ordinances introduced in evidence and did not constitute a nuisance."

Another instruction requested by defendants was refused, which instructed the jury "that the iron doors and opening maintained and used by defendants were not forbidden by said ordinances."

"There is no rule of law better established than that the construction of written instruments is a matter of law for the court, and not of fact for the jury, unless when the meaning and construction are doubtful and depend upon extrinsic evidence." Aguirre v. Alexander, 58 Cal. 30.

"It is error for the court to submit to a jury the question of the legal effect of written documents offered in evidence during the trial." Syl. Carpentier v. Thirston, 24 Cal. 269, 285.

It was the contention of respondent at the trial, and is his contention here, that the construction and maintenance of this opening or shaft was unlawful because in violation of the ordinances pleaded; and that this unlawfulness did not consist in the character of the shaft or opening, but in its position; that the ordinance authorized only the opening or stairway next to the building. It seems to us that, when the instructions given and refused are considered, the court not only left the question of the construction to be put upon the ordinances to the jury, but conveyed the impression to the jury that the shaft or opening in question was in violation of the ordinances, and hence a nuisance.

Section 1 of Ordinance No. 346 provides for the construction of a passageway to the cellar or basement next to the building, in doing which not more than four feet of the sidewalk next to the building shall be used and must be inclosed by "a strong iron railing" and in a "manner to prevent accident to foot passengers." Section 2 authorizes business firms "to occupy three feet of the sidewalk from the building line, for the purpose of exhibiting their wares during business hours." Then follows the proviso:

"That merchants or persons having occasion to receive or deliver goods may use such sidewalk for the period not to exceed ten hours in the daytime for the purpose of receiving and discharging such goods; and provided further that a space of six feet in width shall at all times be kept clear for the accommodation of persons passing."

Section 3 allowed a space of four feet of the sidewalk for stairway entrances to the first floor of any building erected prior to June 1, 1894.

Ordinance No. 716 amends section 2 of Ordinance 346 by providing for the space of three feet next to the building for accommodating bicyles and also for space at the outer edge of the sidewalk for bulletin boards for managers of theaters and newspapers. The remaining portion of section 2 is the same as in Ordinance No. 346, namely:

"That merchants having occasion to receive or deliver goods, may use the sidewalk in front of the premises occupied by them for a period of not exceeding ten hours in the daytime for the purpose of receiving or delivering such goods; * * * and provided further, that a space of six feet in width shall at all times be kept clear for the accommodation of persons passing."

The provisions of the ordinances relating to receiving and delivering goods authorized the use of the sidewalk next to the curb for that purpose. It has been held that the abutting owner, whose rights extend to the center of the street, may excavate a vault or cellar under the sidewalk. Elliott on Roads and Streets, § 690, and cases cited. Where the area under the sidewalk is utilized for storage purposes and to receive and discharge goods, which is quite common in cities and in towns of considerable importance, the universal custom is to effect those objects by constructing and using an opening in the sidewalk near the curb, just such as was constructed and used in the present case.

[3] The evidence was that the iron doors used by defendants were of standard size and set in the pavement in the customary manner and when closed formed a part of the sidewalk. In itself it was not a nuisance and did not constitute negligence per se. The Supreme Court, in Rider v. Clark, 132 Cal. 382, 385, 64 Pac. 564, 566, speaking of just such an opening and covering as here said:

"It is generally the usage and custom to allow openings to be made in the sidewalks of cities, in order to obtain entrance into the basement, such openings and the coverings thereof being subject to proper municipal regulation"—citing cases, and 2 Dillon on Municipal Corporations, § 699.

Morrison v. McAvoy, 70 Pac. 626, 7 Cal. Unrep. Cases, 37, was a case where an ordinance of the city of Oakland was drawn in question. In that case an opening in the sidewalk near the curb was made as in this case and for like purposes, the only difference being that the iron doors were 16 inches in height when open, whereas in the present case they were 25 inches and the area underneath the sidewalk was utilized by stairs in the opening instead of an elevator as here. The ordinance provided that "no person shall * * * so occupy or obstruct any sidewalks as to interfere with the convenient use of the same by all passengers"; also, that "every person shall keep around every * * * flight of stairs descending from the sidewalk to the basement owned or occupied by him, a fence or railing at least three feet high." Plaintiff, walking along the sidewalk in the daytime, fell into this opening and was injured. She brought the action, alleging a violation of the ordinance. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the lower court and the judgment on appeal was affirmed. Said the court:

"The iron doors appear not to have been an obstruction when closed, and no defect in the manner of their construction is alleged, and it is averred that they constituted part of the pavement when closed. Such doors, as means of ingress and egress to and from the basement of buildings in towns and cities, are not unusual, and do not constitute a nuisance per se, and are not forbidden by the ordinance pleaded"—citing Rider v. Clark, 132 Cal. 382, 64 Pac. 564.

Speaking further of the situation, the court said:

"The first part of the ordinance above quoted was not infringed by the construction of the doors, for they formed part of the sidewalk, and were safe when closed, so far as is alleged. The second portion of the ordinance refers to open stairways as they are sometimes constructed next to the building, or next to the curb, and where the protection around the stairs is by a railing; in which case the protection or railing must be three feet high, and is permanent, and is the only protection required. The iron door openings in the present case are entirely different, and the usual protection to pedestrians are the sides of the door, as was the case of Rider v. Clark. The complaint seems to proceed upon the theory that the opening, with the doors, the stairs, and the cellar, were all unauthorized, and in violation of the ordinance, and together constituted a nuisance. There is nothing to show that the use of the basement by these means was unauthorized, except the ordinance, and this does not go so far."

In further considering the case, the court said:

"If there had been a distinct allegation—which there is not—that the sides of the door were not high enough to offer reasonable protection to footmen in the daytime, or had alleged clearly that the doors were opened out and laid flat on the pavement, offering no protection, there would have been a different case presented." Again, "plaintiff might have presented the distinct issue, on which she would have the right to be heard, that the iron doors, when open and standing upright, was a negligent and dangerous use made of the opening to the basement, irrespective of the ordinance. She evaded this issue, and relied on the prohibitions of the ordinance, which, as we have seen, do not cover her case."

[4] In the present case, while general negligence was in part relied upon and it was not necessary that the specific acts constituting such negligence should be alleged, this issue is entirely distinct from the issue arising from the claim that the opening in the sidewalk constituted a nuisance per se. To hold that such use of the sidewalk is in itself a nuisance, importing negligence per se, would be a serious infringement of a right universally exercised and having the sanction of long and well-recognized usage by the owners of business houses on lots abutting on public streets. That the city council was aware of this usage when it enacted these ordinances cannot be doubted. It is very clear that the ordinances in question do not in terms forbid such use. The only regulation or restriction coupled with the use as given is that it shall not exceed 10 hours in the daytime and that a space of six feet in width shall at all times be kept clear for the accommodation of persons passing. In the present case it appeared that there was a clear space of seven feet between the opening and the store building.

We have considered this question quite apart from the further question of general negligence involved in the issues arising out of the circumstances and facts relating to the manner in which the shaft and elevator were being used at the time of the accident, and the alleged negligence of defendants in connection therewith.

Considering the condition of the weather, the lateness of the hour in the day, that there was no one at the opening or using it at the time of the accident, and that the elevator was at the bottom of the shaft, the question of negligence imputed to defendants, as well as the question of the contributory negligence of deceased, claimed by defendants, was for the jury.

[5] If we could say that the verdict rested alone on defendants' negligence in leaving the shaft open under the circumstances shown, there would be no ground for disturbing the judgment. But as we think the jury were given to understand that this opening in the sidewalk was a nuisance and constituted negligence per se, we cannot say but that this view of the situation controlled the verdict and relieved the jury from considering the question of defendants' negligence as a question of fact.

[6] We think it was prejudicial error to send the case to the jury with instructions in effect implying that this opening on the sidewalk constituted a nuisance and in refusing to instruct them as to the meaning of the ordinances in this regard.

The judgment is reversed.

INTERNATIONAL MORTGAGE BANK v. EATON et al. (Civ. 2548.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 3, 1918.)

1. MORTGAGES ⟸159—AGREEMENT AS TO PRIORITY OF LIEN—VALIDITY.

Instrument signed and delivered by defendants appellants before plaintiff mortgagee advanced money to mortgagors, and providing that any lien of defendants should be subordinate to plaintiff's mortgage, held valid, and, although it contained the words "have borrowed," to be a part of consideration supporting plaintiff's promise to make loan for which mortgage was given.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸419(10) — CONSIDERATION — PAROL EVIDENCE.

In action to foreclose a mortgage plaintiff mortgagee was entitled to show what the actual consideration was and when it passed, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2, as to presumption from facts recited, not applying to recital of consideration, and Civ. Code, § 1647, as to explanation of contract by reference to circumstances.

3. MORTGAGES ⟸486—FORECLOSURE—RIGHTS WHICH MAY BE ADJUDICATED.

Appellants, who made some improvements on mortgaged premises without first having obtained a contract from the mortgagee or mortgagors for reimbursement, held to have no rights which could be enforced in mortgage foreclosure action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Benj. K. Knight, Judge.

Action by the International Mortgage Bank, a corporation, against Robert W. Eaton, George Sully, Matilda Sully, his wife, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and George Sully and wife appeal. Affirmed.

Reed, Nusbaumer & Bingaman, of Oakland, for appellants.

H. A. Van C. Torchiana, of San Francisco, and Wyckoff & Gardner, of Watsonville, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Judge pro tem. This is an action brought by the plaintiff to foreclose a mortgage against R. W. Eaton and E. Steinhauser, the mortgagors. Judgment went for the plaintiff against a large number of defendants; but George Sully and Matilda Sully are the only defendants who have appealed. They have presented their appeal as under section 953a, Code of Civil Procedure. By the record they have made, they make one contest as against the plaintiff and another as against some of their codefendants. As the principles involved are quite different, we will take up the two contests separately in the order as stated above.

1. If the plaintiff's lien is superior to the claim of the Sullys, the judgment should be affirmed as to the respondent, the plaintiff in the trial court. This question is hardly debatable. When the loan of the money by the plaintiff to the mortgagors was about to be made, it transpired that there were of record certain instruments which the plaintiff desired to be protected against; and the Sullys executed and delivered, before the money was paid over, an instrument, in part as follows:

"Know all men by these presents:

"That whereas, on the 17th day of March, 1913, by written instrument of that date, R. W. Eaton and E. Steinhauser entered into a contract with the undersigned, George Sully, Jr., and Matilda Sully, his wife, which said contract was thereafter recorded and is now of record in volume 13 of Agreements, page 184, in the office of the county recorder of the county of Santa Cruz, state of California, and is hereby expressly referred to and made a part hereof; and

"Whereas, the said R. W. Eaton and E. Steinhauser have borrowed from International Mortgage Bank, a corporation, of Apeldoorn, Holland, the sum of ten thousand dollars, and as security for the repayment of the same, have executed and delivered to said bank, a mortgage bearing date April 19, 1914, and covering the real property hereinafter particularly described; and

"Whereas, the said undersigned, George Sully, Jr., and Matilda Sully, his wife, ever since the 17th day of March, 1913, have been and now are the sole owners and holders of the said contract so recorded in volume 13 of Agreements, page 184, Santa Cruz Records:

"Now therefore, in consideration of the sum of one dollar and other valuable considerations to them and each of them in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said George Sully, Jr., and Matilda Sully, his wife, do and each of them does hereby acknowledge and agree that as to them and each of them as to the said contract dated March 17, 1913, and as to their and each of their rights and interests thereunder, the said mortgage dated April 9, 1914, and so executed to said International Mortgage Bank, is and shall be a first mortgage and lien on the real property hereinafter and in said mortgage described, and that whatever interest or rights they may have in or to the said real property are subject, subordinate and second to the lien of said mortgage."

[1, 2] The appellants point out the words "have borrowed," and argue that their act followed and was not therefore any part of the consideration for the making of the loan which plaintiff is seeking to foreclose. While such a phrase, "have borrowed," is pertinent in support of such an argument, it is not conclusive. In this case it clearly appears that all papers were signed and delivered before the money was paid by the plaintiff to the mortgagors, and that defendants' waiver was a part of the consideration supporting the plaintiff's promise to make a loan to the mortgagors. The plaintiff was entitled to show, as it did, what the consideration actually was and when it actually passed. Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 2, and Civ. Code, § 1647; Anderson v. Read, 106 N. Y. 333, 344, 13 N. E. 292. The waiver was valid, and operated to place the plaintiff's lien superior to the lien, if any, of the appellants.

[3] 2. By its judgment the trial court ordered that the appellants take nothing. Their claim, if any, arises out of these facts. The mortgagors owned the land which was mortgaged. Before the mortgage was executed the owners and the appellants formed a corporation, El Pajaro Springs Company; the mortgagors and the corporation executed a contract to sell and buy the land in suit; on the same date the corporation and the appellants executed a contract of employment by which the corporation hired the appellants at a stated compensation per month for a stated period of time. While those contracts were alive the appellants made improvements on the mortgaged property. The corporation was a defendant in this case, and by its pleadings merely put in issue the amount of the plaintiff's claim for attorney's fees. The appellants in their pleadings do not claim that, as stockholders, they are defending for the corporation, El Pajaro Springs Company; nor do they allege, or attempt to prove that, as stockholders, they demanded that the El Pajaro Company defend this action and that it did not; nor do they claim that they are defending for it; nor do they allege that El Pajaro Springs Company ever performed or offered to perform its contract of purchase. The most that can be said is that the record contains some evidence that the appellants made some improvements on the mortgaged premises without first having obtained a contract with the mortgagee or the mortgagors for reimbursement. They have no rights which the courts can, in a mortgage foreclosure action, enforce.

The judgment is affirmed.

MUTHER et al. v. CAPPS. (Civ. 2555.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 22, 1918. On Rehearing in Supreme Court in Bank, Jan. 21, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(8)—USE OF STREETS—CROSSING ACCIDENT—INSTRUCTIONS.

In action for death in automobile accident at street crossing, evidence held insufficient to warrant instruction as to negligent rate of speed, where chauffeur's view of road traffic is obstructed.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(8)—INSTRUCTIONS—MISLEADING INSTRUCTION.

In action for death in crossing accident at intersecting highway as defined by Gen. Laws Supp. 1917, Act 2331b, § 1, subd. 14, instruction on negligence of driver of automobile over "regular crossing for pedestrians" held misleading in view of Gen. Laws 1915, Act 2331b, § 22.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸592(1)—ORDINANCES—CONFLICT WITH STATUTES.

Where there is a conflict between the state law and the law of a city holding a freeholders' charter in regard to a municipal matter, the city ordinance will prevail.

4. EVIDENCE ⟸32—JUDICIAL NOTICE—ORDINANCES.

The court cannot take judicial notice of a city ordinance.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸592(1)—USE OF STREET—LAWS APPLICABLE.

In action involving question of whether driver of automobile on city streets was negligent, State Motor Vehicle Law will govern, where there is no ordinance in the record.

On Rehearing in Supreme Court.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸705(4)—ACCIDENT AT "INTERSECTING HIGHWAY"—LAW APPLICABLE.

An automobile accident where one street meets but does not cross another took place at an "intersecting highway," as defined by Gen. Laws Supp. 1917, Act 2331b, § 1, subd. 14.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Bernard J. Flood, Judge.

Action by Ernst Muther and another against William H. Capps. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

D. Hadsell, Joe G. Sweet, and E. A. Ingalls, all of San Francisco (Hiram W. Johnson, Jr., of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Geo. J. Steiger, Jr., and S. S. McCahill, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action in tort to recover damages for alleged negligence on the part of the defendant. The action grows out of the death of Anna Muther, who was the wife of Ernst Muther, plaintiff herein, caused by injuries received by her by being run over by an automobile owned and driven by the defendant. The plaintiff sues individually and as guardian ad litem for his minor children. Judgment was given on a verdict for plaintiffs for the sum of $15,000. The defendant has appealed, and assigns as error, among other things, certain instructions given by the court to the jury over the objections of defendant.

The trial court instructed the jury as follows:

"If you believe from the evidence that the defendant operated his automobile over the regular crossing for pedestrians, along Market street at the intersection of Valencia street, and that the defendant's view of the road traffic was then and there obstructed, at a greater rate of speed than 10 miles an hour, such operation of said automobile at said speed in excess of 10 miles an hour, constitutes a prima facie case of negligence, and the defendant is liable to the plaintiffs for all loss and damage proved to have been sustained by them by reason of such negligence."

This instruction evidently was prompted by the provisions of section 22 of Act 2331b of the General Laws of the state of California, which reads in part, as follows:

"* * * Provided, further, that in any event, no person shall operate or drive a motor or other vehicle on any public highway where the territory contiguous thereto is closely built up, at a greater rate of speed than 20 miles an hour, or in the business district of any incorporated city and county, city or town, at a greater rate than 15 miles an hour, or at a greater rate of speed than 10 miles an hour, where the operator's or chauffeur's view of the road traffic is obstructed either upon approaching an intersecting way, or in traversing a crossing or intersection of ways, or in approaching or traversing a crossing or intersection of ways. * * *"

[1] We think this instruction was not warranted by the evidence as disclosed in the record. There is no evidence in the record that the view of the defendant was obstructed. On the contrary, the evidence of plaintiffs' own witnesses is that there was nothing to prevent the defendant from seeing the deceased. The only evidence relied upon by respondent in his brief in support of this portion of the instruction is the testimony of the defendant as follows:

"Q. When you made that stop at Haight and Gough streets, did you notice any other jitney busses stopping with you? A. Yes, several all around me.

"Q. Any in front? A. One or two, I think.

"Q. And any at the sides, and behind? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. After the car passed, did you go out Market street? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you notice whether or not any jitney busses were in front of you or not? A. There were three or four turned out Valencia street."

From an examination of the map of the territory, which is embodied in the record, it will readily be seen, as pointed out by appellant, that automobiles which turned out Valencia street could not possibly have obstructed the view of defendant at the place where the accident occurred.

Moreover, we are of the opinion that no "crossing or intersection of ways," within the meaning of the law, exists at Market and Valencia streets, as stated in the instruction given, and which would be necessary to make the 10-mile speed limit apply.

In order to understand the relation of the two streets above mentioned, it is necessary to examine a map of that district, which map is a part of the record. From this it will be seen that the line of Valencia street never crosses Market street. The territory of Valencia street merely comes up to and meets Market street. According to the definitions given in Webster's Dictionary, the words "intersect" and "cross" mean practically the same thing, and the situation here does not fall within any of the definitions. The Supreme Court of Connecticut, in discussing a very similar condition in the case of Atwood v. Conn. Co., 82 Conn. 539, 74 Atl. 899, cited by appellant, said:

"Ordinarily we do not speak of a street which starts from or terminates in another as intersecting it. It is only when it crosses or cuts through the other that it is said to intersect it."

In that case the court, in discussing the matter, said that while some reason might exist for the application of an ordinance regulating speed at crossing and intersecting streets, to a place where one street terminates at another, yet the necessity for it is much less in such a case than it is where one street actually crosses the other. In the latter case there is likely to be more traffic in the intersecting street, and the through traffic would be directly across the railroad tracks, and also travel turning from one street into another is apt to be at less speed and to be accompanied with more caution than direct travel across an intersecting street.

[2] The words "regular crossing for pedestrians," used in the instruction, do not occur in the state law, and there is nothing therein which limits the speed to 10 miles an hour at such a place. The crossing referred to in the state law is a "crossing of ways" or streets. A pedestrian crossing may or may not be at the same place, but the insertion of such words in the instruction, we believe, was misleading to the jury.

If it be true that the place where the accident happened did not come under the prohibition of speed in excess of 10 miles an hour, then the defendant was entitled under the law to maintain a speed of 15 miles an hour. The testimony is all to the effect that he was going at about 15 miles an hour. It would have been necessary for the jury to have found that he was exceeding that speed in order to raise a prima facie case of negligence. The instruction complained of was not warranted by the evidence or the law, and under the particular circumstances of the case it was misleading to the jury, and to that extent was prejudicial to the defendant.

Although this conclusion is decisive of this appeal, yet in view of the fact that the case must be retried, it seems desirable for us to consider another point raised by defendant, which may become material upon the retrial.

The trial court instructed the jury in terms of the general laws of the state of California regulating the speed of motor vehicles, etc. The defendant insists that the regulation of the speed of motor vehicles, being a regulation of the use of streets, is clearly a "municipal matter" and the control of the same is given to the city of San Francisco under section 6 of article 11 of our state Constitution, and by the terms of the city charter of San Francisco, and that the state law is therefore inoperative, and instructions in terms of the state law are erroneous.

It has been held in the case of Loop Lumber Co. v. Van Loben Sels, 173 Cal. 228, 159 Pac. 600, that, in so far as a freeholders' charter makes provision relative to any municipal affair, it is the supreme law paramount to any law enacted by the state Legislature, and general laws enacted by the Legislature in regard thereto have no application. The court decided in that case that a state law requiring the furnishing of a bond by a contractor for the protection of materialmen, etc., before such contractor shall enter upon the performance of any work upon buildings, etc., for the state or any county, city, town, or district therein, is ineffectual for any purpose whatsoever where the city of San Francisco has provided in its charter all the conditions to be imposed upon a contractor prerequisite to doing such work, which conditions do not include the giving of such a bond, and that a bond given to comply with such a statute is given without consideration.

But this case proceeds upon the theory that such a provision in the state law would be in conflict with the city law, and the state law must therefore give way to the city ordinance.

To the same effect is the case of City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., 173 Cal. 323, 159 Pac. 1169, in which it is said:

"These provisions (in the city charter of Los Angeles) relate to municipal affairs, and, as we have said, they are paramount to general laws and supersede such laws where inconsistent therewith."

[3] The law, then, seems to be that where there is a conflict between the state law and the law of a city holding a freeholders' charter, in regard to a municipal matter, the city ordinance will prevail. While there is a statement in Re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 Pac. 517, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75, indicating that, where a conflict exists between the charter and the state law, the state law will prevail, the decision of this question was not necessary to the determination of the case, because the court decided in that case that the laws under consideration were not in conflict, and therefore such statement was mere obiter dicta, and the case cannot be considered as in conflict with the other two cases above mentioned. The authorities, such as In re Smith, 26 Cal. App. 122, 146 Pac. 82, holding that in case of conflict the state law will prevail, will be found upon examination to deal with the laws of cities which have not freeholders' charters.

[4, 5] Under the principle enunciated in the cases of Loop Lumber Co. v. Van Loben Sels and City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., supra, the question presented in the case at bar would be whether or not the two laws were in conflict. But an examination of the question of whether or not the state Motor Vehicle Law is in conflict with the city ordinance regulating the speed of motor vehicles could not be made by the trial court for the reason that, so far as the record discloses, there was no city ordinance before the court. The court cannot take judicial notice of a city ordinance, and, if defendant wished to negative the effect of the state law, he should have made the city ordinance a part of the record so that the court could determine whether or not the two were in conflict. In the absence of any city ordinance in the record, the court cannot proceed upon the theory that a conflict exists between the city and the state laws, and therefore, for the purposes of this case, the state law must necessarily be operative. For it has been held that, where no conflict exists, both laws will stand (Ex parte Snowden, 12 Cal. App. 521, 107 Pac. 724), and, of course, either would stand alone in the absence of the other.

The judgment is reversed.

PER CURIAM. [6] The petition for a rehearing is denied; but in doing so it should be noted that, while ordinarily the definition of an intersecting street or highway may be that declared in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, nevertheless the statutory definition of an "intersecting highway" (section 1, subd. 14, Act 2331b, General Laws Supp. 1917) is the only one which can be properly applied to the law and the facts of the case.

BASSOT et al. v. UNITED RAILROADS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

(Civ. 2362.)

1. PARTIES ⟸6(2)—"REAL PARTY IN INTEREST"—EMPLOYÉ.

Although adjustment and payment of compensation operated, in view of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31, to transfer legal title to employé's claim for damages against defendant, alleged to have caused the injury to the employer, or his surety, the employé still retained an equitable interest, and was a real party in interest, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 378; section 369 being permissive only.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Real Party in Interest.]

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1036(5)—DISMISSAL AS TO PARTIES—HARMLESS ERROR.

After adjustment and payment of compensation employé's interest in action by him and compensation insurer against defendant alleged to have negligently caused injuries was equitable only, in view of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31, and error in dismissing employé as a party was harmless, where jury found that defendant was without fault, and case was conducted by counsel which employé had selected to represent him.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Marcel Bassot and another against the United Railroads of San Francisco. From judgment of nonsuit entered against him, plaintiff named appeals. Affirmed.

L. M. Hoefler and George F. Snyder, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wm. M. Cannon and Wm. M. Abbott, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LENNON, P. J. This is an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff Bassot in a collision with the street car of defendant. At the time of the accident, Bassot was an employé of a corporation that carried compensation insurance with plaintiff insurance company. The compensation due Bassot having been adjusted and paid, this action was commenced in the name of Bassot and the company. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the ground of misjoinder of parties plaintiff was overruled, and, after issue joined, the cause proceeded to trial. At the close of the evidence, defendant made a motion for nonsuit as to both plaintiffs, which was granted as to Bassot on the ground that he was improperly joined as a party plaintiff, and denied as to the insurance company. The trial proceeded as between the company and defendant, and resulted in a verdict for defendant. This is an appeal by Bassot from a judgment of nonsuit entered against him. The record in the case consists simply of the judgment roll and the proceedings on the motion for nonsuit.

[1] Section 31 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1913, p. 295) provides that the making of a lawful claim for compensation "shall operate as an assignment" of any right to recover damages which the injured employé may have against any other person for the injury, and the employer or his surety "shall be subrogated to any such right." The section also provides that "any amount collected by the employer * * * in excess of the amount paid by the employer, or for which he is liable, shall be held by him for the benefit of the injured employé." Respondent is correct in its contention that this section operates to transfer the legal title to the claim for damages to the employer or his surety, but it is also true that the employé still retains an equitable interest therein as to any surplus that may be recovered over the amount paid him by the employer, and he is therefore a real party in interest in the litigation. Although section 369 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "a trustee of an express trust * * * may sue without joining * * * the person for whose benefit the action is prosecuted," section 378 of that Code provides that "all persons having an interest in the subject of the action, and in obtaining the relief demanded, may be joined as plaintiffs, except when otherwise provided in this title." There is ample authority in this state to the effect that the provisions of section 369 are permissive only, and that the beneficiary of the trust may properly be joined as a party plaintiff with the trustee by virtue of section 378. Daley v. Cunningham, 60 Cal. 530; Cerf v. Ashley, 68 Cal. 419, 9 Pac. 658. It therefore follows that, while Bassot was not a necessary party to the suit, he was at all events a proper party thereto, and that the lower court was in error in granting the motion for a nonsuit and dismissing the action as to him.

[2] We are of the opinion, however, that the judgment should be affirmed because it affirmatively appears from the record that the error of the trial court was harmless. Although Bassot was dismissed from the action, he remained represented in court by the agent designated by the statute to represent him as plaintiff. The case was conducted to its conclusion by the attorney whom Bassot had selected to represent him. The verdict of the jury, amounting as it does to a finding that the defendant was without fault in the accident out of which the action arose, was a negation of the existence of any right whatsoever in Bassot, as Bassot's interest in the case was of necessity predicated upon a showing of negligence upon the part of the defendant and a recovery in excess of the sum that Bassot had already received as compensation.

Judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. HARTWELL. (Cr. 614.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 2, 1918. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 30, 1919.)

1. JURY ⟸63—CHALLENGE TO ENTIRE PANEL—LIST DRAWN BY COUNTY SUPERVISORS.

Defendant cannot successfully contend that list from which jury panel was drawn was not list of names made up by county supervisors, as law requires, where changes in list were made merely in process of compiling, and list in fact adopted by supervisors was that remaining after all changes.

2. JURY ⟸120 — CHALLENGE TO ENTIRE PANEL—BURDEN OF PROOF—SUPPORT.

The burden of proof was upon defendant to present facts sufficient to support his challenge to the entire panel of the jury.

3. JURY ⟸63 — CERTIFICATION OF JURY LIST PENDING CHALLENGE.

Trial judge properly permitted clerk to attach certificate to jury list drawn by county supervisors, from which certain names were stricken by clerk, while defendant's challenge to whole panel because list from which it was drawn was not list made up by supervisors was pending.

4. JURY ⟸120 — CHALLENGE TO WHOLE PANEL—LACK OF SUPPORT IN EVIDENCE.

Court properly overruled defendant's challenge to whole panel of jury on ground population of county was in excess of 100,000, so that jury list should have been made up by judges of superior court, instead of supervisors, where only evidence offered in support of claim was incompetent.

5. JURY ⟸120—MAKING UP JURY LIST—SUPERIOR COURT OR COUNTY SUPERVISORS—STATUTES.

Court cannot be required, on trial of challenge to whole panel of jurors, to take evidence to ascertain exact population of county on given date, to determine whether jury list should have been made up by judges of superior court instead of by county supervisors, population referred to under Code Civ. Proc. § 204, being that as ascertained by Legislature and set forth in Pol. Code, § 4005c.

6. Jury ⟸63 — Making up Jury List — Placing Names by Request—Act of Supervisors.

Because county supervisors placed on jury list names of persons who requested they be so placed, making up of list did not cease to be act of supervisors.

7. Jury ⟸97(4) — Challenge for Bias — Discretion of Court.

Trial judge, in prosecution for crime, did not abuse discretion in denying defendant's challenge to a juror, who, on his voir dire, answered certain questions so as to indicate bias, but whose answers to others were such as to disprove bias.

8. Indictment and Information ⟸110 (48)—Statutory Language.

Information which charged violation of Pen. Code, § 288, denouncing lewd conduct with a child, in the language of the statute, and further alleged the facts constituting the offense in that language, was not demurrable.

9. Infants ⟸20 — Conviction of Lewd Conduct with Child — Sufficiency of Evidence.

Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction for violation of Pen. Code, § 288, denouncing lewd conduct with a child, though testimony of prosecuting witness was somewhat impeached by showing she had made contradictory statements on preliminary examination.

10. Criminal Law ⟸442—Evidence—Admission—Letter.

In prosecution for lewd conduct with a child, letter purporting to have been written by defendant to parents of prosecuting witness, whose contents, in connection with circumstances of writing and delivery, were construable as admission of guilt, held admissible, despite absence of proof that body of letter was in defendant's handwriting, where it was proved that the signature was defendant's, and that he delivered letter to his wife to be given to the addressee.

11. Criminal Law ⟸406(6) — Evidence — Conversation Amounting to Admission.

In prosecution for lewd conduct with a child, testimony of witness as to conversation between her and defendant and defendant's wife, on afternoon of day offense was alleged to have been committed, held admissible, conversation and circumstances amounting to tacit admission by defendant of facts tending to connect him with the crime charged.

12. Criminal Law ⟸829(1) — Instruction—Repetition.

Defendant's requested instruction, fully covered by another instruction given, was properly refused.

13. Criminal Law ⟸809 — Instruction —Misleading Character.

Defendant's requested instruction, which, even if not technically erroneous, was calculated to mislead the jury, was properly refused.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

F. S. Hartwell was convicted of a violation of Pen. Code, § 288, in having been guilty of lewd conduct with a child, and from the judgment and order denying motion for new trial he appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

L. E. Dadmun, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

MYERS, Judge pro tem. [1-3] Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction under section 288 of the Penal Code, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. His first point is that the court erred in denying his challenge to the entire panel of the jury. In support of this challenge he called as a witness the county clerk, who produced and identified the list of jurors selected by the county supervisors to serve for the current year 1918. This consisted of a typewritten list of several hundred names and addresses, and bore no certificate. It appeared upon inspection thereof that some of the names, 21 in number, had been stricken off by drawing a line through them, and that changes had been made in various others of the names. These changes, for the most part, were apparently mere corrections of spelling, but in a few instances they were more material, such as the substitution of one initial for another, and in two or three instances the change of a first name. The clerk testified that all of these changes were made by him, or under his supervision, when the list was submitted to him by the board of supervisors; that they were made by him without any request or direction therefor; that he compared the names with the register of voters; and that when a name on the list did not appear on the register he struck it off the list. No explanation was made of the changes of names not stricken off. Appellant argues from this testimony that the list from which the jury panel was drawn was not the list of names made up by the supervisors, as the law requires, and that therefore his challenge should have been allowed. But the evidence falls short of establishing such a state of facts. It does not appear from the evidence when the changes in question were made with reference to the time when the list was adopted by the board of supervisors as a jury list. Of course, if the changes were made merely as a part of the process of compiling a list, and if the list which was in fact adopted by the supervisors was the list remaining after all the changes had been made, then defendant's objection has no force. Five hundred and seventy-nine names remained on the list after the changes were made. As the order of court designating the number of jurors that would be required for that year is not in evidence, we must assume that 579 was the required number. The burden of proof was upon the defendant to present facts sufficient to support his challenge, and the trial court correctly decided that he had failed to sustain this burden. The judge of the trial court permitted the clerk to attach his certificate to the jury list in question while the challenge was pending. There was no error in this action. People v. Young, 108 Cal. 8, 12, 41 Pac. 281.

[4, 5] Defendant offered, in further support of his challenge, to prove that the population of San Diego county on the 1st day of January, 1918, was in excess of 100,000, and that, therefore, the jury list should have been made up by the judges of the superior court, instead of by the supervisors, to which offer the court sustained an objection. It might suffice to say that this ruling was not error, because no competent evidence was offered by defendant in support of his claim. He proposed to prove the alleged facts by showing the total number of registered voters and multiplying that by 2.6, which he claimed was the ratio established by the Governor and Secretary of state in estimating population; also by the estimates of witnesses based upon the numbers of persons using water, gas, and electricity within the county, and multiplying that by a certain index figure; also by witnesses who would testify that it was common knowledge throughout the county that the population was then in excess of 100,000; and also by an estimate contained in a pamphlet issued and authorized to be published by the board of supervisors in conjunction with the Chamber of Commerce. But aside from considerations of the incompetency of such opinion evidence, it is manifest that a court cannot be required, on the trial of a challenge to a panel of jurors, to take evidence for the purpose of ascertaining and determining the exact population of the county on a given date. If this could be done, it might well happen that in counties whose population is somewhat near the 100,000 mark a considerable portion of the time of courts and juries might be occupied in this way. It is apparent, of course, that the determination and finding of this fact in any one case would not be conclusive or even prima facie evidence in any other case. We think that the population referred to in section 204, Code of Civil Procedure, is the population as ascertained and determined by the Legislature and set forth in section 4005c, Political Code.

[6] Defendant also offered to show, in support of his challenge, that some of the names on this list were placed there by the supervisors at the request of the persons themselves, to which offer an objection was sustained. Appellant argues that if any of the names were placed there at the request of the persons named, it follows that the making of the list was not the act of the supervisors, but must be regarded as the act of those persons. The objection was properly sustained. The good policy of placing on a jury list the names of persons who volunteer their services may well be questioned, but, if that is done, it no more follows that the doing of it is not the act of the supervisors than it follows that an order of court is not the act of the court because made at the request of a litigant.

[7] It is further urged that defendant's challenge to the individual juror Long should have been sustained. This juror upon his voir dire made answer to certain questions in such a manner as to indicate bias on his part against the defendant, but his answers to other questions were such as to rebut this inference. We cannot say that the trial judge abused his discretion in denying the challenge. The question of bias of a juror is a question of fact, or of mixed law and fact, to be determined in the first instance by the trial court. Such determination is to be predicated, not upon the answer to any single question, but upon all of the answers considered together. "This court should interfere with the determination of that question only when the evidence adduced on the voir dire is of such a character that it can be said from it, as a matter of law, that the juror is so prejudiced or biased in the case that he will not be a fair juror." Graybill v. De Young, 146 Cal. 421, 423, 80 Pac. 618, 619; Baker v. Borello, 136 Cal. 160, 68 Pac. 591.

[8] Appellant contends that the court erred in overruling the demurrer to the information. There is no merit in this contention. The information charged the offense in the language of the statute, and further alleged the facts constituting it in apt language, from which it clearly appears that the offense intended to be charged is the one denounced by Penal Code, § 288.

[9] There is nothing in appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. This contention is based upon the circumstance that the testimony of the prosecuting witness was in some measure impeached by showing that she had made contradictory statements at the preliminary examination. This, of course, went to the weight of her testimony, but still left it a question for the jury to pass upon. In this case there was ample corroboration of her testimony as given at the trial.

[10] Appellant urges that the court erred in admitting in evidence a letter purporting to have been written by the defendant to the parents of the prosecuting witness. Apparently this contention is predicated in the main upon the absence of proof that the body of the letter was in the handwriting of the defendant. The signature thereto was proven to be defendant's signature, and its delivery by the defendant to his wife with the request that she deliver it to the persons to whom it was addressed and the reading of it by her to those persons were all proven. The contents of the letter were such as, when considered in connection with the circumstances of its writing and delivery, were fairly inferable as amounting to an admission of guilt by the defendant, and it was therefore entitled to go to the jury.

[11] Appellant also contends that the court erred in admitting in evidence the testimony of Mrs. Orth as to a conversation had between her and the defendant and defendant's wife on the afternoon of the day the offense is alleged to have been committed. According to her testimony, in this conversation defendant's wife accused him of misconduct with Ruth Moran (the prosecuting witness), and said to him that he "had taken liberties with this child, Ruth Moran, in the garage" (that being the place of the alleged commission of the offense here charged), and that he replied, in substance, "that Ruth Moran was an unusually cute child * * * and he also said that he guessed it was just an infatuation. * * * He also said that lots of men had done worse things than that." This conversation, under the circumstances as detailed by the witness, amounted to a tacit admission on the part of defendant of facts which had a tendency to directly connect him with the crime here charged. In this respect it differed materially from the conversation held by this court to be inadmissible in the case of People v. Hartwell, 175 Pac. 21. We think that the ruling of the trial court in this case was correct.

[12, 13] Complaint is made of the refusal of the court to give three certain instructions requested by the defendant. The points contained in his requested instructions, numbered 9 and 13, respectively, were fully covered in other instructions which were given by the court. His requested instruction numbered 14 was properly refused for the reason that it was calculated to confuse and mislead the jury, even if it was not technically erroneous.

The points made in support of the motion for a new trial are those which we have here considered.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

179 Cal. 467

CITY OF SANTA MONICA et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. CITY OF PASADENA et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (L. A. Nos. 5974, 5975.) (Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1918.) In Bank. Petitions by the City of Santa Monica, the City of Venice, the City of Pasadena, the City of South Pasadena, and the City of Alhambra, all municipal corporations, to review certain orders of the Railroad Commission of the State of California, raising certain rates or charges for the transportation of passengers on the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Applications denied. Victor R. McLucas, of Los Angeles, for petitioner City of Santa Monica. Rush M. Blodget, of Los Angeles, for petitioner City of Venice. John Munger, of Pasadena, and William Hazlett, of Los Angeles, for petitioner City of Pasadena. Alfred Barstow, of Los Angeles, for petitioner City of Alhambra.

PER CURIAM. By these proceedings it is sought to review certain orders of the Railroad Commission raising certain rates or charges for the transportation of passengers by the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Section 20 of article 12 of the Constitution provides that in such matters "the decision of the said commission * * * shall not be subject to review by any court except upon the question whether such decision of the commission will result in the confiscation of property." We are satisfied that the petitions filed herein do not allege facts showing any "confiscation of property" within the meaning of this constitutional provision. The applications are denied.

COCHRAN v. SUPERIOR COURT et al. (S. F. 8891.) (Supreme Court of California. Sept. 30, 1918.) In Bank. Petition by Mary Gertrude Cochran for writ of mandate against the Superior Court and others. Petition denied. R. W. Barrett, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. We are of the opinion that the application for a writ of mandate should be denied. Our action is not to be taken, however, as indicating an opinion that the provisions of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Relief Act of March 8, 1918, providing for a stay of proceedings prior to judgment, are applicable to actions commenced prior to the passage of the act. We are not prepared to hold that the superior court was guilty of any abuse of discretion in refusing to proceed with the trial of the action at this time, in view of the showing made as to the necessary absence of the defendant, entirely independent of the provisions of the act referred to. In the event of such a change in the existing conditions as would make further refusal to proceed with the trial an abuse of discretion, another application may be made to the superior court. The application for a writ of mandate is denied.

WILLIAMS v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA, Respondent. (Sac. No. 2911.) (Supreme Court of California. Jan. 2, 1919.) In Bank. Application by Ruth Williams for a writ of mandate to be directed against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California. Application denied. Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco, for petitioner. Chris. M. Bradley, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The respondent commission is acting entirely within its jurisdiction in hearing and determining the application pending before it, and we have no authority to supervise its conduct of the proceeding in the manner suggested. The application is denied.

PEOPLE v. FRYER. (Cr. 452.) (District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 7, 1918.) Appeal from Superior Court, Trinity County; James W. Bartlett, Judge. Loren A. Fryer was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed. See, also, 175 Cal. 785, 167 Pac. 382. J. W. Threshie, of Redding, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PER CURIAM. This case was on the calendar for September 10 for oral argument, but no appearance was made for appellant. An order was made, however, allowing him 15 days in which to file a brief and the Attorney General notified appellant's counsel to that effect. No brief has been filed and no application for extension of time has been made. We are justified in concluding, therefore, that the learned counsel for appellant can find no reasonable ground for urging a reversal of the judgment. Notwithstanding this virtual abandonment of the appeal, we have examined the record and find that the evidence is overwhelming and conclusive that the defendant committed a deliberate, cold-blooded murder, and that he was justly convicted of the offense. In fact, he admitted the crime in all its gruesome details, and the only defense was of a technical character. The interests of justice demand the affirmance of the judgment of conviction; and it is so ordered.
